It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

The History of the Arabs, to the taking of Baghdad by the Tartars.

SECT. IV.

HE Arabs, as well as the foreigners at that time in Ali is une the city of Medina, being informed of Othman's animoully death, were divided in their fentiments about a suc-elected cessor. Telba and Zobeir having assembled the An-Khalis. Sars and Mobajerin, declared for Ali, tho' in their hearts they hated him; as did also Ayesha, the youngest and best-beloved wise of Mobammed. But the Arabs being, for the most part, inclined to favour him, not only on account of the near relation he bore to the prophet, but likewise of the immediate alliance he had contracted with Mobammed's family, by mar-Mod. rying his daughter Fâtema, they thought proper to dissemble their aversion to him, and even the very day on which Othmân was murdered, to take the oath of allegiance to him. This, however, they resolved to break as soon as a proper opportunity of doing it offered. The Basrans, in the mean time, shewed a disposition to favour Telba; tho' Zobeir had likewise a considerable party amongst them. The Casans and Egyptians had the highest regard for Ali, as well as the Arabs; fo that his interest was too powerful to admit of any competitor. However, Zobeir's friends declared themselves so warmly for him, or at least for any other person whose interest he should support, that they threatened him with death, if he did not either take the government upon himself, or see it immediately conferred upon some other person. The troops likewise that had arrived from Mesopotamia, Persia, and the different parts of Arabia, as well as those from Bafra and Egypt, in order to depose Othman, resolved to cut off all the candidates for the Khalifat, if one of them was not without delay advanced to that dignity. The eyes, therefore, of all were fixed upon Ali at this critical juncture; and the principal men pressed him with unusual vehemence to accept of the honour designed him, as being the best qualified for it, both by his personal accomplishments and the affinity he bore to the prophet. To this he discovered for some time an invincible reluctance, faying, " be had much rather ferve another in the capacity of Wazir, or Visir, than take upon the himself the government." The troops being apprized of this, and finding that the family of Ommiyah had withdrawn themselves, they assembled in a tumultuous manner, and infisted upon the inhabitants of Medina's bringing the controversy to a decision; declaring, that they would allow them but one day to consider of it; and that if, in that time, a Khalif was not elected, they would put Telha, Zobeir, Ali, and several others, to the sword. This struck the citizens of Medina with fuch terror, that they again pressed Ali in the most suppliant manner to suffer himself to be inaugurated; and, upon his again declining this, they adjured him by God to confider the lamentable condition in which they were, the miferable state of their religion, and the distraction of the whole nation. Overcome at last with such pathetical exclamations, he answered, " If I should comply with your request, I will always act according to the best of my knowlege; and if ex you will excuse me, I shall ever be one of the most sub-" missive and obedient of all the Moslems to whomsoever 46 you shall be pleased to fet over me." Then addressing himself to Telha and Zobeir, who intreated him in the most moving terms to accept of the Khalifat, he said, " If you intend

"to recognize my authority, as the successor of Mobammed, "swear to be faithful to me; otherwise permit me to take "the oath of allegiance to one of you." The latter of which proposals they refused, and consequently accepted of the former; upon which, Ali was immediately proclaimed Khalif. He was the son of Abu Tâleb, the son of Aba'almotalleb, the son of Hâshem; his mother, according to Al Makîn, being Fâtema, the daughter of Asal, the son of Hâshem. He was elected, by the unanimous suffrages of the Mosslems, emperor of the faithful, to use the Arab stile, the same day that Othmân was slain. It seems to be intimated by Al Makîn, that Ali, immediately after his election, constituted Kais Ebn Sa'îd, governor, or presect, of Egypt 2.

ALI being thus advanced to the Khalifat without opposi-And inantion, though many were secretly disgusted at his election, re-gurated in solved to be inaugurated publicly in the mosque at Medina, the mosque that all parties might be satisfied, and have no just cause of at Mecomplaint. This he judged a necessary precaution, as Ayesha, dina. Telba, Zobeir, and the house of Ommiyab, of which Moawiyab, the governing prefect of Syria, was chief, had conceived so strong a prejudice against him; which, he was senfible, would prompt them to give him all the disturbance in their power. He, therefore, went to the mosque in a thin cotton gown, tied about him with a girdle, with a coarse turbant upon his head, carrying his slippers in one hand, and in the other a bow, which he made use of as a walking-staff. Upon his arrival there, Telha and Zobeir were fent for, who instantly came, and gave him their hands, as a mark or token of their approbation of what had been done. After which, with great feeming alacrity, they took the oath of allegiance to him; and many of the principal persons in Medina sollowed their example. When Telha offered Ali his hand, it was observed by Habib Ebn Dhowaib, that the fingers were contracted by a wound he had formerly received; which he confidered as ominous, faying, "A lame hand feems to indicate, that the " business done by it will be performed in a lame manner; " how proper, therefore, would it be to have it undone!" Which kind of prophecy was afterwards fulfilled, as in the sequel of the history of Ali will more fully appear. We must not forget to observe, that the house of Ommiyah, the traitor Merwan Ebn Al Hakem, Sa'id Ebn Al As, and Walid Ebn

AFTER the recognition of his authority, Ali resolved to dismis all those governors of provinces, who had been put dismiss the into their posts by his predecessor Othman; but Al Mogheirah governors Ebn Shaaba, not Ebn Said, as he is called by D'Herbelot, en= deavoured to divert him from this resolution, at least till he winces ap- had more firmly established himself in the government. This pointed by advice not proving agreeable to Ali, Al Mogheirah visited him the next day, and told him, that he had altered his opinion, and found it highly expedient to execute the project he had formed. In the midst of this conference, Abd'allah Ebn Abbâs, who was just returned from Mecca, came in; and having been informed of the subject they were upon, told the Kha-Lif, that " Al Mogheirah's first advice was good, but the last "treachery. For," faid he, " all Syria will immediately declare for Moawiyah, upon the first news of his dismission; and as no confidence can be reposed either in Telha or Zo-66 beir, there is great reason to believe, that, upon the erup-"tion of a flame in Syria, they will both appear in arms against you. Wherefore," continued he, "permit Moawiyah to remain in the post he at present enjoys, till his fubmission; after which, I will undertake to pull him out of his house by the ears, whenever you desire it." But Ali fwore, that " Meawiyah's portion should be the sword." Which induced the other to tell him, that "he was a man, "indeed, of admirable courage, but not of equal conduct." After the conclusion of this conference, Al Mogheirah retired to Mecca; and the Khal f persisted in his former resolution. agreement with Abd'allah's observation, relating to the courage of Ali, we are told by some of the eastern writers, that this Khalif, for his unparalleled bravery, was furnamed by the Arabs the lion of God, always victorious c.

the accused Ali, in order to render him odious to the house of Ommiyah, to which Othman belonged, of the perpetration of that horrid fact; when there was in reality not the least ground or pretext for such an accusation. Some of the Moslems, therefore, who knew how active she had been in that bloody affair, reprehended her for endeavouring to throw the odium of so black a crime upon an innocent person; since he could not but be conscious, of her own guilt, as having been one of the first who suggested, and even strongly recommended, the late Khalif's affassination to his rebellious subjects. But in answer to what was objected to her conduct on this occasion, she replied, that Othman's infidelity obliged her at first to declare against him; but that, on his repentance and reconversion, she became reconciled to him, and would have faved him, had it been in her power. At the time of Ali's inauguration, as well as when the disaffected Arabs murdered Othmân, she was at Mecca, and enjoyed a very considerable share of influence and authority there. Not content with this, she endeavoured to animate all orders and degrees of men against the new Khalif; and was continually employed in forming schemes to embarrass the administration. Nor did she want persons of note to forward and promote all her wicked machinations. For, in the beginning of the 36th year of the Hejra, Telha Ebn Obeid'allah and Zobeir Ebn Al Awam, with others of their party, represented to Ali, that the affaffins who had embrued their hands in the blood of Othmân, ought to be brought to condign punishment; offering him, at the same time, their assistance for that purpose. This they did, purely to fow amongst the people the seeds of fedition, and occasion disturbances that might finally weaken Ali's party, and terminate in his destruction. The Khalif perceiving their intention, represented to them the impossibility of carrying their design at present into execution, by reason of the civil diffensions which so distracted the Arab nation. Upon which, they defisted from all farther follicitations on that head. However, as Ali found, by this effort of Telha and Zobeir, supported by Ayesha, to embroil his affairs, that he had very powerful enemies to contend with, he took all possible opportunities of careffing the Koreish, hoping by this means to conciliate to him the affections of that powerful tribe. Which step was, indeed, very expedient; as the departure of the Ommiyan family had irritated a confiderable part of his subjects, and occasioned in some provinces of the empire great murmurings and commotions. In the mean time, Telha and Zobeir, notwithstanding the repulse they had lately met with, defired Ali to confer upon one of them the government of Cûfa, and upon the other that of Basra; pretending, ·A 3

that they should thereby be enabled to extinguish with the greater ease any rebellion that might happen in the neighbourhood of either of those cities. But the Khalif, by this request, easily penetrated their designs, and excused himself from complying with it, by telling them, that as his government was not yet sufficiently established, he should stand in need of persons of their great capacity, so much superior to that of any of his other ministers, to consult with on such emergencies as might happen in an unsettled state. This anfwer nettled them to a great degree; but they were obliged to appear fatisfied with it. However, they resolved to attempt undermining that government they could not affail by open force; and, therefore, knowing that Ayesba was gone on pilgrimage to Mecca, they begged leave of the Khalif to go likewise on the same occasion thither. This they hoped would give them an opportunity of caballing with Ayesha, and of executing, in conjunction with her, the pernicious scheme they had formed. Ali was sufficiently aware of this, tho' he permitted them to go to Mecca, for the reason they affigned. However, he was determined to have a strict eye upon them, and narrowly to watch all their proceedings in that place 4.

A strong party formed against Ali.

THINGS being in this fituation, a civil war, or rather an open rebellion, foon seemed absolutely inevitable. Every step that was taken on both fides, that is, by the Motazalites, or Separatists, for so those who adhered to the house of Ommiyah were called, and the Khalif, after this, manifest tended to a rupture. The Motazalites in a little time had two confiderable armies on foot, ready to enter upon action; one under the command of Moawiyah in Syria, and another headed by Ayesha, Telha, and Zobeir, at Mecca, that began to be in mo-The Khalif, contrary to the falutary advice given him by Abd'allah Ebn Abbas, resolved to remove all the governors of provinces who had their posts affigned them by Othman, and to appoint others in their room, that he could intirely depend upon. In pursuance of which resolution, he dispatched Sahel Ehn Hanif, the Ansar, to Syria; Kais Ehn Sa'id to Egypt; Othman Ebn Hanif to Basra; Ammarah Ebn Sahal to Cufa; and Abd'allah Ebn Abbas to Yaman. Sahel being arrived at Tablic, on the confines of Syria, met a party of horse that had been sent thither by Moawiyab, whose commander obliged him to return home. A great number of the Egyptians refused to receive Kais, and to submit to Ali's government, till the murderers of Othman had been brought to justice. Othman Ehn Hanif found the people divided at Basra:

bowever, with some difficulty, he took possession of his post; but the Casas being determined not to acknowledge the new Kbulis, Ammarah was obliged to return to Ali, with the news of their resolution. Abd'allah Ebn Abbas was received in Yaman; but, before his arrival, Yali, who had received his commission from Othman, plundered the treasury, made the best of his way to Mecca, and deposited the money in the hands of Ayesha, Telha, and Zobeir. In the mean time, Ali made the necessary dispositions for his desence, and was joined by the Ansars, who came over to him almost unanimously in abody.

MOAWIYAH having driven Sahel Ebn Hanîf out of Syria, Moawiaffembled a body of troops on the frontiers, as well as a nu-yah demerous army, to take vengeance of the murderers of Othman, clares He did his utmost to inspire the people under his government agains with an abhorrence of Ali, whom he represented, on all oc-bim. calions, as the principal person concerned in the assailination of his predeceffor. He exposed on the pulpit the bloody shirt in which Othman was murdered, with his wife's fingers, that were cut off when that tragedy was acted, fixed upon it. to public view. This fo incenfed the Syrian forces, that they vowed to revenge the violent death of Othman; and were undoubtedly fincere in their resolution. But as for Ayelba and her affociates, they were not at all displeased with the murder of Othman, having in reality been deeply concerned in that murder; but only exclaimed against that barbarous action, in order to be furnished with a pretext to take up arms, and to be supported by the house of Ommiyah in their attempts against the present Khalif. This was very well known to Ali, though Moawiyah seems to have been a stranger to it. Sahel arrived at Medina just before the departure of Telba and Zobeir for Mecca; and, by the news he brought from Syria, they plainly perceived that a rupture with Moawiyah was at hand. However, the Khalif, probably with a view of concealing from them his true intentions, declared his resolution to make use of all possible expedients to prevent at least the speedy commencement of hostilities. He, therefore, dispatched an express to Moawiyah in Syria, and another to Abu Mûsa at Cûsa, with a letter to each of those commanders, in order to dispose them to an accom-With regard to the latter, the overtures made him on this occasion were so advantageous, that he seems to have immediately closed with them. For, in answer to Ali's letter, he assured him, that all the Cufans were intirely at his service; and moreover sent him a list of those who came in first of their own accord, as well as of those who afterwards followed their example. It can, therefore, scarce be doubted but Ali, at least, confirmed Abu Músa in his government of Cufa, if he did not make some farther concessions to that general. As for Moawiyah, he did not so much as vouchsafe the Khalif an answer, till a considerable time after his letter came to hand. Then he fent one by a courier, dispatched for that purpose to Medina, sealed up, with the following direction: From Moawiyah to Ali. This the Khalif opened, and found it to be a mere blank, not fo much as a fingle word being visible in it. Turning then to Mgawiyah's courier, he asked him, "What news was stirring in Syria?" To which the messenger replied, "There are no less than 66 60,000 men in arms under Othman's shirt, which is erected as a standard upon the pulpit at Damascus." Ali then asked, "Whether or no they required the blood of Othman " at his hands?" At the same time he called God to witness that he was innocent of it, and implored the divine asfistance. As he could view Moawiyah's pretended letter in no other light than that of a token of the utmost defiance and contempt, and the troops affembled under Othman's shirt were destined to act against him, he told Ziyad, who sat by him, that a war in Syria was inevitable; which Ziyad soon communicated to the people. The Khalif then wrote circular letters to the different provinces of Arabia, ordering them to fend him a proper number of recruits; and exhorted his fubjects to distinguish themselves in the war they were going to enter upon against the disturbers of the public repose. We are told by Dionysius Telmarensis, as well as Theophanes, that, about this time, Moawiyah was actually proclaimed Khalif, and inaugurated, by the western provinces, or, in other words, the Syrian and Egyptian troops f.

Not long after their arrival, Yali, Othman's governor of Yaman, likewise arrived at Mecca, and delivered the public money he had brought with him into the hands of Ayesha, under whose auspices Telha and Zobeir were just beginning to act. This communicating life and activity to their councils, they soon assemble as the property of the property of bled a body of troops, with which, in conjunction with the forces of the house of Ommiyab, they proposed to march against Ali, and his adherents. To this Ayesha, who put herself at the head of these troops, was excited by the account of the diffracted fituation of the Khalif's affairs at Medina, the had received from Telba and Zobeir. They were, however, at a loss for some time what place to chuse for the scene of their military operations. Ayesha was for striking at the root, and marching directly to Medina, where Ali's affairs were fo miserably embarrassed; others were of opinion, that it would be the most proper to join the Syrian army under the command of Moawiyab; and, lastly, others believed that the good of the common cause required them to move as soon as possible to Basra, where Telha had a considerable interest. After mature deliberation, the last expedient was pitched upon as the most conducive to the attainment of the salutary end they had in view; and therefore public notice was given to the inhabitants of Mecca, that " as the mother of the faithful, with " Telba and Zobeir, was upon the point of fetting out for " Bafra, all who were defirous of supporting the true reli-" gion, and revenging the death of Othman, might join the " forces that attended her in this expedition." This produced a very good effect. For, in a short time, the Mecof 600 men, and at least an equal number of camels; so that, at her departure out of Mecca, she found herself at the head of 1000 Arabs, all determined to fight for the faith, which they apprehended to be in danger by the advancement of Ali to the Khalifat, with the most undaunted bravery. . The camel on which Ayesha rode, that had been presented to her by Menbah, was called Al Ascar, that is, the army, and cost an hundred dinars. Mounted on this camel in a litter. she led her forces out of Mecca; which, by the accession of feveral other parties of Arabs on their march, before her arrival at Bafra, formed a body of about 3000 men. The first place to which she advanced was Jowab, a village of no great note, fituated upon a rivulet of the same name s.

UPON Ayesba's approach to Jowab, all the dogs in the place And armet her in a body, and barked at her with great fury. As rives she had a mind to rest, or rather halt, here, she made use of there, this accident as a pretext to take up her lodging in that village. She declared, that the prophet himself had once intimated to his wives on a journey, in her hearing, that it was advisable to lodge within the barking of the dogs of Jowab; and had even predicted the present uncommon event. citing, therefore, a passage of the Kordn, she struck her camel on the leg to make him kneel, in order to difmount; refolving to remain there at least the following night. But Telha and Zobeir knowing of what vast importance a forced march would be to them at this critical juncture, when they apprehended that Ali would foon come up with them, prevailed upon fifty persons to swear, that this village went by another name; though this did not enable them to divert Ayesha from her former resolution. At last, by order of those commanders, one of the foldiers cried out, "Make hafte, make hafte, Ali appears behind us." Upon which, they all refumed their march with the utmost celerity. This the Moslem writers own to have been a folemn public lie, and affert it to have been the first that was told between the commencement of Mamilim and the present defection of Ayesha. Be that as it will, the troops under her command being terrified by this rumor, propagated without any manner of foundation, made the best of their way to Basra, where they arrived much sooner than was expected. In the mean time, Moawiyah receiving advice of the vigorous resolution taken by Ayesha, and her march to Basra, was greatly animated by those prosperous This induced him to fend her a confiderable reinforcement, which joined the forces under her conduct before they reached Basra. By the accession of which, and other auxiliary troops, her army foon amounted to 30,000 men. It has been already observed, that Othman Ebn Hanif was Ali's governor of that place .

OTHMAN EBN HANIF having been informed of the enemy's approach, refolved to reconnoitre them with a party of the garison; tho' he was sensible that the troops he commanded in the town would make but a very feeble resistance. foon fell in with the vanguard of Ayesha's army, which he very briskly attacked; but was defeated after a sharp skirmish. wherein he had forty of his men killed upon the spot, and was himself taken prisoner. Ebn Al Athir relates, that Othman having received two messengers from Ayesha, with repeated follicitations to join her, in order to revenge the tragical exit of Othman Ebn Affan, dispatched a courier to the Khalif, to know what part he was to act on this occasion; and received for answer, that as Ayesha, Telha, and Zobeir, had, by that expedition, declared war against the whole Arab nation, notwithstanding the oath of allegiance to him the two latter had taken, he was to oppose them to the utmost of his power, if nothing less than the election of a new Khalif could induce them to lay down their arms. The same author also informs us, that, before the courier was dispatched to Ali, several bloody skirmishes happened between Ayesha's troops and Telba's party in the town on one fide, and Othman's forces, with the Bafrans, that adhered to Ali, on the other; in the principal of which Othman was worsted, and lost a considerable number of men. He likewise farther relates, that, during the absence of the fame courier, Telha and Zobeir found means, by favour of a tempestuous night, to post themselves with a pretty strong party in the mosque at Basra; from whence they sallied out upon Othman's men, cut about forty of them in pieces, took the commander himself prisoner, and sent him to Ayesta. But, with regard to the sate of that general, the oriental writers are not perfectly agreed. One of them fays, that Ayesba at first resolved to put him to death, but was afterwards prevailed upon by one of the women about her to convert that punishment into forty stripes, and imprisonment; whereas another affirms, that Ayesha commanded his beard and eye-brows to be tor out by the roots, and then, after a thort confinement, dismissed him. Be this as it will, Ayesha's troops, without much difficulty, and with a very small effusion. of blood, made themselves masters of Basra, and plundered Ali's treasury there. Upon Othman Ebn Hanif's arrival alterwards at Ali's camp, he met with a gracious reception from the Kbalif; who assured him, that he could not fail of receiving an ample reward from Gop for what he had suffered on account of his fidelity to the emperor of the faithful i.

As foon as Ali had received the bad news of the loss of Ali Bafra, he made a formal speech to the people, who had been marches assembled on this occasion, and desired their assistance. But, against notwithstanding he was extremely well beloved, was ac-ber, and knowleged by all to have been fairly elected, and was the incamps at best orator of the age, he could not, with all the eloquence Arrabhe was master of, for some time, prevail upon them to give a dah. decisive answer in his favour. Ziyâd Ebn Hantelab, perceiving this, stept to Ali of his own accord, and said, "Who- foever retreats, we will advance." Upon which, two Anssars, doctors of the law, stood up, and pronounced the sollowing decision: "The Imâm Othmân, master of the two testimo- testimonies, did not die by the master of the two testimo- hies;" that is, in other words, "Ali is not guilty of the death of Othmân." Where, by the two testimonies, we are to understand the two articles of the Mohammedan saith,

There is but one GoD; Mohammed is the apostle of GoD. Which sentence, formally pronounced in favour of Ali, soon induced the Anfars, and the body of the people, to espouse his quarrel. The hist of the Anfars, who exerted himself at this juncture, was Abu Katadab, and he was supported by Omm Salma, who obliged her cousin-german to attend the Khalif, in the expedition he proposed to undertake for the recovery of Bafra. Ali afterwards made him governor of Babrein. Being resolved, if possible, to bring the rebels back to a fense of their duty, he left Medina at the head of 900 men, and advanced to Arrabdah, where he was joined by his fon Hasan with another body of troops. That young prince here took the liberty to censure his father's conduct. and told him, that the difficulties in which at present he found himself involved, were owing partly to his not aban-doning Medina, when Othman was belieged in his palace there; partly to his being inaugurated before he had been recognized by all the provinces; and partly to the defign he had formed of reducing Ayesha, and her two affociates, by force of arms, before he had tried what could be effected by pacific measures. Against all which points of conduct, he said, he had before advised him; and added, that his refusing to comply with fuch falutary advice might prove of fatal confequence to him. But to this Ali replied, that, had he abandoned Medina, when his predecessor was surrounded by his rebellious subjects there, he should, in all probability, have met with that prince's unhappy fate himself; that, had he deferred his inauguration till the body of the Moslems had acknowleged him, he should have offered an injury to the Anfars, in whom the right of electing a Khalif was lodged; and that, lastly, had he sat still at home, and neglected the means of his own preservation, by refusing to make the necessary preparations for his defence, after the public declaration of Ayesha, Telha, and Zobeir, of their intention to depose him, he should have animated them in their rebellion, and must necessarily have fallen a facrifice to their ambition. He, therefore, injoined his fon filence, and ordered him to acquiesce in the measures that had been taken. In the mean time, Ali's army was reinforced by various parties of Arabs, that were continually joining him in his camp k.

but only to dispose the Motazalites to an accommodation, He extolled their fidelity to him, and affured them, that he reposed a greater confidence in them than in any of his other subjects. He likewise told them, that he hoped providence, by means of their interpolition, would heal the breaches that had been made amongst the Moslems, and restore peace and unanimity to their councils. The Khalif also sent to Medina for farther affiftance, that he might be enabled to profecute the war with vigour; and received, in a short time, from thence a very copious supply of horses, arms, and other implements of war. In one of his public harangues to the troops, he exhibited to their view, in the strongest light, the inestimable blessing they enjoyed by the propagation of the true religion amongst them; which had effected so happy a union amongst all their tribes, that were before rendered contemptible by their animolities and divisions. At the same time, he did not fail reminding them, that they enjoyed an uninterrupted repose amongst themselves till the death of Othman; from whence the devil took occasion to sow amongst them the feeds of diffension; which would prove their destruction, unless they could prevail upon God, by imploring his affistance, to avert the impending evil. Then addressing himself to his son, he assured him, that the time would come when the Moslems should be divided into seventy-three sects: the worst of which would be that which should set him at nought, and not follow his example. He, therefore, advised him, as being now forewarned, always to consider the Korân as his guide and rule of faith, whatever diffractions might happen in the state, to adhere to Islam as his religion, and never to deviate from the directions of Mohammed. After he had given this falutary advice both to the army under his command, and his fon, he made the necessary dispositions for moving towards the enemy; having received advice, that they were incamped in the neighbourhood of Bafra 1.

of violence; but if they shall think fit to attack us, we will defend ourselves." Upon which, one of the Anfârs then present told the Khalif, that, "though he liked his discourse, his conduct by no means pleased him;" adding, with an oath, that, "as he had given their body the " name of Ansars, or helpers, he would help God, by afs fifting him to the utmost of his power." Soon after, Ali was joined by a party of the tribe of Tay, whose leader, Said Ebn Obeid, addressed him in the following terms: "O emer peror of the faithful! some mens hearts do not correspond with their tongues; but that is not the case with me. I have always had for thy person the greatest respect and veer neration; and will not fail fighting thine enemies wherefoever I find them. I consider thee as a person endued with "the most excellent qualifications of any in the present age." There was a castle here in the days of Abulfeda, called Al Ablak; which name was given it by Al Shamul Ebn Adhia, according to that celebrated writer. Not long after the arrival of Said Ebn Obeid at the Mostem camp, another body of Arabs, composed of the tribe of Ased, and part of that of Tay, offered their service likewise to the Khalif; but he dismissed them, in a courteous manner; telling them, that, besides the Ansars, he had a sufficient number of the Mohajerin to attend him in the expedition m.

and alking the governor whether he intended to march with any troops to the affishance of Ali? Abu Mûsa explained himfelf on that head in the following terms: " My fentiments " yesterday, and to-day, in relation to Ali, are not a little "different. To remain at home in a pacific posture seems more agreeable to the councils of heaven; but to enter in-" to the war now commenced may perhaps appear more con-"fiftent with the dictates of worldly wisdom. Therefore act as you shall think proper." To this none of the people answered a fingle word; but Ali's embassadors gave Abu Mile very reproachful language, for the manifest partiality he had discovered in favour of Ayelba. However, this he little regarded; telling them, that "he would not engage in their mafter's " quarrel, unless compelled to it by absolute necessity, before " vengeance had been taken of the murderers of Othman; " and that they were at liberty to impart this resolution to "him." This answer proved extremely agreeable to Ayesba, and her affociates, who still remained with their forces incamped near Basra. Here they proposed to wait for Ali, and made the proper dispositions for meeting him in the field, in case on both sides it should be found necessary to come to a general action °.

AFTER the departure of the army from Arrabdah, Ali ad-The Cavanced to Dhûlkhâr; where Othmân Ebn Hanif, the late go-fans at vernor of Bafra, waited upon him. Othman told the Khalif, last fend that " he had fent him to Basra with a beard; but must re- bim a rein-" ceive him from thence without one." "Thy fufferings," forcement. faid Ali, "are meritorious. All the Mossems acquiesced in " the election of the three preceding Khalifs. At last I was " chosen, as a proper person to succeed Othman; nor did " either Telba or Zobeir refuse a recognition of my authority. " However, they have fince violated the engagements they " entered into. But they shall know, that I am not less ca-" pable of doing myself justice than any of my predecessors." As soon as Ali had received Abu Musa's answer, which amounted to a clear and explicit denial of interesting himself in his favour, he sent Al Ashtar, a man of great resolution, and Ebn Abbas, to Cufa, with a full and unlimited power to act as they should think fit for the good of his service. But neither could they prevail upon Abu Mûsa to enter into a war against Ayesba. He advised the people over whom he presided not to entertain any thoughts of coming to a rupture with either of the contending parties; but only to receive the person injured, if it should be agreeable to him to accept of such an offer, into their houses, till the Moslems on both sides could be disposed to an accommodation. This not a little chagrined the Khalif. However, he came to a resolution to make one other effort to procure the affistance of the Cufans; and, for this purpose, dispatched his eldest son Husan and Ammar to their city, with instructions, that permitted them to make, on the part of the Khalif, any concessions to Abu Musa that he could in reason desire. But this attempt likewise, with regard to the governor, proved ineffectual; he exerting himself to the utmost of his power to prevent the Cufans from complying with the Khalif's propofals. This was also for some time hindered by Zeid Ebn Sawkhân, who read the two letters he had received from Ayesha; wherein she commanded him either to stay at home, or come with a body of troops to her affistance. However, at last Hasan, by a pathetic speech he made, wherein, with great art, he expatiated upon the perfidy and prevarication of Telha and Zobeir, and the unheard-of injury offered the Khalif, prevailed upon the people to fend a reinforcement to the Moslem army, commanded by Ali, then on its march to Basra. Some authors, however, relate, that, whilst the two parties were contending with great acrimony and vehemence in the mosque, Al Ashtar, whom Ali sent after his fon Hasan, found means to seize the castle of Cufa by surprize, with a small detachment affigned him for that purpole by the Khalif; and that he treated very roughly some of Abu Mûsa's men, whom he found there. This, continue they, made such an impression on the minds of the Cufans in Ali's favour, and rendered Abu Mûsa so contemptible to them, that, had he not instantly closed with the Khalif's proposals, he would have been plundered, and perhaps affaffinated, by the mob. Nor would this, after all, have probably been prevented, had not Al Ashtar vigorously interposed in his favour. Be that as it will, the Cufans immediately fent a body of 8,600 men, to reinforce Ali's troops in the camp of Dulkhar. This we learn from Ebn Al Athir; tho' the Cufan troops, destined to act against Ayesha at this time, did not amount to above 6000 men, according to Abu'l-Faraj P.

This reinforcement greatly animated the troops commanded by Ali; who, being apprized of its approach, began immediately to put themselves in motion. The Khalif himself advanced at the head of them to meet the Cûfans; to whom, after he had come up with them, he made a speech to the solutioning effect: "You Cûfans," said he, "have always distinguished yourselves by your bravery and conduct. After which, having before decamped from Dulkbar, he marched without opposition to Basra; where he found the Mostem army under Ayesha, Telha, and Zobeir, ready to re-The Khalif had several conferences with the two latter in the fight of both armies, that now faced each other. In one of these Ali demanded of Zobeir, if he did not remember that Mohammed once asked him, whether he loved his dear fon Ali? and that, upon his answering in the affirmative, the prophet told him, " that, notwithstanding this, " he should prove the source of a long series of calamities " both to him and all the Moslems." Zobeir made answer, that "he remember'd this perfectly well; and that, had he " recollected it sooner, he would never have taken up arms " against him." Some have affirmed, that, after this conference, Zobeir discovered a great reluctance to come to an engagement with Ali; but was confirmed in his former resolution by Ayesba, who bore an implacable hatred to the Khalif. Others have declared, that he was diverted from his intentionof remaining neuter by his fon, who asked him, "whether he was afraid of Ali's colours?" and, upon his answering in the negative, but afferting, that the oath he had taken would not permit him to act against that prince, assured him, that he might free himself from the obligation he was under by the manumission of a slave. However this may be, such an expiation of an inconfiderate oath, which, by the way, was very different from the oath taken by Zobeir, as that here mentioned, provided the flave be a Moslem, is allowed by the Korân P.

The two armies being drawn up in order of battle, faced Both the each other for fome time; the commanders on both fides pre-Khalîf and tending to be extremely averse to a general engagement. But Ayesha an accident happened the night before the day of the camel, prepare for an en-

that rendered this absolutely inevitable. There were some diforders committed then in one of the armies, the authors of which could never be discovered; upon which, Telha and Zobeir were told by certain persons, who must have been desirous of leaving the dispute about the Khalifat between Ali and Ayesha to the decision of the sword, that the Cufans had faller upon their forces in the night. Ali, faid they, will put an end to this quarrel by a decisive action; and therefore he has suffered the Cufans to begin hostilities. Being informed of this, the Khalif confidered these rumours as an artifice of his enemies, propagated with a defign to force him to a battle: and therefore he declared Ayesha and her associates to be the aggressors, and consequently imputed to them the essusion of the Moslem blood that was to be spilt in this war. Before the propagation of these rumours, which gave infinite disgust to both parties, Ayesha seemed greatly dismayed at the countenance of Ali's troops, and was inclined to have settled with him the preliminaries of a future treaty; but after they became current, there was no room left for an accommodation. Ayesha was animated by despair, and the Khalif incensed more than ever; tho', in one of the former conferences, he had reproached Telha and Zobeir for their infidelity, and declared in the presence of the two armies, that the divine vengeance would most certainly overtake them. Ayesba, in order to infuse life and vigour into her troops, was mounted on her great camel, in a pavilion (or little tent, furrounded with curtains, wherein women were carried on camels in the east) resembling a fort of cage, and moved with great resolution from one part of her army to another in the heat of the action. Hence it came to pass, that the day on which the battle was fought was called the day of the camel by some of the Arab historians; tho' the engagement itself seems to have been denominated the battle of Khoraiba by Abu'l-Faraj 9.

The hattle of Kho-raiba.

THE army Ali brought into the field on this occasion did not exceed 20,000 men, according to Al Makin; but it amounted to 30,000, if we will believe Ebn Al Athir. Ayesha's forces are said to have consisted of 30,000 men by the former of those authors, and to have exceeded that number by the latter; so that it is agreed on all hands, that the army commanded by Ayesha was more numerous than that of the Khalif. But notwithstanding this, the odds were apparently on Ali's side. For Ayesha's troops were composed of raw and undisciplined men, drawn together in haste; whereas those of the Khalif were the flower of the Mossem soldiery, consisting chiefly of the Ansars and Mohajerin, as well as the Cufan veterans, who had so eminently distinguished themselves in the conquest of Persia, and consequently such as might be intirely depended upon. Besides, Ali himself was infinitely superior, both in point of valour and capacity, to any of the enemy's generals. The dispute, therefore, was not of any long continuance; the enemy being quickly routed. Ebn Al Athir relates, that Merwan perceiving the victory to incline to Ali, in the heat of the action, faid to him, " Telha lately imbrued " his hands in the blood of Othman, and now, infatuated by " ambition, he pretends to revenge his death;" and immediately letting fly an arrow at him, wounded him in the leg. Upon which, his horse throwing him, he called for help; faying at the same time, "OGOD, take vengeance of me " for the blood of Othman, in the manner THOU shalt think " most proper." His man then took him up behind him, and conveyed him to a house in Basra, where he in a very short time expired. But just before his death, he said to one of the Khalif's men, "Give me your hand, that I may put " mine into it, and by that action renew the oath of fidelity " to Ali, which I have already taken to him." Of which the Khalif being informed, declared publickly, "that God " would not call Telha to heaven, till he had atoned for the " former violation of his oath by this last protestation of fide-" lity to him." As for Zobeir, having made his escape out of the battle, he retired to a valley crossed by a rivulet called Sabaa, on the road to Mecca; where he found Hanaf Ebn Kais incamped with a body of troops, with which he intended to join the victor, after the end of the action. Soon after his arrival there, Amru Ebn Jarmûz, one of Hanaf's men, flruck off his head whilst he was at prayers, performing the prostration, and carried it to Ali. But the Khalif receiving it with indignation, and, at the fight of it, bidding him "go " carry the good news to Ebn Safia in hell;" he could not forbear breaking out into the following exclamation: "You " are the evil genius of the Moslems. If a person delivers " you from any of your enemies, he is presently doomed to hell for such deliverance; and if he kills one of your men, " you inftantly pronounce him one of the devil's compa-" nions." Then, not being able to furvive the indignity of fered him, he drew his fword, and put a period to his days. With regard to Ayesha, the victory was by no means complete, till the Khalif had obliged her to make her submission." As long as her camel stood upon his legs, her troops made a tolerable resistance; and Ali found it not so easy to disperse them. Al Tabari relates, that seventy men, of the Banu Daba, who held his bridle, had their hands cut off successively in B 2

the dispute; and that the pavilion in which she sat was fluck fo full of javelins and arrows, that it resembled a porcupine At last, the camel was hamstringed, and Ayesba forced to lie there till the conclusion of the engagement; when Ali treated her with great politeness, dismissed her in a courteous manner, and ordered his fons Hasan and Hosein to attend her, with a splendid equipage, a day's journey on her return home. However, he thought fit afterwards to confine her to her house at Medina, and commanded her from thenceforth never to concern herself with state-affairs; tho' he permitted her, in order to ingratiate himself the more with the Arabs, who still retained a fecret regard and veneration for her, to perform the pilgrimage to Mecca. We are told by an Arab author of good repute, that, when her camel failed her, Ali sent Mohammed Ebn Abu Becr to see whether she was dead or alive; and that. upon his presenting himself before her pavilion, she gave him opprobrious language. Thus ended the battle of Khoraiba, or, as 'tis called by Eutychius, the battle of the camel; wherein both Telha and Zobeir, who violated the oath they had taken to Ali, lost their lives. The Arab, who killed the latter, is named, by Abu'l Faraj, Omar Ebn Jurmus, but, by Ebn Al Athir and Al Makin, Amru Ehn Jarmúz, as has been already observed. The people of the camel, as Al Makin calls Ayesba's troops, according to some of the Arab writers, had 8000, or, as others fay, 17000 men killed in the action; whereas the whole loss sustained by Ali did not exceed 1000 men. spoil taken at this battle the Khalif distributed amongst the heirs of his foldiers who fell in it, as a just reward for the bravery of their fathers and relations. He also constituted Abd'allah Ebn Abbas governor of Basra; and reprehended, with some asperity, the people of that place, for their disaffection to him. From thence he went to Cufa, which he made the feat of his government. Some of the Arab historians relate, that, on both sides, above 30,000 men were killed in the battle of Kheraiba, which was fought on Thurfday, the 10th of the former Jonada, in the 36th year of the Hejra, nearly answering to the year of our LORD 656 r.

Moâwiyah disputes the Khalifat with Ali.

AFTER so complete a victory, Ali could have no enemies to contend with either in Arabia, Irâk, Egypt, Persia, or Khorafan; so that it must have rendered him extremely formidable. However, there was still a very powerful party formed against him in Syria; Moawiyab perfifting in his resolution to dispute the Khalifat with him, and having all the Syrian troops at his devotion. Notwithstanding some overtures that had been made to him by Ali for an accommodation, he refused to acknowledge him Khalif; and even still continued to animate the Syrians, in order to advance his own affairs, against him. Whilst matters were in this situation, Amru Ebn Al As, and not Amru Ebu Ali, as he is called by Mr. Ockley, who commanded in Palestine, arrived at Damascus, then the residence of Moawiyab, and took the oath of allegiance to him. This was done in the presence of all the army, and had before been concerted between Amru and Moawiyah; the latter having engaged to confer upon the former, in order to procure his affistance, the lieutenancy of Egypt, if he could be advanced to the Khalifat. In consequence of this recognition of Moawiyah's authority, Amru gave his new master the titles of lawful KHALIF and Prince of the Moslems. The foregoing action was followed by the acclamations of the people, who likewise unanimously took the oath of fidelity to Moawijab, and inaugurated him by the title of Emir. Al Makin relates, that the Khalif dispatched Khariz Ebn Abd allah Al Nabali to Damascus, to dispose Meawiyab to an accommodation; but that all his endeavours in this point proved ineffectual .

As foon as Ali received advice of these commotions, he Ali endeavoured, first by gentle means, to bring the rebels of Sy-marches to ria back to a sense of their duty. But finding afterwards, Seffein. that the people of that large province had unanimously declared against him, he feared it would be in vain to set on foot any other negotiation. As, therefore, he perceived it would be necessary to invade Syria, in order to reduce the rebels to his obedience, he advanced to the frontiers at the head of an army of 70,000 men; but had scarce entered that country, when he was obliged to incamp upon a spot of ground, where he found himself greatly distressed for want of water. In these calamitous circumstances, he met with a Christian hermit, who told him, that there was a small cistern in the neighbourhood; but that this would searce supply him with three hogsheads of water for his troops. However, upon Ali's saying, that the antient prophets of the people of Ifrael formerly made their abode, and dug a pit, there, the hermit farther told him, that he had been informed by some old men, that there was really a pit, or well, shut up near the place where, he had incamped, which, according to a tradition prevailing in the country, could only be discovered and opened by a prophet, or one sent by him. Upon this, Ali went in quest of it, foon found it, and removed a stone that covered it, of are immense fize, with the greatest facility; which so surprized the hermit, that he immediately embraced his knees, and would never after leave him. To which some of the eastern writers add, that this hermit presented the Khalif with an old parchment manuscript, said to have been written by Simon Ebrz Safa, or Simon Cephas, that is, Simon Peter, or St. Peter, furnamed Cephas, one of the apostles of JESUS CHRIST. which contained an account of the advent of Mohammed, of the arrival of his lawful successor in those parts, and of the miraculous discovery of this well. After Ali had returned GoD thanks for so signal a bleffing, and furnished his troops with a fufficient quantity of water, he continued his march to Seffein, a place between Syria and Irak, where Moawiyah had posted himself with an army of 80,000 men. Before his arrival there, Ali fent a strong detachment, under the command of Ashtar Al Nakhai, to attack a body of troops posted by Moawiyah on that part of the road leading to the Euphrates. in order to render it impracticable, and impede the Khalif's march. Alhtar executed his orders with so much bravery, that he drove the enemy from their post, cut several of them in pieces, and opened a passage for the army to Seffein. According to Al Makin, Ali's troops amounted to 90,000 men. and Moawiyah's to 120,000; so that, if this author is to be credited, all the Moslem forces on both sides, assembled on this occasion, consisted of 210,000 men 2.

The battle

TOWARDS the close of the 36th year of the Hejra, the of Seffein, two armies came in fight of each other, and seemed to be ready to enter upon action. Some skirmishes happened between their advanced guards, wherein neither the Khalif nor Moawiyah sustained any confiderable loss. The first month of the following year was spent in attempts to forward an accommodation; but without effect. The next month, being Safar, they began to fight in parties, or plottoons, without hazarding a general engagement. The continuance of these encounters is variously related by the Arab historians. extend it to forty days, others to an hundred, and others to an hundred and ten. In that space, Ali lost 5000, or, as others fay, 25,000 men, twenty-fix of whom had been intimately acquainted with the prophet, attended him at the battle of Bedr, and were dignified with the title of the COMPANIONS. The most famous of these was Ammar Ebn Jassar, or rather Emmar Ebn Yaser, Ali's general of the horse, who was about ninety years of age, and had been in three feveral engagements with Mobammed himself. The Syrian forces suffered still more than those of the Khalif; 45,000 of them having been killed upon the spot in these rencounters. Ali commanded his men never to begin the attack, never to kill any one that fled, never to take any plunder, and always to treat the women that should fall into their hands in a decent manner. He also, before the beginning of these rencounters, which Al Makin, or rather Abu Jaafar, makes to amount in all to 90, intreated Moûwiyah to take the oath of fidelity to him, and prevent the farther effusion of Moslem blood. But this Moawiyah constantly, till the death of Ammar, refused; declaring publickly, that he would not lay down his arms till he had taken vengeance of the murderers of Othman, deposed Ali, and enabled the people to proceed to a new election. But that fatal event made a deep impression both upon Amru and Meawiyah; the former declaring, that he would rather have died twenty years before, than have survived so worthy a person as Ammar Ebn Yaser, who had deserved so well of all the Moslems. The loss of this general so exasperated Ali, that he charged the Syrians with a body of 12,000 men, broke them, and challenged Moawiyah to fight him in fingle combat. This challenge Amru would have persuaded Moawiyah to have accepted; but he absolutely declined it, insisting that it was not a fair one, fince Ali could not but be conscious of his superior strength; he having killed every person who had to that time entered the lifts against him. Amru urged, that it would be dishonourable, and argue a want of courage, to refuse so fair an offer. To which Moawiyah made no other reply than this; "You aspire to the Khalifat yourself, and desire to enjoy it " after I am gone." The last action at Seffein continued all night, to the great disadvantage of the Syrians. Al Ashtar pushed them to their camp; which, being vigorously supported by Ali, he was upon the point of making himself master of. Moawiyah seeing things in such a desperate situation, resolved, in concert with Amru, to make use of an artifice, that might possibly excite the Khalif's men to defert; fince nothing, at that perilous conjuncture, could, as he apprehended, save both him and his troops, but such a desertion. He, therefore, instantly ordered some of his men to fix several copies of the Korân upon their lances points, and to carry them at the head of his troops; at the same time crying out, "This is the book that ought to decide all differences be-" tween us; this is the book of God between us and you, " which absolutely prohibits the effusion of Moslem blood." the flower of the Khalif's forces, immediately threw downer their arms; threatening to abandon him, and even to deliver him into the hands of his enemies, if he would not found a retreat. This, therefore, he found himself obliged to do s the? he most bitterly exclaimed against that point of conduct in the strongest manner; assuring the mutineers, that Amru and Moawiyah had not the least regard for the Koran; and that his view in the present war was only to force them to act according to the tenets and decisions of that book. But he found it impossible to stem the torrent that now threatened to overwhelm him, without an immediate compliance with what they required; especially as the Kbarejites, an enthusiaffic fect, openly declared, that, unless he instantly ordered the troops under Al Ashtar to defish from the attack of the Syrian camp, they would ferve him in the fame manner they had done the son of Affan, meaning the last Khalif Othman. whom they had inhumanly murdered. Al Ashtan, therefore. by the Khal f's command, was obliged, tho' with the greatest reluctance, to retire, and fuffer the victory, of which he thought himself so secure, by this stratagem, to be wrested out of his hands. The night in which this battle was fought has been named by the Arab historians THE VALIANT NIGHT; because, says Al Makin, the Moslems behaved for valiantly in it, that they broke all their spears, and spent the remainder of it in a close engagement. About 70,000 fell on both fides that fatal night, according to some of the Arab historians, if we will believe the same author; 25,000 on the Khalif's, and 45,000 on that of the Syrians. But others of them, as he also observes, and with a greater appearance of truth, as we apprehend, affirm, that Ali lost 25,000 men. and Moawiyah 45,000, in all the actions that happened at Seffein. Upon the return of the day, Ali was obliged to cool the ardour of his victorious troops, when they had, as it were, rendered the action decisive in his favour, in the manner already related. The firatagem that occasioned this was contrived, and fuggested to Maawiyah, by Amru Ebn Al As, if any credit be due to Abu Jaafar Al Tabari b.

Khelif answered him coldly, "He that is not at liberty can-the arli-" not give his advice. You are to conduct this affair as you tration of " shall think proper." This apparently glanced at the late two perperfidious conduct of the troops of Irak, who confidered Jons. Assarb as their chief. Not content with offering so gross an affront as they had done to the poor Khalif, they infifted up. on nominating for him Abu Mufa Al Afbari, a very weak man, and one who had once betrayed him; refusing to admit, as he desired, either Ebn Abbûs or Al Ashtar, or indeed any other person that they thought had the least regard for Moawiyah, on the other hand, was treated in quite 2 different manner. He was allowed to trust his interest with whom he pleased; and accordingly he nominated Amru Ehn Al As, one of the greatest men of the age, to affert his right to the Khalifat, and explain the Koran in his favour. The two arbitrators, with whom the determination of this affair was intrusted, were injoined to decide it the next Ramadân, agreeably to the tenor of the Koran, and the collection of the prophet's traditions. This point being agreed upon, tho' by no means to the satisfaction of the Khalif; Moaquiyab retired to Damascus, and Ali to Cufa, in order to wait the event of that arbitration. But, before their departure, each of them left the command of his army to one of his generals; and invefted with a proper authority, that he might better be enabled to fettle every thing relating to religion, in their absence, a particular Imám. We find it intimated by Abu Jaafar, that the Syrian and Irâkian troops chose the arbitrators; and consequently, that Ali and Meawiyah had no hand in that election. The place appointed for the scene of this arduous transaction. upon which the fate of the Mossem empire, yet in its infancy. seemed to depend, was Dawmat Al Jandal, a town on the borders of Syria, about fifteen or fixteen days journey from Medina, and five from Damascus. The antient inhabitants of this place, as well as those of Tabuc, were the Calbites, descended from Calb, and consequently a branch of the tribe of Hamyar .

ABOUT eight months after the battle of Seffein, Abu Mûsa Alideposed and Amru Ebn Al As came to Dawmat Al Jandal, attended by both the by several of the companions, and escorted by a detachment of arbitrathe Mossem forces. Ebn Abbas, before the opening of the tors. conserences, desired Abu Mûsa to remember this, whatever else he forgot, that Ali had no blemish to render him incapable of the government, nor Modwiyah any virtue to qualify him for it. But, notwithstanding this salutary admonition, Amru, who was perfectly well acquainted with the genius of his collegue, by his artful address, so far infinuated himself into his good graces, that he could bring him into any measures which he should think proper to suggest to him. He, therefore, easily persuaded Abu Mûsa, that, in order to re-establish peace amongst the Moslems, it would be absolutely necessary to depose both Ali and Moawiyah; that a new Khalif might be elected, who should be acceptable to all the people. important article being fettled, a tribunal was erected between the two armies, on which each of the arbitrators was to declare publickly his opinion. This Abu Mûsa, at Amru's request, mounted first, and with a loud voice pronounced the following words: "I depose from the Khalifat both Ali and " Moawiyah, in the same manner that I now take this ring off my finger;" and having made this declaration, he immediately came down. Then Amru, in his turn, ascended the tribunal, and said, "You have heard, gentlemen, how " Abu Mûsa has deposed Ali, whom I likewise depose, and confer the Khalifat upon Moawiyah. I therefore invest "that prince with the supreme authority, in the same manor that I put this ring upon my finger. And this I am the more readily disposed to do, as having justice on my " fide; he having been declared by Othman his successor. 46 and being now the avenger of his blood, as well as the most worthy of all the Moslems of that sublime station to " which I now advance him." This unexpected declaration greatly shocked all the partizans of Ali, who complained bitterly of Abu Musa; and he, on his part, in very severe terms, reflected upon Amru's conduct, who had so shamefully violated the principal article flipulated in the late convention. In fine, Abu Mula, after having been so outwitted by Amru, not thinking himself safe in Ali's camp, fled to Mecca for his farther security. Some of the Arab writers relate, that this Abu Mûsa had the most musical voice of any person of his time. According to Abu Jaafar, the two arbitrators did not only agree to depose both Ali and Moawiyah, but likewise to promote to the Khalifat Abd'allah, the son of Omar Ebn Al Khattab. For a circumstantial detail of Amru's perfidious conduct on this occasion, we must beg leave to refer our curious readers to Abu'l-Faraj, who, in that point, will give them full and ample fatisfaction d.

Nor did the houses of Ali and Ommiyab, to the last of which belonged both Othman and Moawiyah, for a long time lay aside that reciprocal malediction. Nay, it may be said still to subsist in that rivetted antipathy between the Turks and the Persians, which is visible at this very day. However, Amru, after the public declaration he had made, and the Syrian troops he commanded, returned to Damascus, and complimented Moawiyab upon his new election. On the other hand, Ali being determined to affert his right to the Khalifat, and even in a thort time to march against Moawiyah; no less than 60,000 of his subjects took a fresh oath of allegiance to him, and even obliged themselves to support him to the last drop of their blood. But notwithstanding this vigorous resolution taken in his favour, that Khalif's interest, from the fatal period we are now upon, began greatly to decline a.

But Ali told him, that, when he was secretary to his father-in-law Mohammed, Sebail Ebn Amru refused to treat with the prophet, on the part of the people of Mecca, unless he would renounce the title of the APOSTLE OF GOD. Which, for the fake of peace, he accordingly did, without hesitation; and ordered me, said Ali, to efface that title, after it had been inserted at the head of the instrument containing the articles of the treaty to be figned by both parties, and substitute in its room the following words, Mohammed the son of Abd'allah. At the same time, he addressed himself to me, continued the Khalif, in the following remarkable terms: Remember, there will hereafter come a day when you shall find your self in a similar case. Ali, therefore, agreed to the omission of that title, of which, by his own arbitrator, AbuMusa, he had been so solemnly deprived. All these transactions happened in the 37th year of the Hejra, or of CHRIST 657, as did also the defection of the Khârejites, or rebels, for that the word really fignifies; of which, as it is a very curious article of the Arabic history, in the Khalifat of Ali, we must beg Khârejites.

AFTER Ali had submitted the decision of his right to the tion of the Khalifat, which Moawiyah disputed with him, to arbitration, he retired to Cifa, as has been already observed. But he was no fooner arrived there, than 12,000 Kbarejites, that is, rebels, or revolters, who had fought under him at the battle of Sefficin, and themselves forced him to take that ignominious frep, pretending to be offended at this submission, revolved from him. These were also called Mobakkomites, or Judiciarians; because the reason they gave for their revolt was, that Ali had referred a matter concerning the religion of God to the judgment of men; whereas the judgment, in such case, belonged to God alone. In consequence of this notion, they urged, that, instead of standing to the peace he had made, he ought to purfue his enemies, who were likewise the enemies of Gon, without mercy. But Ali answered, that, as he had given his word, he ought to keep it; and that in fo doing, he should follow what the law of God prescribed. The Khârejites replied, that God was the only judge between him and Moliviyah; and that consequently he had committed an enormous fin, of which be ought fincerely to repent. This irritating Ali, he, with some warmth, remonstrated to them, that, if any fin had been committed on this occasion, the world would justly impute the guilt of it to them; who, contrary to their oath of allegiance to him, had abandoned him in the heat of the late action, and obliged him to purfue those very measures, which, at that time, as they pretended, gave them fo much offence 8.

Their rebellion is extinguished by Ali.

THE rebels, not at all satisfied with these reasons, chose, for their general, Abd allah Ebn Waheb, who appointed Nabarwan, a town situated between Waset and Bazhdad, about four miles to the east of the Tigris, the place of their rendez-They had not been here long before they were joined by great numbers of Ali's difaffected subjects from Cufa, Basra, and various parts of Arabia. The Khalif at first took little notice of them; his thoughts being chiefly bent upon reducing Medwiyah, whom he considered as much the more formidable enemy. But being informed, that they were increased to the number of 25,000 men, that they condemned as impious all who did not fall in with their fentiments, and that they had already put to death several Moslems, for refuling to comply with their iniquitous measures; he resolved, in fine, to exterminate a fect, which tended to the subversion of the very foundations of Mobammedism. However, he thought fit, before he proceeded to extremities, to try gentle methods; but these proving ineffectual, he assembled a confiderable body of troops, at the head of which he presented himself to their view. Nevertheless, before he attacked them. he had the precaution to plant a flandard without the camp. and to make proclamation by found of trumpet, that whofoever would come under it, should have quarter, and whosoever would retire to Cúfa, should find a sanctuary there. This firatagem produced the defired effect; infomuch that Abd'allab Ebn. Waheb soon found his army reduced to 4000 men. However, being animated by despair, he attacked the Khalif's forces, notwithstanding the inequality of his troops. received the just reward of his temerity and presumption; being cut to pieces, with all his men, except nine who escaped. Of these, as we are told by some historians, two sled into Oman, two into Kerman, two into Sijistan, two into Mesopotamia, and one into Tel Mawrun, in Yaman; in all which places they propagated their herefy, where, as we are told, it remains to this day. Others maintain, tho' not with fuch an appearance of truth, in our opinion, that, of the 4000 Kbarejites, commanded by Abd allah Ebn Waheb, not a man survived the general destruction; Ali being resolved to pursue this impious and rebellious fect even to excision. Before the beginning of the action, Ali told some of his friends, that " the rebels, who pretended to spend so much of their time in " reading the Korân, without observing its precepts, would " defert their profession, at the approach of danger, with as " great celerity as arrows fly from a bow, when they are dif-" charged from it;" which accordingly came to pass. It will be proper to observe here, that the herefy of the Khârejites confished chiefly in two things: 1. In that they affirmed a man might be promoted to the dignity of Imâm, or prince, tho' he was not of the tribe of Koreish, nor even a free man, provided he was a just and pious person, and endued with the other requisite qualifications; and also held, that if the Imam turned afide from the truth, he might be put to death, or deposed; and that there was no absolute necessity for any Imâm at all in the world. 2. In that they charged Ali with fin, for having left an affair to the judgment of men, which ought to have been determined by GoD alone; and went fo far as to declare him guilty of infidelity, and to curse him on that account. principal fects, or branches, of the Kharejites, besides the Mobakkemites here mentioned, are fix; which, tho' they greatly differ differ amongst themselves in other matters, yet agree in these, viz. that they absolutely reject Othman and Ali, preferring the doing of this to the greatest obedience, and allowing marriages to be contracted on no other terms; that they account those who are guilty of grievous fins to be infidels; and that they hold it necessary to result the Imam when he transgresses the law. The most celebrated of the Kbarejites seem to be the Waidians, so called from Al Waid, which signifies the threats denounced by GoD against the wicked. the antagonists of the Morgians, and affert, that he who is guilty of an enormous fin ought to be declared an infidel, or an apostate, and will be eternally punished in hell, though he were a true believer; which opinion of theirs occasioned the first rise of the Motazalites. One Juafar Ebn Mobashar, of the sect of the Nodhamians, was yet more severe than the Waidians, pronouncing him to be a reprobate, and an apostate, who steals but a grain of corn. The defeat, or rather almost total extirpation, of the Khârejites, who persisted in their rebellion, whose name also, according to Ebn Al Koffa, fignified tribute, as they received tribute without the leave of the prince, and even in opposition to him, happened in the 38th year of the Hejra, the year following their revolt, at a place, as should feem from Eutychius, called Khoruzi, or Khorûzia, at a small distance from Naharwan. Their leader, Abd'allah Ebn Waheb, lost his life in the action; and the glorious victory gained on this occasion reunited under the government of Ali the whole body of the Moslems settled in Arabia h.

THE Khalif having thus happily extinguished this rebellion, lîf's camp which struck at the very foundations of Islamism itself, as well as the supreme authority with which he was at first so legally abandoned invested by the unanimous suffrages of the Moslems, he made the necessary dispositions for marching immediately against Moawiyab, in order to reduce him likewise to his obedience. But he was diverted from this defign by some persons about him, who probably were fecret well-wishers to Moawiyah, as this would have been the most proper season to have attacked him, when his men were so flushed with their late success, under the pretence, that he had not yet made sufficient preparations for fo long a war as this was like to be; and that he ought to allow his troops some refreshment, after the fatigues they had sustained. Ali, therefore, following their advice, formed a camp at Nakilah, in the neighbourhood of Cufa; and per-

It has been already observed, that Ali, in the beginning of Egypt his Khalifat, conferred the government of Egypt upon Kais conquered Ebn Sa'id, who acquitted himself of his charge with great by Amru prudence. Finding, on his arrival there, that the partizans Ebn Al of Othman, or rather Moawiyah, formed a very considerable As. faction, he thought it proper to accommodate himself to the times; which he did with so much address, that he kept every thing in good order; infomuch that the whole body of the people were very well pleased with his administration. This conduct of Kais furnished Moawiyah with an occasion of publishing every-where, that the governor of Egypt was his friend, and acted in concert with him; which he did, in order to render him suspected to Ali, who yet had not a more faithful friend amongst his subjects. That he might the more effectually carry his point, Moawiyah forged a letter in Kais's name, directed to himself; wherein it was infinuated, that the reason why he had not treated with more severity the adherents of the house of Ommiyab was, because he was himfelf intirely in their measures. Which artifice of Moawiyah had the defired effect. For Ali hereby entertaining a suspicion of Kais's fidelity to him, immediately recalled him, and appointed Mohammed Ebn Abu Becr governor of Egypt in his room; which occasioned great commotions in that province. For the new governor no sooner set his soot there, than he began to chase out of that country all those who professed any regard for Othman, or preserved any veneration for his memory. Upon which, fuch civil wars and diffensions ensued, that Ali was obliged to fend for Mohammed home, and to difpatch Malec Shutur, sometimes called Ushtur Malec Ebn Håreth Al Najai, into Egypt, to re-establish his authority there. Moâwiyah being apprized of this, prevailed upon a friend of his at Kolzom, a town upon the Red Sea, where Ushtur Malec was to lodge, in his passage to Egypt, to poison him; which he accordingly did, by giving him some poisoned honey at an entertainment he had prepared for him. This obliged Ali to continue Mohammed Ebn Abu Becr some time longer in the government of Egypt; from whence he immediately expelled all the Banu Hareth, probably on account of the relation they bore to Ushtur Malec his successor, who were

Some of the blackest and most swarthy kind of Arabs; which proved the total ruin of Ali's interest in that region. For, they instantly retired to Damascus, where they informed Moawiyah of the treatment they had met with from Mohammed; at the same time assuring him, that he might easily make himfelf master of Egypt. Upon receiving this intelligence, Modwiyab fent Amru Ebn Al As with a body of 6000 men, to take possession, in his name, of the government of that country. Amru, in pursuance of his orders, marched with all possible expedition into Egypt, seized the capital city, and was foon joined by Ebn Sharig, who had put himself at the head of Othman's party, with a confiderable force. After this junction, Amru attacked Mohammed Ebn Abu Becr, Ah's governor, intirely defeated him, and took him prisoner. fatisfied with this, he put him to death; and, inclosing his body in that of an ass, burnt it to ashes. This barbarity gave great offence to his fister Ayesha, who begged a curse upon Amru and Moawiyah for it at the end of all her prayers, and took • Mohammed's dependents and domestics under her protection. Ali also himself was greatly concerned at this tragical event; faying, "We shall account for him before Gop." Abu Jaafar relates, that Mohammed Ebn Abu Becr, after the defeat of his forces, escaped out of the battle, and hid himself; but was discovered, and brought to Amru, by Moâwiyah Ebn Khodbaj, who treated him in the cruel manner above-mentioned. He was cut off in the fortieth year of his age, after he had been five months only governor of Egypt. After his death, the post he filled was occupied by Amru Ebn Al As; upon whom it was conferred by Moawiyah, who then acted as Khalif in Syria k.

Moâwiyah's troops make incurfions into Ali's

THE next year, being the 39th of the Hejra, Moawiyah fent several detachments to make incursions into Ali's territories, where they committed dreadful depredations. The most considerable of these detachments, under the command of Dahak Ehn Kais, confisting of 3000 men, plundered several districts of Irak, and then penetrated into Hejaz. But Daterritories. bak was met by a body of the Khalif's troops, confifting of 4000 men, under the conduct of Hajar Ebn Adi, after he had refired out of that province, at Tadmor. Here Hajar attacked the enemy with such bravery, that he put them to flight, killed feveral of them upon the spot, and recovered the booty they had acquired. This vigorous action was of confiderable service to the Khalif's subjects in those parts, who had been thrown into the utmost consternation. For, the

THE fame year, as we apprehend, and not the preceding, Bafra tai as has been intimated by D'Herbelot, without any manner of ken by foundation, who has been followed herein by Mr. Ockley, Ali Moawisent for his faithful friend, Abd'allah Ebn Abbas, from Bafra, yah's of which place he was then governor, to Medina, that he troops, and might with him take fuch resolutions as were suitable to the retaken by present situation of his affairs. Moawiyah receiving advice those of of this event, immediately ordered Abd'allah Al Hadrami Ali. to march to Bafra with a body of 2000 horse, and possess himself of that city. These orders he easily executed, as Zirâd, Ebn Abbâs's lieutenant there, had not a sufficient number of troops to oppose him, and the city itself was not capable of making any defence. Ali being informed of this, fent a reinforcement to Ziyad, who had abandoned Bafra at Abd'allah's approach, under the command of Hareth, who joined Ziyad at a small distance from Basra without any loss. After this junction, the combined forces attacked Abd' allah Al Hadrami near that city, overthrew him. and killed him upon the spot. Upon which, Bafra surrendered again to Ali; who immediately fent back thither Abd'allah Ebn Abbas, to command there as he had done before. Which transactions we have thought fit to place in the 30th year of the Heira, as the incursions mentioned by Mr. Ockley immediately before them feem to correspond exactly with those that Al Makin assures us were made by Moawiyab's detachments that year. Our learned and curious readers, therefore, we hope, will not censure us for preferring the authority of Al Makin to that of M. D'Herbelot, in the point before us .

Which petition, according to some of the eastern writers, was heard; that commander really becoming an idiot towards the close of his days, and dying in that miserable condition. Notwithstanding the war was carried on with such circumstances of cruelty on the part of Moawiyab, that prince, at this juncture, prayed publickly for Ali, Hasan, and Hosein; as the Khalif did for him, Amru, and Dahak. About this time, Ali's brother, Okail, went over to Moawiyah, who assigned him a large revenue for his defection. Okail alledged no other reason for this infamous conduct, than that his brother had not treated him with fuch marks of distinction as he thought he might juftly have expected of him. We must not forget to inform our readers here, that M. D'Herbelot is guilty of a most egregious blunder, when he confounds Abd'allah Ebn Abbas, governor of Yaman, with Ali's lieutenant of Bafra, who had the very same name; and that, in consequence of this mistake, he has committed several others, which he has taken care to insert in his history of Ali. The former Abd'allah seems to have been diffinguished from the latter by the additional term. or cognomen, Al Anfari, the Anfar; as may be inferred from at least one of the oriental historians. Which observation had Mr. Ockley sufficiently attended to, as well as to what has been advanced in the point before us by Al Makin, he would not only have evinced, but also rectified, M. D'Herbelot's mistake, much more to the satisfaction of his curious and intelligent readers P.

A little after the battle of Naharwan, or, as Eutychius will A Khâre-have it, Khorûzia, three of the Khârejites, that were extremely jite atzealous for the advancement of their sect, happened to meet tempts to at Mecca; where they made frequent mention of those that as fassinate were killed in that battle, magnified their own merit, and Moâwi-greatly lamented the loss of their companions. These three yah; men, called Abd'alrahmân Ebn Meljem, Barak Ebn Abd'allab, and Amru Ebn Becr, said one to another, "If the three er-"roneous Imâms, Alis Moâwiyah, and Amru Ebn Al As, "were dead, the affairs of the Mossems would soon be in a "more flourishing condition; let us, therefore, without hesi-"tation, dispatch them." This being immediately agreed upon, they pitched upon Friday, the day of the solemn as sembly of the Mossems, the 17th of Ramadân, for the execution of their bloody design; and, having poisoned their swords, took all their respective routes. Barak Ebn Abd'allah, one of the affaffins, being arrived at Damascus, struck Moawiyah in the reins; but the wound did not prove mortal. However, the furgeon told him, that it would not be cured, unless he would either submit to be cauterized, or to drink a potion that would render him incapable of generation. He chose the latter of these, and, in consequence of that choice, had no other children besides those that were born to him before he received his wound. The affaffin was instantly seized, discovered the conspiracy he had entered into, and had his hands and feet cut off; but was suffered to live. However, afterwards marrying, it was thought unreasonable that he should enjoy the pleasures of a conjugal state, as he had rendered the Syrian Khalif incapable of these; and therefore one of Moawiyah's friends, tho' he had no order for this, killed him with his own hands q. AMRU EBN BECR, the second of the conspirators, went does Amru to Egypt, and appeared in the mosque, where Amru performed his devotions, on the 17th of the month of Ramadan. But fortunately for him, Amru being then troubled with a violent fit of the cholic, did not officiate that day in the mosque as Imâm. Wherefore, Kharijah, whom he appointed to perform the office for him, and who then actually supplied his place, being struck by the villain, who mistook him for Amru, fell down dead with the blow. As the affaffin was led to execution, he faid, without the least concern, I designed Amru; but God designed another. Abulfeda relates, that, when he was brought before Amru, he asked who that person was? Upon which, they told him Amru. "Whom then," faid he, "have I killed?" They answered, Kharijah. Then Amru himself cried out to him, according to this historian, You meant Amru; but God meant Kharijah. This Kharijah, according to Al Makin, was the captain of Amru's guards. The fame writer seems likewise to intimate, that Barak Ebn Abd allah, the first assaffin, was cut to pieces immediately after he had attempted to murder Moawiyah; notwithstanding what may have been advanced to the contrary by some other authors r.

barwan, and who, for that reason, bore an implacable hatred to Ali, by marrying her, and the affistance of a dower, confifting of 3000 dirhêms, a flave, a maid, and a promise of All's head, to enable him to perpetrate the horrid crime he had in view. To facilitate this, she joined to him two associates, called Werdan and Shabib by Abulfeda, who attended him into the mosque, where Ali officiated as Imam, the 17th of the month of Ramadân. Here, whilst these three villains pretended to quarrel amongst themselves, Werdan struck at the Khalif with his fword, but missed him, and the blow fell upon the gate of the mosque. Then Abd'alrahman Ebn Meljem gave him a blow on the head, just in the same place where he had received a wound before, at the battle of Abzab, or Asab, which was fought in Mohammed's time; and that stroke proved mortal. After which, the villain took to his heels, faying as he made off, By the lord of the Caaba, I have killed him. Of the affaffins Shabib only escaped the punishment due to so atrocious a crime. For Werdan, having been feen with a fword in his hand lifted up against Ali, was pursued home by a Moslem, who killed him upon the spot; and Abd'alrahman was feized, lurking in a corner, with his fword in his hand, and foon constrained, by a consciousness of his guilt, to own himself the murderer of Ali. The Khalif ordered his son Hasan to put him under arrest, to supply him with necessaries of every kind, and, if he died, to execute him at one stroke only. Halan, according to the authors followed by M. D'Herbelot, probably some of the Persian historians, punctually observed what had been injoined him by his father, who died either on the 19th, 20th, or 21st, of Ramadân, in the Ask both year of the Hejra, or of Christ 660. With these. however, the Arab authors by no means agree. Abu Jaafar Al Tabari and Abulfeda relate this matter after a quite different manner. According to them, the hands and feet of the affassin were cut off, his eyes put out with a red hot iron, his tongue cut out, and then he was reduced to ashes. Others fay, that he was first beheaded, and his body afterwards burnt. Here we must beg leave to observe, that the account given by Abu Jaafar and Abulfeda of this tragical affair seems to have the greatest appearance of truth on its side; since the enormity of the crime and the vindictive disposition of the Arabs render it highly probable, that, whatever orders Ali might give in his life-time to the contrary, the bloody villain Abd'alrahman Ebn Meljem, for so execrable a fact as the asfaffination of the Khalif, would be put to a most cruel death. Abu Jaafar writes, that Ali said to the people about him, "If "I recover, spare Abd'alrahman; but if I die, send him after " me, that I may have an immediate opportunity of accusing him before the divine tribunal." With regard to the place of his interment, authors are not perfectly agreed. fay, he was buried opposite to the mosque in Cufa; others in the royal palace there; and others, that his fon Hasan deposited his remains by those of his wife Fâtema at Medina. But, according to Ebn Al Athir and Abulfeda, he was buried in that place which is visited by the Moslems as his tomb at this day. The sepulchre of Ali was kept concealed during the reigns of the Khalifs of the family of Ommiyah, and discovered whilst one of those of the house of Abbas sat upon the Moslews throne. Adado'ddawla, the second prince or Solian of the house of Bûiyah, who began to reign at Baghdad, in the year of the Hejra 366, or of CHRIST 976, under the Khalif Al Tay' Ebn Al Mety', erected a superb monument on the spot where Ali was interred, which is called by the Persians Konbud Faid Al Anwar, that is, the dome of the distributer of lights and graces 4.

IT has been observed by some of the Moslem writers, that stian wri- Ali, during the month in which he was killed, had several prefages of his death; and that some words, when he was in private with his particular friends, to this effect escaped him. He was heard once to fay, after he had fuffered a good deal of inquietude, Alas! my heart, there is need of patience, as no remedy can be found out against death. In fine, on Friday, the 17th of Ramadan, early in the morning, when he fet out for the mosque, it was remarked, that a large troop of domestic birds made an uncommon noise, as he passed through his yard; and that, when one of his flaves threw a flick at them, to make them filent, he faid, Let them alone; for their cries are only lamentations foreboding my death. He was assassinated by Abd'alrabman Ebn Meljem Al Mazadi, in the month of Ramadân, in the 40th year of the Hejra; being then about 63, or, according to some 57, or lastly, as others will have it, 58 years of age. But, if we will believe Abulfeda, he was either 63, 56, or 59 years old, when he mot with his tragical fate. The wound would not have been attended with any fatal confequences, had not the fword that gave it been poisoned; but the poison, soon diffusing itself over the whole mass of blood, rendered it mortal. He reigned about four years and nine, or, as others fay, ten, months. The Christian historians take little notice of what happened during his Khalifat. One of them, however, observes, that, in an engagement between him and Moawiyab near the Emphrates.

by which he must undoubtedly mean the battle of Seffein, the latter had the advantage; which, according to him, was owing to the want of water that Ali's troops laboured under, Moawihaving taken care to cut off all communication between them and the Euphrages. This single instance is a demonstrative proof, to omit an infinite number of others that occur, of the little light given by the Greek writers to the Arabic history, during the infancy of Islamism; and, of course, clearly shews how much we are obliged to the oriental historians for the affistance they afford us in compiling that history for this particular period. The Christian author here referred to calls Ali the prince of Persia, because, as we suppose, he was in some measure supported by the troops of Irâk, and the Persian, forces; and only in general infinuates, that he came to a violent death. Another Christian writer, of the Jacobite perfualion, only intimates, that a battle was fought by the Arabs engaged in a civil war, meaning that of Seffein, in the year of CHRIST 657, without informing us of the consequences of it. or communicating to us any particulars of that action; and that the Moslems were harassed during the space of five years after Othman's death with intestine commotions. That author, by mistake, gives Ali the name of Abbas, and says, that this prince was affaffinated by his own subjects, whilst he was on his knees at prayers. He also intirely omits the Khalifat of Hasan, Ali's son; which was, indeed, but of a very short and inconfiderable duration t.

He was rather short than middle-character. fized; of a youthful, florid, and frequently smiling, countenance. Some, however, write, that he had hair on his head, which was not very grey, but formed into curls. With regard to his disposition, this Khalif, if we will believe the Moslem writers, had the fear of God constantly before his eyes, was extremely charitable, just, humble, and a strenuous defender of what they call the true religion. He was also very acute, learned, and extremely well versed in all useful arts and sciences. His bravery never failed him; nor was he more eminent and conspicuous for that than for his liberality and munificence, as well as that sweetness of temper which so remarkably distinguished him on all occasions. His secretaries were Abd'allah Ebn Rafi' and Sa'id Ebn Nemran, of Ha-

He had by her three sons, Hasan, Hosein and Mobassan; the last of which died in his infancy. second wife was Omm Al Nebiyin, who bore him four children, Abdallah, Abbas, Othman, and Jaafar, who were all killed at the battle of Kerbelab. Asimab, his third wife, was the mother of Yabya and Aûn; as Omm Habiba, was of Omar. His fixth wife, Khaulah, was the mother of Nohammed, furnamed Ebn Hanifiyah, of whom a farther account will be given hereafter. The names of the other three wives have not been handed down to us by any of the oriental historians; tho' three more of his sons, Mohammed the second, Mohammed the younger, and Amru, have been mentioned by some of them. Besides which, there was another that has been passed over in filence by all the eastern writers. For, it clearly appears from some authors of good repute, that he had fifteen sons, five of whom only, Hasan, Hosein, Mohammed Ebn Hanifiyah, Abbas, and Amru, left issue behind them. As for his daughters, who were no fewer than eighteen, we find no material particulars concerning them, preserved by the Arab historians. And let this suffice for an account of the family of Ali, which we could not prevail upon ourselves to omit here, as it will be of fingular service to us hereaster, by enabling us to understand several passages of the Moslem historians; which, without it, would be almost, if not altogether, unintelligible .

Some farther particulars concerning him and his family.

A vast number of the Moslems, and particularly all the Shiites, pretend, that Ali was the first who embraced their religion. Nay, some of them go so far as to assert, that he made profession of it in his mother's womb; and even hindered her, during her pregnancy, from prostrating herself before an idol she commonly worshipped. They also say, that his mother was delivered of him in the very temple of Mecca itself; which never happened to any one else. The name his mother gave him first was Kaid; but Mohammed changed it into Ali. The form of benediction added by the Mollems, when they name him, is, God glorify the face of him: Mobammed himself is reported to have said of him, Ali is for me, and I for him; he hears the same relation to me that Aaron did to Moses; I am the sity in which all knowledge is shut up, and he is the gate of it. Several of the eastern writers have been very prolix in their accounts of the excellence and prerogatives of the house of Ali. One of them in particular, named Amûd, has produced a thousand pretended traditions of Mohammed concerning the excellence of this Khalif, and in favour of the Shitter; who gave him a large sum of money for drawing up that composition x.

THE Shiites, are the opponents of the Kharejites, of whom An acwe have already given our readers some account. Their name count of properly fignifies sectaries, or adherents, in general; but is bis parparticularly used to denote those of Ali Ebn Abu Taleb; who tizans. maintain him to be lawful Khalif and Imam, and that the fupreme authority, both in spirituals and temporals, of right belongs to his descendents. They also teach, that the office of Imam is not a common thing, depending on the will of the vulgar, but a fundamental article of religion, that could not have been left by the prophet to the fancy of the common people. Nay, fome of them, thence called Imamians, have not scrupled to affert, that religion consists solely in the knowlege of the true Imâm. The principal sects, or branches, of the Shiites are five, which are subdivided into an almost infinite number; so that some understand Mohammed's prophecy of the seventy odd sects of the Shiites only. But Ali himself. according to Ebn Al Athir, was of a different opinion; fince, a little before the day of the camel, he affured his subjects, that the worst of the seventy-three sects into which the Moslems were to be divided, would be that which fet him at nought. and refused to follow his example. The Kassabians, one of the five primary fects of the Shiites, entertain very extravagant fentiments in several points. They believe, that Ali was more than a man; and that this supreme pontiff and director of Islamism is still living. They also reckon the succession of the twelve Imâms of the posterity of Ali in a manner peculiar to themselves, and different from the computation observed by every other fect. The general opinions of the Shiites are, 1. That the peculiar designation of the Imam, and the testimonies of the Koran and Mohammed concerning him, are neceffary points. 2. That the Imâms ought necessarily to keep themselves free from light sins, as well as those that are more grievous. 3. That every one ought publickly to declare who it is that he adheres to, and from whom he separates himself, by word, deed, and engagement; and that herein there should be not the least diffimulation. In this last point, however, the Zeidians, a fect of the Shiites, so named from Zeid, the great grandfon of Ali, differted from all the rest of the Mos-Lems, whose tenets we are here considering. The great schisim between the Sonnites, or Traditionists, that is, those of the Moslems who acknowlege the authority of the Sonna, or collection of moral traditions of the fayings and actions of Mobammed, and the Shiites, or partizans of Ali, still subsists, and is maintained on both fides with implacable hatred and most furious zeal at this very day. This most remarkable difference at first arose upon a political occasion, which commenced in the Khalifat of Ali, as fufficiently appears from the preceding history of that reign; and was afterwards so well improved by additional circumstances, and the spirit of contradiction, that, at present, both parties detest and anathematize one another as the most abominable of heretics, and even farther from the truth than either the Christians or the Jews. The chief points wherein they differ are, 1. The Shiites reject Abu Becr, Omar, and Othman, the three first Khalifs, as usurpers and intruders; whereas the Sonnites acknowlege and respect them as rightful Imâms. 2. The Shiites preser Ali to Mohammed, or, at least, esteem them both equal; but the Sonnites admit neither Ali, nor any of the prophets, to be equal to Mohammed. 3. The Sonnites charge the Shiites with corrupting the Koran, and neglecting its precepts; and the Shiites retort the same charge upon the Sonnites. Sonnites receive the Sonna, or book of traditions of their prophet, from whence they derive their name, as of canonical authority; whereas the Shiites reject it as apocryphal, and unworthy of credit. And to these disputes, and some others of less moment, is principally owing the antipathy which has so long reigned between the Turks, who are Sonnites, and the Persians, who are of the sect of Ali. Some authors maintain, that these last are subdivided into no less than seventy different branches, or smaller sects; all of which hold a metemplychosis, or transmigration of souls, and the Al Holûl, or descent of God upon his creatures, or the transmission of the spirit of sanctity from one person to another. The Khalifs of the house of Ommiyab likewise, and their successors, the Shiites confider in the same light as they do the three first Kha-The Sonnites make use lifs, Abu Becr, Omar, and Othmân. of the word Shiites, or Shii, and apply it to their adversaries, as a term of reproach, formed from Shiyah, denoting properly a scandalous reprobate sect. For, a sect that follows Digitized by GOO approved approved opinions is called by the Arabs Medheb. The partizans of Ali, therefore, stile themselves Adalizab, which signifies the religion of them who follow justice and the right side; and stigmatize the Sonnites with the odious appellation of Shites. At this day, the powerful kingdom of Persia, one half of the princes of the Uzbeks, whose dominions lie beyond the Jihûn, or the Amû, the Oxus of the antients, and some Mobammedan kings of the Indies, are followers of Ali, and, amongst the other Mobammedans, go under the aforesaid opprobrious denomination y.

NOTWITHSTANDING the sepulchre of All is so well known The extrato be near Cufa, many of his followers believe him to be still vagant alive; and affirm, that he shall come at the end of the world notions the with Elias in the clouds, and fill the earth with piety and Shiites exjustice. Nay, several of his votaries have carried their vene-tertain of ration for him and his descendents so far, that they have trans-Aligreffed all bounds of reason and decency; tho' some of them have been less extravagant than others. The Gholaïtes, who had their name from their excessive zeal for their Imams, were so highly transported therewith, that they raised them above the degree of created beings, and attributed divine properties to them; transgressing in both extremes, by deifying of mortal men, and by making God corporeal: for one while they affimilated one of their Imams to God, which was finning in excess; and another while they made God to resemble a creature, which may be confidered as a fin in defect, and is confequently placed in the opposite extreme. The sects of these are various, and have various appellations assigned them in different countries. Abd'allah Ebn Saba, who had been a Jew, and had afferted the same thing of Joshua the son of Nun, was the ring-leader of one of them. This man gave the following falutation to Ali, viz. Thou art Thou, i. e. Thou art GoD. And another, named Alaba Ebn Dara Al Hasadi, preferred Ali to Mohammed; pretending that the latter was sent by the former to call all men to him; but that, being an impostor, he called them to himself. Some of the Shiites affert, that the angel Gabriel, by mistake, took Mohammed for Ali, being deceived by the refemblance they bore to each other; those two prophets having been as like one another as are two grows; whence it came to pass, that they were called Gora-

bites, or the Corvine sect. The Gholaites above-mentioned were divided into several classes or branches; some maintaining the divinity, or fomething like it, of Ali, and others of some one of his descendents. By the Al Holûl hinted at aboveaccording to Al Shahrestâni, they mean that God is present in every place, speaks with every tongue, and appears in some individual person: whence several of them have afferted their Imâms to be prophets, and at length gods. The Nosairians and the Ishakians taught, that spiritual substances appear in groffer bodies; and that the angels and the devil have appeared in this manner. They also affert, that God hath appeared in the form of certain men; and fince, after Mohammed, there hath been no man more excellent than Ali, and after him, his fons have excelled all other men, that God hath appeared in their form, spoken with their tongue, and made use of their hands; for which reason, say they, we attribute divinity to them. And, in support of these blasphemies, they tell feveral miraculous things of Ali; as his moving the gates of Khaibar, which they urge as a plain proof that he was endued with a particle of divinity, and with fovereign power, and that he was the person in whose form GoD appeared, with whose hands he created all things, and with whose tongue he published his commands; wherefore, say they, he was in being before the creation of heaven and earth. In so impious a manner do they seem to wrest those things which are said in Scripture of CHRIST, by applying them to All. These extravagant fancies of the Shiites, however, in making their Imams partake of the divine nature, and the impiety of some of those Imams in laying claim thereto, are so far from being peculiar to this fect, that most of the other Mohammedan sects are tainted with the same madness; there being found many amongst them, and amongst the Sufis especially, who pretend to be nearly related to heaven, and who boast of strange revelations before the credulous people. We must not forget to observe here, that, amongst the descendents of Ali, there was one Mohammed, for whom one branch of the Shiites, ever fince his death, have expressed a most particular regard and veneration. They are so firmly persuaded of the certainty of his fecond advent at the end of the world. that this notion is received amongst them as an article of faith and he is deemed guilty of infidelity, who entertains the least doubt about so indubitable a point. Some of the Shiites believe, that there has been an interruption of the feries of their .Imams, who are known by the name of Al Wakefians; tho' others contend for the uninterrupted succession of those Imams, and maintain, that there shall never be one of them wanting to supply the place of their great prophet Ali: nay, several of Digitized by Google them

WE have already observed, that Ali, on account of his su- Ali's surperior bravery, was fometimes denominated by the Arabs the names. victorious lion of GoD; to which we shall now beg leave to add, that they frequently gave him the appellation likewise of AlHaidar, or AlHaidara, which also denotes a lion in the Arabic language. The former of which appellations, the victorious lion of God, or the lion of God, was applied to persons remarkable for their valour by the Hebrews themselves, as may be inserred from Scripture. This ought to be confidered as a proof of the great affinity between the proverbial expressions, as well as idioms, of the Hebrew and Arabic tongues, to omit an infinite number of fimilar inflances that might be produced and viewed in the same light. But this point is so clear, that it will not be disputed by any one who is at all acquainted with the spirit and genius of those languages (the latter of which is undoubtedly the daughter, or descendent, of the former) as well as the history of the nations to which they belong. The Arabs have also conferred upon Ali the furnames, or honourable titles, of Wasi, legatee, or beir, that is, of Mohammed, and Mortada, or Mortadi, which signifies beloved by, or acceptable to, God. The latter of which furnames corrupted, as has been observed by Mr. Ockley, some European travellers have prefixed to his name, and abfurdly called him Mortis Ali. The Shii, who are his followers, or rather adorers, often denominate him Faid Al Anwar, the distributer of lights and graces; and in Persian, Shah Mordman, the king of men, and Shir Khoda, the lion of GoD; which last seems to be a fort of translation of the first Arabic title here mentioned, that is undoubtedly of Hebrew extraction 2.

Ali and curied by the Khalifs of the bouse of Ommiyah.

But notwithstanding the fulsom, or rather impious, elobis family gies bestowed on Ali and his family, they were cursed publickly, and excommunicated, in all the mosques of the empire, during the reigns of the Kbalifs of the house of Ommiyab, from the accession of Moawiyab to the time of Omar Ebn Abd'alaziz, who suppressed that solemn malediction. Several Kbalifs likewise of the family of Abbas expressed a great aversion both to him and his posterity; such were Al Mo'taded and Al Motawakkel, to whom he is reported to have appeared in their fleep, and threatened them with his indignation. On the contrary, the Fâtemite Khalifs of Egypt ordered his name to be added to that of Mohammed in the publication of the times of prayer, which the Muedhdhins, or criers, made from the minarets, or steeples, of their mosques. The oriental writers mention several apparitions of Ali, after his death. and particularly those that happened in the days of the Kbalifs Al Mo'tasem, Al Mo'taded, Al Motawakkel, and Al Kader; in the last of which Ali seemed to be of an extraordinary stature, told Al Kader he should soon be advanced to the Khalifat, and recommended the care of his posterity to him b. one of the most striking and instructive: If a man would be rich without means, powerful without subjects, and subject without a master; let bim depart from sin, and serve God, and be will find these three things. One of his captains having one day asked him, with impudence enough, what was the reason that the reigns of Abu Becr and Omar, his predecessors, were so peaceable, and that of Othman and his own so full of thouses? the Khalif answered, with great acuteness and sagnity, in the following terms: "The reason is plain." It is because Othman and I served Abu Becr and Omar, during their reign; and Othman and I found no body to serve us

" but you, and fuch as are like you d." THERE is in the book Rabi Al Akyar likewise another of Ali's maxims, which is extremely remarkable, and diametrically opposite to the conduct of those who so highly value themselves upon account of their being his followers: "Take " care," faid he, " never to separate yourselves from the so-" ciety of the other Moslems. For, he that separates himself " from them belongs to the devil, as the sheep that leave the " flock appertain to the wolf. Give no quarter, therefore, to " him who marches under the standard of febism, though he " wears my turbant on his head; fince he carries along with " him the infallible mark of a man that walketh wrong." It has been remarked by M. D'Herbelot, that the sectaries who entertain such elevated sentiments of Ali have not only a turhave of a particular form, but likewise that they twist their heir in a different manner from that of the rest of the Mosdems. The family of Ali is divided into several branches; the principal of which is formed by the descendents of Hosein. the fecend fon of that Khalif; as this branch continues the lineal descent of the twelve Imams. Nevertheless, the family of Hafan, his eldest fon, who succeeded his father in the Khalifet, has produced several persons, who have made a considetable figure, and even occasioned insurrections in different provinces of the empire, under the government of the Khalife both of the house of Ommiyab and Al Abbas. From the former of these branches, and not the latter of them, as M. D'Herbelet has been pleafed to affert, fprung Mohammed, who was proclaimed Khalif at Medina in the year of the Hejra 145, and who assumed the title of Al Mobdi, or Mahadi, that is, the supreme, or general, director of the Moslems. This Mw Kholif, who was the great grandson of Hosein, had a brother called Ibrahim, who caused Irak, and a great part of Persia, to revolt at the same time from the Rhalf Abu Jagfar Al Mansur. But the movements occasioned in the empire by these two princes were not of any long continuance;

bis sayings.

Another of Besides the aforesaid maxims, or sentences, attributed to Ali, we find the following passage ascribed to him by Hosein Waez, in his paraphrase and commentary upon the Koran: 66 God has given men two Imâms, that is to fay, two pontiffs, or mediators, between him and them. The first is 66 the prophet, who is gone, and is no more amongst them. 46 The fecond, which remains, and always shall continue with them, is the prayer that they make to obtain pardon " of their fins f."

The descendents of Ali occasion Some disturbances in the empire.

THERE was another great grandfon of Hosein, notwithstanding what has been advanced to the contrary by M: D'Herbelot, besides that above-mentioned, who began to make a noise in the Khalifat of Harûn Al Rashid, named Yabya Ebn Abd'allah; but he was foon rendered incapable of executing any feditious defigns. This ill fuccess, however, did not hinder others of Ali's descendents, in successive periods of time, from making themselves masters of several provinces: as of Mazanderan, in the Khalifat of Al Mostain and Al Mo'taded, of Kermán, in the times of the princes of the family of Seljuk, of part of Khorafan and Tabaristan, in the days of the Soltans of Khowarazm, of Yaman and Cufa, and, in fine, of a great part of the provinces conquered by the Moslems in Africa. The Khalifat being afterwards transferred from the house of Ommiyah to that of Al Abbas, which was nearly related to Ali, as being descended from their common ancestor Hâshem, the Khalifs of the former family were excommunicated in their turn, in the same solemn manner that Moawiyah had excommunicated Ali and his family, in all the mosques within his jurisdiction. Ahmed, the third fon of Al Bûiyab, furnamed Moezo'ddawla, having made himself master of Baghdad, and consequently of the person of the Khalif At Mostaksi, of the house of Abbas, did not content himself with cursing and anathematizing publickly the family of Ommiyab by word of mouth, but he likewise ordered the malediction to be ingraved in large characters upon the gates of all the mosques; together with the principal causes of that These were, 1. which Mobammed had given his daughter Fâtema as a dower, when he married her to Ali. 2. Because the members of that family would not suffer Husan to be buried near the remains of his grandfather Mobammed. 3. Because the house of Ommiyab had excluded Abbâs, from whom the Khalifs of his family deduced their origin, from the number of those who were rendered capable of aspiring to the Khalifat after the death of Omar. The same Abmed had so high a regard for the memory of Ali, that he once intended to transfer the Kbalifut of Baghdâd from the branch of the house of Ali, or rather of Hashem, that then reigned, to his lineal descendents; tho' this design, however sanguine that prince might be in the formation of it, was never carried into execution.

Thus have we finished our history of the Khalifat of Ali, Ali one of and given our readers a fuller and more perfect account of the the great. memorable transactions of that great prince's reign than is to eff men be met with in any other author. And if we have been a ever prolittle more prolix than usual in our description of the princi-duced in pal events that happened during the short interval he sat upon Arabia. the Moslem throne, as well as of the principal tenets, and fate of his followers, even to the present time; this, we flatter ourselves, will not only be excused by, but even prove acceptable to, our curious readers; as it contains in it so very confiderable a part of the Arab history, and renders much more intelligible what is hereafter to follow. Besides, it would have been unpardonable in us, and so deemed by all our judicious and intelligent readers, to have been in any respect deficient in our relation of the glorious exploits of Ali. who was certainly by much the most considerable person, after Mohammed, that ever was born in the peninfula of the Nay, with regard to his courage, temper, and underflanding, he feems to have been at least equal, if not superior, to the Moslem prophet himself; and consequently from those who paid so great a deserence to Mohammed's decisions, he ought to have met with a better fate h.

follow the example of the apostle of God, who left the election to the people. However, his son Hasan, inheriting his father's piety, though not his courage, and being greatly esteemed on Ali's account, was advanced to the Khalifat, without any scruple or debate. In the public harangue that, as eldest son, he made to the people, immediately after his father was dead, he expressed his sense of the late Kholif's affaffination, as well as his superior merit, in the following remarkable terms: "You have killed," said he, "a man on "the fame night in which the Korân came down from heaet ven, in which I/a ascended into heaven, and in which " Joshua, the son of Nun, was slain. None of his predeces-" fors excelled him, nor will any of his fuccessors be ever equal to him." At his inauguration, which foon after followed. Kais addressed himself to him in this form: "Stretch out your hand, as a token that you will adhere to the book of God, as well as the collection of apostolic traditions, " and make war against all their opposers." Hasan answered, "Very willingly, as the book of God, and the traditions of his apostle, will always stand their ground." The principal of his other subjects then approaching, he insisted upon their being obedient to him, at peace with his friends, and at war with his enemies. The last of which articles by no means pleased the troops of Irâk, who, being greatly satigued with the Sprian war, had flattered themselves with the hopes of enjoying the sweets of a durable peace, after the new Kbalif had mounted the Moslem throne .

A rupture ed between Hasan and Moâwiyah.

BUT it was foon perceived, that, notwithstanding a fort apprehend- of treaty had been precipitately struck up between Ali and Moawiyah, a little before the violent death of the former, fuch measures were pursued by the latter, as must in a short time infallibly disturb the public repose. That prince kept on foot a powerful army, with which he threatened to make an irruption into Irâk. He looked with an evil eye upon Hasan, both before and after his father's death; and even refused to recognize his authority after his accession. Nay, he affigned as a reason for this, that Hasan Had been an accomplice in the murder of Othmân; which was a plain indication of his hostile intentions, as a greater affront than that could not have been offered him k.

In the mean time, Hasan was pressed by those about him to fers to re- come to an open rupture with Moawiyah; tho' he was of a most pacific disposition, looked upon the effusion of Moslem blood with the greatest horror, and consequently was by no means qualified for fuch an undertaking. However, he was at last prevailed upon, contrary to his inclination, to declare war against Moawiyah, and even to begin his march for the invalion of that prince's territories. As Ali had lest behind him a well-disciplined army, confishing of 60,000 men, who had entered into an engagement to support him, and his pretensions, to the last drop of their blood; Hasan was persuaded to carry on the war with vigour, and to exert himself in the profecution of it. Before the new Khalif, therefore, began his march, he fent Kais Ebn Saad towards the frontiers with a body of 12,000 men; of which Moawiyah receiving advice, he advanced to Masken, a place in the neighbourhood and district of Cûfa, where he took post with all his forces. But, before his arrival there, he sent Basher, or Bashar, Ebn Artab with a strong detachment to reconnoitre the enemy, and give him intelligence of their motions. Bashar happening to meet with the troops commanded by Kais Ebn Saad, a brisk dispute ensued between them; but which side had the advantage, we are not informed by any of the Arab historians. Soon after the end of the action, Hasan, with the army he led against Moawiyah, reached Al Madayen; but had scarce entered that place, when a spirit of mutiny, excited by the fudden murder of one of his men, inflamed the troops, and had like to have proved fatal to him. He was not only, without any regard to his distinction, thrown from his feat, but likewise wounded by some of the soldiery. Nay, upon his retiring into the castle of Al Madayen, in order to avoid a more tragical fate, the governor's nephew follicited his uncle to deliver him up into the hands of Moawiyah. To this the governor turned a deaf ear, and even rejected the proposal made by his nephew with indignation. However, Hasan, finding himself deserted by the troops of Irak, perceiving the other part of the army wavering in their fidelity to him, and being sufficiently frightened by the disturbance that had lately happened, wrote a letter to Moawiyah, offering, upon certain terms, to refign the Khalifat to him 1.

BEFORE the letter was fent away, his brother Hofein did and actuhis utmost to divert him from the resolution he seemed too ally resigns precipitately to have taken; representing to him, that nothing it. could be a more severe reflection upon his father's memory than fuch an unseasonable and ill-timed abdication.

Hasan being well apprized of Moawiyah's courage and activity on one fide, and of the perfidious disposition of the forces drawn from Irâk on the other, was determined to perfist in his former resolution. Nay, according to some authors, he had before rendered himself incapable of departing from it, by making a fimilar proposal to Moawiyah before the last action between Bashar Ebn Artah and Kais Ebn Saad, or Kais Ebn Said, and the disturbance that had happened at Al Madâyen. In answer to which, as we find intimated by the same authors, Moawiyah had sent him a carte blanche, or a full and unlimited power to prescribe what terms he should think fit; affuring him of an absolute compliance with them. This paper, however, according to what has been fuggested by them, seems not to have reached Hasan till he had sent his second letter; which induced him to desire an interview with Moâwiyah; wherein he infifted upon more advantageous conditions than those he had formerly demanded. But with these Moawiyab refused to comply; alledging, that it would be dishonourable in Hasan to deviate from his own terms. However, at last a treaty was figned by them both, which confisted of the following articles. First, Hasan shall receive all the money in the. treasury at Cufa. Secondly, Moawiyab shall assign him the revenue arising from Daraljerd, a district of considerable extent Thirdly, He shall never reflect upon the late Khalif in the presence of Hasan. Fourthly, He shall grant a pardon and amnesty to all those who adhered to Ali; and, after his death, to Hasan, in the former troubles that so distracted the Moslems. Fifthly, in consideration of these concessions, Hasan shall renounce all pretensions to the Khalifat, and consequently henceforth recognize the authority of Moawiyah, as supreme director of the Moslems, and emperor of the faithful. The money found in the treasury at Cufa amounted to 5,000,000 dirhêms; but this never came into Hafan's hands, as will hereafter more fully appear. Abu'l-Faraj relates, that the effusion of blood in the engagement between Bashar and Kais, which struck him with horror, first disposed Hasan to an accommodation; which manifestly implies, that, on both fides, many men must have been killed in that action. It has been observed by Al Makin, that Hasan and Moawiyah had an interview at Masken, in the 41st year of the Hejra, a little before the conclusion of the aforefaid treaty m.

the terms of the pacification, fet out in company for Cufa; into-which they made their public entry together, in a very amicable manner. Upon their arrival there, Moawiyah commanded Hasan, by Amru Ebn Al As's advice, to notify to the people in a speech his abdication; which he did in such terms as feemed to presage a new revolution. This so exasperated Moawiyah, that he ordered Hasan instantly to six down, and feverely reprimanded Amru for the advice he had given him. Nay, some authors say, that he was never afterwards thoroughly reconciled to that general. Be that as it will, as such a public speech from Hasan was altogether superfluous, it seemed to indicate a great want of judgment and discretion in Moawiyah to require this of him, especially as he might have been senfible that it would furnish an unhappy man with an opportunity of lashing him who had been the source of all his misfortunes. Before his departure from Cûfa, Hasan accused publickly the people of Irâk of his father's murder, of several infults offered to his person, and of plundering him of his lawful effects. The last crime he laid to their charge, their conduct after the conclusion of the late treaty proved them to be guilty of; for tho', by one of the articles of that treaty, the public money at Cufa ought to have been deposited in his hands, Moawiyah could not prevail upon the inhabitants of that city, the capital of the Arab Irak, to put him in possession of it, by any motive whatsoever. However, in order to compensate the loss Hasan sustained on this occasion, Moawiyah, whose ambition had been fo fully gratified, affigned him an annual penfion of 150,000 dinars, and made him several presents of very confiderable value. Being thus reduced to the condition of a private person, he and his brother Hosein retired to Medina, where he spent the remainder of his days. Most of his vast revenue he disposed of in acts of charity; and was so little attached to the things of this world, that he twice stripped himself of all he had, and thrice divided half of his substance amongst the poor. Notwithstanding his abdication, the Perstans affirm, that he was Khalif and Imam to the day of his death. They also, as well as the other followers of Ali, maintain, that he and his two fons were the three first lawful Imâms n.

AL MAKIN observes, that the first day of Hasan's Khalifat He reigns was Monday, and the last Friday; as also that he reigned six only about months and five days; but, according to Abu'l-Faraj, he sat six months. upon the throne sive months only. His father's last secretary continued in his post during the short Khalifat of Hasan; whose symbol, or motto, on his seal was, There is no God but God, the true and manifest king. Sharih Ebn Al Hareth, who had been Ali's principal judge, served his son Hasan also in the same capacity. After the conclusion of the late treaty, Hasan immediately ceded Cufa to Moawiyah, who, with his former competitor, made his public entry into that city on the 26th day of the former Rabi, or, as others will have it, on the same day of the former Jomada, in the 41st year of the That Masken, the place where Hasan and Moawiyab had had an interview before that entry, was about a station distant from Cufa, we may infer from Abu'l-Faraj o.

UPON Hasan's arrival at Medina, some of his friends there clines the greatly censured his conduct; which nevertheless has always command been urged by the Shiites as a demonstrative proof of the exof a body cellence of his disposition, and his tenderness for the people over whom, by their unanimous suffrages, he was appointed to prefide. The reasons he himself affigned for his conduct on this occasion were, that he was tired of the world, and that the Cufans were so faithless, perfidious, and mischievous a people, that it would be impossible for him ever to meet with any affistance from them. Which character of them was extremely just, tho' afterwards they seemed to be touched with remorfe for their traiterous behaviour to him. For, when he first entertained thoughts of a resignation, and told them, that 66 he was their commander and chief, of their prophet's fa-" mily, from which all pollution had been removed, and " which God had purified," they all burst out into tears, and wept so loud, that every one of them might have been heard to fob. They also shed many tears at his final departure from Cufa, after he had come to a fixed resolution to make Medina the place of his residence. Nor did that restless people fail giving some disturbance to his successor Moâwiyab; tho' we do not find, that this was attended with any fatal effects. For, the Kharejites, not long after Hasan's arrival at Medina, made an infurrection against Moawiyah, who thereupon defired him to lead an army against them. But Hasan declined the command of the army offered him, telling the Khalif, that, had he had a military genius, he should have exercised it against him, and not have taken leave of public affairs. Moawiyah probably offered him that command, with a view of shortening his days; since 'tis certain he conceived an aversion to him, on account of the foregoing

HASAN enjoyed the sweets of a private life about eight He is poiyears after his abdication, and died at Medina in the 40th year foned in the of the Hejra, coincident with the year of our LORD 669, year of the He was poisoned by his wife Jaadab, according to Hafedh Hejra 49. Abru, who had been bribed by Moawiyah with large presents to perpetrate that execrable crime. We are told by a very learned author, extremely well versed in oriental history, that, by an article of the foregoing treaty, Moawiyab engaged himself not to nominate a successor during the life of Hasan; but to leave him the power of chusing a certain number of persons, in whose hands the election of a new Khalif was to be lodged, as had formerly been done by Omar. But Moāwiyab having afterwards an inclination to leave the Khalifat to his fon Yezid, and not finding this practicable without the death of Hasan; in order to gratify his inclination, he prevailed upon Jaadab, by valuable presents, and by promissing her his son Yezid in marriage, to put a period to her husband's days. This she did, by rubbing him with a poifoned linen cloth, that had been fent her by Moawiyah for that purpose, which was the immediate cause of his death. Of which Moawiyah being apprized, he remitted her a fum of 500,000 dirbéms, as a reward for her villainy; but took care to keep far enough from her embraces his fon Yezid. Hasan was born in the third year of the Hejra, and died when he was about 47 lunar years of age. When he was at the point of death, his physician told his brother Hosein, that his bowels were confumed with poison. This greatly affected Hosein, who begged Hasan to impart to him the name of the murderer, which it feems he knew, that he might take vengeance of him for so barbarous an action. But this Hasan refused to do; saying, "O brother! the life of this world is " made up of nights that vanish away. Let him alone, till " he and I meet before the divine tribunal, where he will 66 certainly have justice done him." Some authors relate, that Jaadab was clear of the horrid fact laid here to her charge; and that certain of his servants, at the instigation of Moawiyah, found means to dispatch him. Be that as it will, it is universally agreed, that Moawiyah was the principal agent in this tragical affair, and had the chief hand in effecting his destruction. Hâsan was born in the middle of the month of Ramadân, and died either in the former Rabi, or Safar. Those who affert his wife to be innocent relate, that he had a poisonous draught given him by one of his servants, at the request, or rather command, of Moawiyab, which almost in stantly destroyed him. Hasan was of a very mild, humane, beneficent, and pious disposition; and deserved a much better fate. From the year of the Hejra, in which this prince was born, it appears pretty plainly, that his father Ali must have been at least fixty-three years of age at the time of his death, in agreement with what we find advanced by some good authors; and therefore could not have been then fo young as others have made him. Hasan performed five-and-twenty journies on foot, according to Al Makin, though he had horses, attending him in all those peregrinations 4.

Some remarkable particuing to bim and bis family.

AMONGST other traditions concerning this Khalif, current in all places where Islamism prevails, there is one that has been handed down to succeeding generations, containing selars relat- veral remarkable particulars of him. According to this, he was extremely like his grandfather Mohammed, who, as foon as he was born, spat in his mouth, and named him Hasan. That pretended prophet frequently expressed his fondness of this favourite child, fays the fame tradition, in a very difagreeable manner. When he was officiating in the mosque, little Hasan would sometimes clamber up to him; when, in order to please the boy, he would designedly prolong the prayers. Nay, sometimes in the midst of a discourse to the people, if he saw Hasan and Hosein approaching him, he would come down, embrace them, and take them up with him into the pulpit; and, after making an apology for his conduct on that occasion, proceed in his harangue. could not but greatly endear Hajan to all the Arabs, who had any real regard or veneration for the memory of Mohammed. Nor is it to be doubted but be would have firmly feated himself upon the Moslem throne, had he been a man versed in military affairs; fince the Syrians only fet up Moawiyah, because there was none to oppose them. We are told by an anonymous Arab writer, that, according to a tradition of Sefinah, the apostle's freed-man, Mohammed said, "The Kha-" lifat shall continue after me thirty years, and then shall commence a kingdom." From whence he inferred, that, as Mohammed's death preceded Hasan's abdication just thirty years, their apostle was a true prophet, and Hasan his rightful fuccessor. Al Bokhâri also relates, that Mohammed one day looking earnestly on little Hasan, then with him in the pulpit, broke out into the following prophetic exclamation:

"Opeople! by means of this son of mine, the LORD GOD "shall unite two great contending parties of the Moslems."
No wonder then that Hasan should still be reckoned, even by a vast number of the Sonnites themselves, so illustrious an Imâm. He had in all twenty children; sisteen of whom were sons, and sive daughters. The Persians maintain, that the succession of Imâms passed from Hasan to his younger brother Hosein. It may not be amiss to observe here, that Hosein, one of the descendents of Hasan, revolted in the Khalifat of Al Hadi Ebn Al Mobdi, according to M. D'Herbelot, and caused himself to be proclaimed Khalif at Medina, in the year of the Heira 169. But of this our readers may expect a full and particular account in its proper place.

Ans EBN MALEC reports, that a woman having once Hasan's made him a present of a bunch of fine herbs, he asked, whe generality ther she was a free-woman, or a slave? To which she re-to a female plied, a slave; but that nevertheless the herbs she had pre-slave. . sented him with were rare and curious. Upon which, he gave her her liberty, and said to those about him, "We have "been instructed by God himself to give to those that make "us presents something more valuable than what they bring "us." By which he intimated, that this moral instruction was contained in the Korân; which the Moslems are taught to receive as the word of God. This may be considered as an instance of that generous and munificent disposition for which he has been celebrated by some of the Arab historians.

It has also been related of this Khalif, that a slave having His generative ence thrown a dish of broth boiling hot, as he sat at table, rosity to upon him, and, fearing his resentment, immediately sell on another his knees, and repeated these words: "Paradise is for those slave." who bridle their anger." Hasan answered, "I am not angry." The slave proceeded; "and for those who form give men." "I forgive you," said Hasan. The slave, however, sinished the verse; adding, "for God loveth the beneficent," "Since it is so," said Hasan, "I give you your liberty, and sour hundred pieces of silver." A noble instance this of moderation and generosity!

THE following sentence of Hasan has been quoted by some One of bis of the Moslems. THOUGH Hasan, in his will, desired to be buried near his grandfather Mohammed, and therein left directions for that purpose; yet, as this was opposed by Said, the governor of Medina, Merwan Ebn Al Hakem, and all the grandees of the house of Ommiyah then in that place, Ayesha, in whose house the body of the prophet lay interred, would not fuffer his remains to be deposited there. This gave great disgust to all the members of Ali's family; fo that the animolities between them and the house of Ommiyab rose to a greater height than ever. According to some authors, therefore, he was inhumed in the common burying-place, called Al Baki, at Medina. Others fay, his body was placed in his mother Fâtema's tomb ; and, lastly, others relate, that it was buried at Yanbo, a town on the sea Al Kolzom, at no very great distance from Medina, without handing down to us any account of the circumstances attending that event x.

SECT. VI.

Moawiyah becomes fale emperor of the Moslems.

BY Hasan's refignation of the Khalifat, and the cession he made of the territories over which he presided, Moâwiyah became sole and supreme emperor of the Moslems. Hosein, indeed, Ali's second son, possessed the hearts of the people; but Maâwiyah, who was a man of steady conduct and great abilities, had the army at his devotion. He was the son of Abu Sosiân, who was one of the principal persons of the tribe of Kareish, and commanded the forces of that tribe both at the battles of Bedr and Ohod; in the latter of which he was victorious over the Moslems. His courage, riches, and great capacity, rendered him the most conspicuous person of his tribe; so that Mahammed met with vast opposition from him in the execution of his designs. After the action of Ohod, as one of the commentators on the Koran pretends, the Mesans were afflicted, at the prayer of the prophet, with so terrible a famine, that they were obliged to feed upon dogs, carnon, burnt bornes, and a fort of miserable food made of blood and camel's hair, called ilhiz, which the Arabs never used to eat but in times of extreme scarcity. At this sorrowful juncture, Abu Sofian expostulated with Mohammed in the following terms: "Tell me, I adjure thee by GoD and the rela-" tion that is between us, dost thou think thou art sent as a " mercy unto all creatures; fince thou hast slain the fathers " with the fword, and the children with hunger." This difcovered a fixed and fettled aversion at that time in this noble Arab to Mohammed and his followers; notwithstanding which. he found himself obliged to submit to that impostor, and embrace Islamism, in order to save himself and his family from immediate destruction, after the reduction of Mecca. wiyab and his wife declared their affent to the two fundamental articles of the Moslem creed, the same day that their sather Abu Sofian made profession of the Mohammedan faith. Abu Sofian, after his conversion, begged three things of Mohammed; that he would appoint him commander in chief of all his forces that were to act against the infidels; that he would make his fon Moawiyah his secretary, and marry his second daughter Gazah. The two first of which petitions he readily granted, but refused to comply with the third. Our curious readers will not be displeased to find here the substance of the prophet's prayer mentioned above, which was conceived in the following terms: "O God, fet thy foot strongly upon " Modar," an ancestor of the Koreisk, " and give them years " like the years of Joseph." Whereupon, as the commentator here referred to intimates, the aforesaid dreadful famine immediately enfued 7.

Soon after Moâwiyah had assumed the government, the The Khâ-Khârejites took the field against him with a considerable army. rejites The Khalif first made application to Hasan, to march against rebel. them with a body of Arabs; but that prince resusing to undertake such an expedition, he sent the Syrian troops to reduce the rebels to his obedience. These soon brought the Khârejites to a general action; but they were deseated with considerable loss, and the rebels remained masters of the field of battle. The Cusans, however, who were much better troops than the Syrians, being prevailed upon to take up arms, soon extinguished the rebellion, and settled Moâwiyah more firmly than ever upon the Moslem throne. We find this pernicious fect of the Kharejites called Charurgites by Theophanes, who just touches upon the rebellion mentioned here, He also denominates the Hashemites, or family of Hashem, Isamites, and the people of Irak, Heracites, or Herakites; but has handed down to us very few particulars relating to them. This Khalif had been an officer twenty years under Omar and Othmân, and had greatly distinguished himself in several expeditions. He was inaugurated in the month of the former Rabi, and the forty-first year of the Hejra. Soon after Ha-fan's abdication, he constituted Al Mogheirah Ebn Shaaba governor of Cufa, Abd'allah Ebn Amer of Basra and Khorasan, Merwan Ebn Al Hakem of Medina, and Abd'allah Ebn Hazem of Damascus, where, immediately after his departure from Cufa, he fixed his relidence. He also appointed again this year, that is, the 41st year of the Hejra, according to At Makin, Amru Ebn Al As, who had adhered to him with fo much fidelity, lieutenant, or viceroy, of Egypt z.

But notwithstanding the success Moawiyah had hitherto met with, Ziyad, his brother by the father's fide, tho' a bastard, vares Zi- refused a recognition of his authority. Ziyad was made go-yad in his vernor of Persia in the Khalifat of Ali, as has been already observed; and discharged his duty in that post with great reputation to himself, and advantage to the people. He was magnanimous and brave, and of an exceeding good capacity; tho' Abu Sofiân durst not own him for fear of Omar. He was both in the very year of the Hejra, and, by his eloquence and great abilities, so distinguished himself, that, at a meeting of the COMPANIONS in Omar's reign, Amru Ebn Al As publickly declared, that, had he been of the tribe of Koreish, he would have driven all the Arabs before him with his walkingstick. In Omar's time, he had been made a Kâdi, or judge; and Al Mogheirah, for incontinency, had been brought before him; but either out of favour, or because the witnesses failed in point of proof, he dismissed the person accused, and ordered the witnesses to be scourged severely. This could not but greatly indear him to Al Mogheirah, who, from that moment, contracted a most intimate acquaintance and cordial friendship with him. When Hasan resigned the Khalifat to Moawiyah, Ziyad was lieutenant of Persia, and resided in that quality at Islakhra, or Here he had erected a very strong citadel, for his Estakhr. farther security, which he made the place of his habitation, Menoiyah fearing left he should join the house of Hashem, and by that junction give him no small disturbance, owned him publickly for his brother; thinking this might be a means of bringing him over to his interest. In order likewise to facilitate the execution of his scheme, he procured the assistance of A Mogheirah Ebn Shaaba, his governor of Cafa; who made so good a use of his friendship with Ziyad, that at last he prevailed upon him to take the oath of allegiance to Moawiyah. The Kbalif, in return, by the testimony of the Greek slave, full living, on whose wife Abu Sofiân, being heated with wine, before the publication of the Koran, had begotten Ziyad, proved his bastard brother to be the real son of Abu Sofian, and consequently a member of the tribe of Koreish. testimony was so decisive, that it amounted to a full eviction of the point to be proved, and of course demonstrated, that Ziyad was most nearly related to the Khalif. However, this was the first time that the Korán was openly violated in a judicial way of proceeding. For, by the decision of that book, the child belonged to the Greek, as its legal father, who had married its mother; fince, according to this decision, which had been left by Mohammed as a direction in all fuch cases, the child was adjudged to the blankets, and the whore to the flone; that is, the child was to be brought up, and the whore to be stoned. This conduct, therefore, of the Khalif gave great difgust to his family, as a bastard had been thereby introduced into it, and his father's memory feverely reflected upon. But this gave no manner of uneafiness to Moawiyah; as, by bringing his scheme to bear, he had secured intirely in his interest the greatest man of the age. This important affair was thus happily terminated in the 42d year of the Hejra, according to Al Makin, and not the 44th, as we find afferted by Mr. Ockley; who does not only oppose the aforesaid author, but is likewise inconsistent with himself in what he has advanced on this occasion a.

THE 43d year of the Hejra was remarkable for the death Amru of the famous 'Amru Ebn Al As, of whom Mohammed is re-Ebn Al As ported to have faid, There is no truer a Mossem, nor any one and Abmore steedfast in the faith, than Amru. He was justly esteemed d'allah one of the greatest men amongst the Arabs of the age in Ebn Sawhich he lived, as standing distinguished from almost all his lâm diecountrymen by his quick apprehension, his solid judgment, his undaunted courage, his singular resolution, as well as his most profound fagacity and penetration. He was always excellent in his advice, fure and fixed in his resolves, and speedy in their execution. He was made lieutenant of Egypt, which he conquered in the Khalifat of Omar, and was continued by Othman four years in that post. Being afterwards dismissed by the last Khalif from that high office, he retired into Palestine, where he lived a private life. After Othman's death, at Moawiyah's invitation, he entered into his service, and was, indeed, his principal support. That Khalif sent him once more into Egypt, in the quality of lieutenant of that rich and fertile country; the whole revenue of which he allowed him. upon condition that he kept on foot a body of troops sufficient for its defence. We are told by an oriental author, that, before he embraced Islamism, he wrote some satirical pieces upon Mohammed; and that some of his proverbs and poetry are still extant. The dying speech he made to his children is said to be masculine and pathetic. In it he laments that he ever exercised his wit in exposing the prophet. This year likewise died Abd allah Ebn Salam, a Jew, very intimate with Mobammed, and an early convert to his religion. One of the Koreish lent him once 1200 ounces of gold, which he very punctually paid at the time appointed; and to this honest action a passage of the Korân is supposed to allude. He was believed by some to have affisted Mohammed in the compiling his pretended revelations; which if we admit, 'tis no wonder he should be so commended for his knowlege and faith in the Rorân. After the death of Amru, Moâwiyah made his brother, Atha Ehn Ahn Sofian, governor of Egypt, who died the following year. Okba Ebn Amer succeeded him, and was removed from his post in the year of the Hejra 45. After him came Moseilama Ebn Mokhalled of Medina, who exercifed the function of lieutenant of Egypt till the death of Moawiyah. Amru died on the festival of Al Fatar, and his son Abd'allah prayed over him at the place of his interment. About this time, Moawiyah proscribed and exercised great cruelties upon the followers of Ali, as we learn from Abu'l-Farai b.

was chiefly occasioned by Abd'allab's ill-judged lenity, who werner of would bring none of them to condign punishment; he fent Bafra, Ca-Al Hareth to preside over the Basrans in Abd'allah's room, and sa, Sijiscommanded him positively to put an end to all those disorders. tan, India, But this Hareth not being able to effect, Ziyad was dispatched Bahrein, to Basra, to extirpate the gang of banditti that so harassed the and Aminhabitants of that place and the neighbouring diffrict. When man, Ziyad first came thither, he found such violences, and even murders, committed in the night-time there, that it was not fafe to walk in the streets after sun-set. Having, therefore, convened the principal citizens, he expressed his abhorrence of those disorders that so disturbed the public repose in very severe terms; declaring, at the same time, his firm resolution to put an end to them. As he was the best orator of the age, except Ali, and the more he spoke the more he excelled, his speech made a deep impression upon the minds of all that heard it; and, to inforce what he there advanced with the greater spirit, he published an order, forbidding any person of what quality foever to appear in the ftreets, or in any public place, after the hour of evening-prayer, upon pain of death. To have this order punctually executed, he appointed parties of foldiers to patrol, and commanded them to put to the fword all that they should meet with out of their houses after that hour. This regulation produced an exceeding good effect. For, tho' the first night 200 persons were killed, the second night only five were slain, and the third none at all. In fine, by the prudent, as well as vigorous, measures taken on this occasion, the public tranquillity was reftored; which so pleased Moawiyah, that he annexed the lieutenancy of Khorafan, Sijistan, India, Babrein, and Amman, to Ziyad's government. The very name of Ziyad made all the villains within his jurisdiction tremble; tho' he was by no means of a cruel or barbarous disposition. However, as he ruled with the strictest justice. and obliged all men to pay a proper regard to his authority, the profligate part of the Khalif's subjects in those parts stood in great awe of him. He was fent to Bafra, according to Al Makin, in the 43d year of the Hejra; which renders it probable that he was constituted governor of Khorasan, Sejestân, Sejistân, or Sijistân, India, Buhrein, and Ammân, the following year. Nor can it well be doubted but that peace and harmony reigned in all those countries at least the remaining part of that year c.

In the 45th year of the Hejra, Ziyad sent Hukem Ebra Ebn Amer Amer with a body of troops to possess himself of a fortress and Zeid situated on mount Ashal. Hakem executed his orders with such-Ebn Tha- fuccess, that he killed a great number of the enemy, seized the place, and brought off with him all the riches he found is it. Ziyad receiving advice of this, dispatched a courier to him to demand the white and the yellow, that is, the silver and the gold, which had fallen into his hands, by virtue of a letter he had received from the Khalif; commanding him to fend this, irr order to have it deposited in the treasury for public use. But Hakem refused to comply with this demand; intimating to Ziyad, at the fame time, that an injunction of the Koran. which had fettled the distribution of the spoil in such a manner. as rendered his compliance unlawful, was superior in point of authority to any of the Khalif's letters. He, therefore, took out the fifth part of the spoil, declared by the Keran to belong to God, to the apostle, his kindred, the orphans, the poor, and the traveller, and divided the rest amongst the captors. After which, as he expected to fall a facrifice to the Khalif's refentment, for adhering to closely to the text of the Koran, he faid, O Goo! if I be in thy favour, take me." Which request, fays a Moslem writer, was granted, and he soon after died. This year was likewise fatal to Zeid Ebn Thabet, one of Mohammed's secretaries, when he dictated the Koran, who departed this life in it. He wrote the copy which was used by the Khalifs, or Imams, at the command of Othman Ebn Affan, that remained many ages after, and was written in an exceeding fair hand. Zeid was a man of surprizing parts. He learned Hebrew so well in sisteen days, as to be able to read the books of the Yews with great facility. Perfic he also learned of one of Khofrů's embassadors, in eighteen days; as likewise Ethiopic, Greek, and Captic, of one of Mohammed's flaves, in a very short time. He was extremely pleasant and facetious at home, but very referved abroad. We are told by an Arab author, that, at the battle of the ditch, he was fifteen years old. One of his remarkable fentences was, He that pays not a proper regard to men will not reverence God. In the year we are now upon, Merwan Ebn Al Hakem, the governor of Medina, performed the pilgrimage to Mecca. We must not forget to observe, that, according to Mr. Ockley's writers, Ziyad was appointed lieutenant of Bafra by Moâwiyah, in the 45th year of the Hejra; nor that this is confirmed by the concurrent testimony of Abu Jaafar Al Tabari 4.

THE following year, Moawiyab bribed a Christian slave to The repossion Abd'alrahman, the son of the famous Khaled Ebn Almarkable Walid, who was become extremely popular amongst the sol-events diers, both on his father's account and his own, being him-that bapfelf a person of distinguished merit; which not a little ex. pened in cited the jealousy of the Khalif. Abd'alrahman had just be-the 46th fore made an incursion into the imperial territories, where, the Hamiltonian into the imperial territories, where, the Hamiltonian into the imperial territories, where, the Hamiltonian into the imperial territories, where the content is the same of the content in the notwithstanding the Greek garisons left to defend them, he committed dreadful depredations; laying waste almost whole provinces, without opposition. The slave was prevailed upon to perpetrate this villainy, by a promise Moawiyah made him, not only to remit his tribute, but likewise to confer upon him the government of Hems. However, he did not long enjoy the fruits of his wickedness, having been soon cut off by Abd'alrahmân's son, Khâled; who was imprisoned for this by the Khalif, but afterwards released on paying the money for expiation demanded in all fuch cases. This year was also remarkable for the execution of Hejer, a person of singular piety and austerity of life, but a great friend to Ali, and consequently an avowed enemy to the house of Ommiyab. He was not afraid several times to affront Ziyad, nor even to curse him to his face; which induced that governor, who refided fix months of the year at Cafa, where Hejer had his habitation. and the other fix at Basra, to press the Khalif to put him to death, left, during the time of his absence, he should raise at Cufa some commotions. Moawiyab, therefore, especially as he had not scrupled likewise to speak reproachfully of him, sent an order for his execution; which was performed at Gadrah, or Gadarah, a village near Damascus, where Hejer behaved with surprizing intrepidity and resolution. After his head was ftruck off, his body was washed, and buried in the chains that had been fastened upon it before his death, in pursuance of the directions he had given. Several of his accomplices also suffered with him. These executions not a little displeased Aresha, who had interceded for Hejer and his companions in vain, and who did not fail to upbraid Moawiyah with the cruelty he discovered on this occasion, the next time she law him at Medina. In the mean time, according to Abu'l-Faraj, one Sapor, who had seized Armenia, sent an embassador to Moawiyah, named Serji, or Sergius, to desire his affistance against the Greeks. Another embassador likewise came at the same time from the Greek emperor, called Andrew, who was a eunuch, and one of that prince's particular favourites, in order to hinder Moawiyah from fending any succours to the tebel Sapor. Moawiyah did not seem ftrongly disposed to inten to either of them; but only in general told them, that, as both their masters were enemies to him, he would grant his Mod. HIST. Vol. II. protection to that prince who would pay him the most for it. Upon which, Andrew retired, and had the next day another audience of the Khalif, whom he found in conference with Sergius, his antagonist. As the latter did not rise from his feat, when Andrew made his appearance, the Greek embaffador took great offence at his conduct, and gave him some very opprobrious language for it; which the other returned. by reproaching him with the loss of his virility. This so incensed Andrew, that he threatened him with the infliction of a certain punishment that should occasion a similar defect in After which, begging the Khalif again not to affift Saper, that prince answered him in the following terms: "Give 44 us the whole revenue of your dominions, and we will permit 46 you to be called the lords of them; which if you refuse. " we will drive you out of them." "Then," replied Andrew, "you look upon the Arabs as the substance, and the Greeks as the shadow only; we must, therefore, implore "the assistance of the Lord of heaven and earth." Then, after having obtained an audience of leave, he returned home. by the way of Malatia, the Melitene of Ptolemy, which some place in Cappadocia, and others in Armenia; acquainting the imperial governors, or prefects, posted on the frontiers, with the affront he had received from Sergius, whom he begged them to intercept in his passage through the emperor's territories. This they did, carried him to Malatia, castrated him there, and then dismissed him with his testicles hung about his neck. Moawiyah Ebn Amer and Basbar Ebn Artab greatly extended the Moslem conquests in Africa this present year, penetrating to the very heart of Africa Propria, or the territory of Carthage, and the spot on which the city of Kairwan stood. The forces commanded by those generals in this expedition, confifting of about 10,000 men, reduced Karan. or Karana, Cafsa, and several other towns. When they eame to the foot above-mentioned, they found that a town had been erected there by Moawiyah Ebn Khodhaj, which, according to Abu Jaafar Al Tabari and Al Makin, by no means pleased them. We are told by a very learned author, that the city of Kairwan was either built, repaired, or enlarged, by Okba Ebn Nafe', who formed a fettlement upon this spot immediately after Amru Ebn Al As had conquered Barka. The same author also relates, that the Khalif Moawiyah ordered a proper garison to be left at Kairwan, which stood about 33 parasangs of Carthage, and 12 of the sea, in order to secure the country from the insults of the Roman and Sicilian fleets, to keep the perfidious Africans in awe, and to have a place of fafety in which he might deposite the prodigious treasures he had amassed. Some of the writers followed level by Golius affirm, that the Moslems carried their arms as far as the borders of Nigritia this campaign; which may not be very remote from truth: but that the conquests here mentioned were made in the 40th year of the Hejra, as Golius seems to believe, or rather positively afferts, we must not admit; since certain Arab historians of good repute, who place this expedition in the 40th year of that ara, will not permit us to give our affent to such an opinion .

THE next year, being the 47th year of the Hejra, we Notbline meet with scarce any thing remarkable performed by the Kha- very relif Moâtviyah; except we will allow, that he first harangued markable the people this year from the pulpit in a litting posture, to bappens in which he was obliged by the prominence of his belly, and the the year of great quantity of fat he carried about with him; and that he the Hejra began this year to preach before he faid prayers, fearing that 47. the people would otherwise retire out of the mosque before he had delivered all that he had to say to them. As the introduction of these two customs may be considered as a variation from the practice of all his predecessors, it has been looked upon as a remarkable event, and feems to have been placed in the 47th year of the Hejra by Abu'l-Faraj. About this time also Bashar, one of Modwiyah's commanders, as we learn from Theophanes, made several dreadful incursions into the Christian territories, plundering and laying waste all the country through which he moved f.

ABOUT the latter end of the following year, Medwiyab The Arabu fent his son Yezid with a powerful army to besiege Constanbesege timople. The Arab authors have transmitted down to us no Constandaction of the particulars of that siege; but only mention tinople is three or four of the most eminent of the COMPANIONS, vain. whose zeal, notwithstanding their great age, prompted them to attend the army on this occasion, and to sustain incredible satigues. The Mostem forces suffered extremely in their march; but they were animated to surmount all difficulties, by a samous tradition; according to which, the prophet, in his life-time, declared, that "the sins of the first army which "should take the city of Cassar were forgiven." According to Theophanes, this army, when on its march, was joined by a body of Arab troops, under the command of one Fadal, or Fadl, an Arab general, sent by Mostawiyab to the affistance of Sapor, who came to an untimely death. event, Fadl had been reduced to great straits, out of which he was happily delivered by the forces under the conduct of Yezid. After this junction, Yezid marched to Chalcedon, where for some time he remained, and consequently kept Constantinople in a manner blocked up; tho' it does not appear from Theophanes, notwithstanding what has been advanced to the contrary by the Moslem historians, that he ever formed the siege of that city. After a short stay in the neighbourhood of Chal= cedon, the Moslem army decamped, and took its rout through Phrygia, on its return home, with a confiderable number of prisoners. In their passage, the Arabs possessed themselves of Amorium, a city of Phrygia, in which they left a garifon of 5000 men. In this expedition, the famous Abu Ayub, who had been with Mohammed at the battles of Bedr and Ohod, lost his life. His tomb is held in such veneration amongst the Moslems, that the Soltans of the Othman family gird their swords on at it, upon their accession to the throne. A detachment of the imperial forces retook Amorium the following winter, when all the neighbouring tract was covered with fnow, by furprize, and put all the Arab garifon they found therein to the fword 8.

The death of Hasan. THE 49th year of the Hejra produced no remarkable event, an account of which has been handed down to us by the Moslem historians, except the death of Hasan, the last Khalif, who was poisoned in the manner already related. Mosawiyah is said to have insulted his ashes in an indecent manner; which occasioned some verses to be written upon him by one, who seems not to have been a friend of the house of Ommiyah. These verses, or rather some sew of them, have been preserved by Abu Jaafar Al Tabari h.

THE next year Al Mogheirah died of the plague, which made great havock there, at Cafa. He was the governor of that city at the time of his death, a very active man, of quick parts, and had lost one of his eyes at the battle of Yermouk; tho' some pretend, that this loss was occasioned by viewing an eclipse. According to Abulfeda, the new city of Kairwan, was pretty near finished this year, though the last hand was not put to it till the 55th year of the Hejra. Some authors affirm, that the Arabs considered it as the capital of Africa Propria, or the territory of Carthage; and that it stood upon the spot which had been formerly occupied by the antient Cyrene. We have a confused and indistinct account of this city given us by Mr. Ockley, that does not fufficiently correspond with what has been related of it by the authors to whom he refers his readers. Kair wan afterwards became very eminent, not only for its stately buildings and immense wealth, but likewise for the study of the sciences and polite literature, which flourished there. This year also Moawiyah prevailed upon many of the Moslems to take the oath of allegiance to his fon Yezid, as his partner, or collegue, in the Khalifat; but neither Abd'alrahman Ebn Abu Becr, Hofein Ebn Ali. Abd'allah Ebn Omar Ebn Al Khattab, nor Ab-"allah Ebn Zobeir Ebn Al Awam, would concur with the other principal Arabs in this particular. About this time died Rahira, one of the earliest converts to Islamism, who, according to Mobammed, resembled more than any of his countrymen the angel Gabriel i.

THE following year, being the 51st year of the Hejra, Moawi-Saad Ebn Zend, the last of those who had a positive promise yah dares of paradife from Mohammed, departed this life. About the not remove same time, Moâwiyab, who then resided at Damascus, not Mohamthinking it proper, that the pulpit and walking-stick of the med's pulprophet should remain in the hands of the murderers of Oth- Pit. man, gave orders to have them both carried from Medina. But the moment some of the Arabs, in obedience to the Khalif's commands, were upon the point of removing them, to their great aftonishment and surprize, there happened such an eclipse of the sun, that the stars themselves very clearly appeared. This threw them into the utmost consternation, as it seemed to them a manifest indication of the divine displeasure, for their presuming to lay hands upon the apostle's pulpit, in order to remove it from the place where he himself had ordered it to be fixed. Being, therefore, extremely frighten'd at so unusual, and, as they apprehended, so supernatural, an event, they immediately defifted from carrying the Khalif's design into execution. Nay, it made so deep an impression upon their minds, that it was not forgotten some years afterwards, when the Khalif Abd'almalec had the same design in view. One of the citizens of Medina, in order to divert him from it, then represented to him, that a prodigy had happened on a fimilar occasion in the reign of Moawiyah; and that a tradition, derived from Mohammed himself, pronounced fuch an attempt highly criminal: upon which, that prince laid aside all thoughts of executing any part of the scheme he had formed. After him, Al Walid, in his pilgrimage, meditated the removal of the prophet's pulpit from Medina; but the people of that city discovering a great teluctance to put it into the hands of the messenger he sent for it; telling him, that "his mafter, by removing it, would exof pose himself to the divine displeasure;" he permitted it to remain in its former fituation. Amru Ebn Abd'alaziz afterwards proposed the attempt Moawiyah, Abd'almâlec, and Al Walid, intended to have made, to Soliman Ebn Abd'almalec, when he came in pilgrimage that way; but neither would he give his consent that the pulpit should be taken from the spot on which it had been first erected. Moawiyab's intention in the point above-mentioned, or rather his discovery of that intention, has been placed by Ebn Al Athir some-where near the 51st, or the 52d, year of the Hejra; but as a remarkable solar eclipse is said to have happened in the 54th year of this zera, it may perhaps, with greater propriety, be ranked amongst the principal events of that year k.

When the expedition to Configuration nople was under-taken.

Tho' the authors followed by Mr. Ockley place Yezid's expedition to Conflantinople, or rather Chalcedon, in the 48th year of the Hejra, as has been already observed; yet it was not in reality undertaken till four years after, if we will believe Abu Jaafar Al Tabari. According to that historian, Aba Ayub, who either was killed, or died a natural death, whilst the Moslem army remained in the neighbourhood of Constantinople, was buried at the foot of the wall of that city. He had distinguished himself in Mohammed's life-time against those who endeavoured to obstruct the progress of Islamism, and was one of the most celebrated of the Companions.

Ziyad

In the 53d year of the Hejra, the famous Ziyad, who makes to confiderable a figure in the Arab hiltory, departed this life; being at his death about fifty-three years of age. He died of the plague on the third day of the month of Ramadan. A little before he was feized by the fatal differinper that put a period to his days; he informed the Khalif, that he had intirely reduced Irâk to a state of subjection to him, and begged that he might have the lieutenancy of Arabia Petresa conferred upon him; which was immediately granted. The Arabs of that country, being apprized of this, were struck with great terror and consternation, as knowing with what rigour and severity he had governed the people of Irâk. Upon the first news of it, Ebn Amer, attended by a vast number of the people, went to the temple of Mecca, and, with great fer-which and devotion, begged, that God would never permit to come amongst them. In the mean time, Ziyad being eited with the plague, felt such an intolerable pain in one of hands, that he confulted a Kudi, as a spiritual director, whether he might not cut it off, without being guilty of any citine: but received for answer from him, that such an action absolutely unlawful. However, notwithstanding this decition, the pain increasing to such a degree as rendered it insimportable, he came to a resolution to submit to amputation: the, at the fight of the fire and the cauterizing irons, that were to be made use of in the operation, his heart immediately failed him. We are told by a Moflest author of good staute, that, at this time, Ziyad had an hundred and fifty phylicians about him; three of whom had formerly belonged to Kbefru, the son of Hormuz, king of Persia; but as the time of his death was coming on, or, to make use of our author's words, the decree was fealed, and the thing determined. they found it impossible to fave him. He was buried near Cifa, by which place he palled in his journey to Arabia, whither he was going, in order to take possession of his new go-gernment there. When Abd'allah Ebn Amer heard of his death, he is reported to have faid, "Go thy way, thou for of Somyab; this world did not flay with thee, neither half thou attained to the other." In order to understand which fentence more perfectly, it will be proper to observe, that Seminab was the name of the Greek flave's wife, on whole body Abu Sofian was supposed to have begotten Ziyad; and that Abd'allah Ebn Amer was the person Ziyad succeeded in the government of Bafram. UPON Ziyad's first arrival at Cufa, the lieutenancy of which Some acplace was annexed in his favour to that of Basra, as has been count of already observed, he told the Cufans, that at first he proposed bim.

Upon Ziyâd's first arrival at Câsa, the lieutenancy of which Son place was annexed in his favour to that of Basra, as has been con already observed, he told the Câsans, that at first he proposed bin to have brought with him a body of 2000 men, as his guards; but that afterwards considering that they were honest men, he had taken care only to be attended by his own family. This did not hinder them from throwing dust, or rather gravel, at him. Upon which, he ordered his domestics to secure the doors of the mosque where the people of the city were assembled, and commanded every man there to seize his neighbour. Then he had the persons seized brought before him, and as many of them as would purge themselves by oath of the late insult that had been offered him, he immediately dismissed; but ordered the hands of all the others, who amounted to about eighty, to be cut off upon the spot. Soon after which.

he issued an order, injoining all the citizens of Cufa to leave their doors open all night; engaging himself to indemnify. every particular person for any loss he should sustain by complying with it. No theft, or robbery, was committed after the introduction of this custom; but some cattle one night finding their way into a shop, did considerable damage there. Of which when Ziyad was informed, he permitted every one of the inhabitants to leave a hurdle, or rake, at his door; which practice prevailed ever after at Bafra, and many other towns of Irâk. As no one durst appear out of his house after the hour of evening-prayer, 'tis no wonder the Cufans should have been so secure in the possession of their properties and effects; nor can it be any matter of surprize, that the order injoining this should have been so punctually observed, when it is known, that the least contravention of that order was punished with immediate death. Of this the following instance may serve as an evident proof: A shepherd coming one night through the town with his flock, was feized by one of Ziyad's patrols, and instantly brought before him. The poor man, in defence of himself, when he was accused of having contemned the governor's late edict, faid, that he was intirely ignorant of it. Ziyad replied, "I am willing to 66 believe, that what thou tellest me is true; but as the safety of all the Cufans depends upon thy death, it is necessary that thou shouldst die." This sentence was no sooner pronounced than his head was struck off, to the inexpressible terror of all those who were present at the execution. But tho' Ziyâd's wholsome severities fell heavy upon certain individuals, and in some other countries might seem to have savoured of cruelty, yet they kept the inhabitants of Irâk, a very faithless and treacherous people, in awe of him; infomuch that, according to Abu Jaafar Al Tabari, the citizens of Bafra, as well as those of Cufa, never feared any one more than Ziyad, tho' they enjoyed an uninterrupted repose under his just and impartial administration n.

But whatever may have been advanced to the contrary by the last-mentioned author, the following remarkable story of him is an evident proof that he had something cruel and savage in his distriction. One Abu'l Mogheirah having been once brought before him, by his command, as the most religious man in Cisfa, he offered to give him as much money as he should defire, if he would confine himself to his apartment, and not go to the mosque to perform his devotions. Abu'l Mogheirah replied, that he would not omit saying his prayers

publickly on the congregation day, or Friday, for the empire of the world. "Then," faid Ziyad, "go to the congrega-" tion, but do not talk in the mosque when you are there." " I must," answered the religious, " encourage that which is 66 good, and reprove that which is bad." For which answer, tho it be a precept pretty frequently mentioned in the Koran, Zizad commanded him to be immediately beheaded. Nay, as a farther instance of something that at least resembled cruelty in him, it may be observed, that he assembled the people a little before his death, in order to impose upon them a fort of abjuration, or renunciation by oath of every kind of connexion with the friends of the house of Hashem threatening with death all who would not submit to such a renunciation. But at the appointed time, when this affair. should have been brought to a conclusion, the people being affembled for that purpose, he was seized with the plague, and never afterwards made his appearance amongst them; which they all, and especially those who retained any veneration for the memory of Ali, confidered as a very providential deliverance. To what has been said of this famous Mossem, we may add, from Khondemir, the Persian historian, that the last letter he wrote to Moawiyah was couched in the following terms: "My left-hand is here employed in governing the " people of Irak; but my right-hand is idle; put Arabia in-" to it, to be governed, and it will give you a good account " of it." Which request being granted, and the inhabitants of Medina thereby greatly alarmed, Abd allah Ebn Zobeir, one of them, in his public prayers, offered up to God this petition: "O Goo! fatisfy this right hand, which is "idle and superfluous to Ziyad." Which words, as has been justly remarked by Mr. Ockley, contain a very beautiful allufion to the name of Ziyad; fignifying, in Arabic, abundant, or superfluous; and are perfectly consonant to the spirit and genius of that expressive and harmonious language. Soon after this prayer, according to an Arab author, a pestilential ulcer feized one of the fingers of his right-hand, of which he lay ill a few days, and then expired in exquisite torture. Some of his descendents formed a dynasty in Yaman, where they reigned under the name of the Banu Ziyad. The Kharejites, as well as the partisans of Ali, made some attempts to disturb his administration; but, by his severe and rigorous conduct, he proved superior to them, and in a short time extinguished all their commotions. In fine, by the sword which he drew, to make use of Abu Jaafar's expression, he smoothed the Khalif's government in Irâk, and so effectually slenced all murmurings and complaints there, that not one of

But Ziyad's administration, rigorous and severe as it was must have been deemed gentle and mild in respect of that of Samrah, his lieutenant at Bafra, who was abhorred by all then for his cruelty. During Ziyad's fix months absence from Basra, he residing one half of the year at Cufa, Samrah had put to death no less than 8000 persons there; which greatly shocked Ziyad; who asked him, whether he was not afraid. lest, in such a number, he might have murdered one innocent Moslem? Samrab replied, that, if he had destroyed double that number of Bafrais, it would not have given him the least uneafiness or concern. According to Abu Sawar, he killed forty-seven Moslems one morning; every one of which had got the Korân by heart. A party of his horse marching out of the city on a certain occasion, and meeting a pealant at a little distance from it, one of them struck him through with his lance. Samrab, foon after coming up, found the poor wretch wallowing in his own blood; and, upon inquiry, was told, that one of his men had accidentally killed him. To which he made no other reply than, "When you hear we are mounted, beware of our lances." This year, being the fifty-third of the Hejra, Jabalah Ebn Al Aybam, the last king of Gbassan, a large account of whom our readers will find in a preceding part of the hillory we are now upon, departed this life; but what country, city, or town, was the scene of this event, we are not certainly informed. If Yezid did not penetrate through Armenia and Natolia, and advance as far as the suburbs of Constantinaple with his army, before the 52d year of the Hejra, as we find afferted by M. D'Herbelot, he could not well have finished his expedition, and atrived at Damascus, before the commencement of the following year; especially if we will admit, with the last-mentioned author, that he fowed and reaped whilst his forces remained in the neighbourhood of that capital. Be that as it will, the Turks, even at this day, visit the tomb of Abu Ayub above-mentioned with great devotion, and call the foot where his body lies intefred Eyub. Some of the writers followed by D'Herbelot seem to intimate, that, soon after the foregoing expedition. Modwiyab fent his fon Yezid with an army to reduce the rebels of Abwaz, who refused a recognition of his authority. Yezid, in pursuance of his orders, according to these writers, marched with great celerity to the plain of Dowlab, on the con-

In the 54th year of the Horn, Modwinah dismissed Said The Araba from the government of Million, and restored Mirrotin Ebit Al make an Billin to that honourable post. After this, he dispatched an inchified order to Meistban, to demolish Sauge's house, and seize all his into Bukcalls in Hejáz. Upon Meriván's appearance at Medina, haria. with a mule to earry off every thing valuable that belonged to Shad, the Vatter was extremely surprized, and begged Mernot to ftrip him in lo unmerciful a manner. But the new governor told him, that the Kbalif must be obeyed; and that if he had received an order, during his government, to have pulled down his, Merwan's, house, he would not have failed executing it. Upon this, Saud produced a letter; formerly fint him by Melawiyah, commanding him to demolish Merwith's house; which, out of friendship, he had ventured to disobey, and thereby incurred the Rhalif's displeasure. This generous action of Saad to firuck Mertoan, that he never ceased interceding with Micholyab for his friend, till he had phevailed upon him to revoke the late unjust command. Both the governors now clearly perceived, that the Rbalif's view in issuing the streeting orders, was to let them at variance; but the discovery of this wicked design served only the more effectually to strengthen the ties of friendship between them, About the fame time, Modiviyah deposed Samrah, Ziyad's deputy at Bafra, whose enormous cruelty had rendered him juilly odious to all the inhabitants of that city. As foon as Samrab heard this news, he is reported to have faid, "God " turfe Moawiyah. If I had served God so well as I have " ferved him, he would not have damned me to all eter-" nity." A faying this, which sufficiently discovered the internal deformity of his foul, and the desperation to which he had been driven by a consciousness of his crimes. Within the course of this year, the Rhalif likewise appointed Obei-Pallah, the fon of Ziyad, who gave him a very fatisfactory account of the conduct of all his father's deputies, in their respective provinces, lieutenant of Khorasan. Soon after he

She had only time to put on one of her buskins; so that she was obliged to leave the other behind her. This, therefore, fell into the hands of the Arabs, who valued it at no less than 2000 dinars 9.

An infarente Mr. Ocfome observations not altogether to be dopended mpan.

IT has been remarked by Mr. Ockley, that there was a pretty extraordinary eclipse, and such a one as happened at Medina, drawn by when Moawiyah ordered Mohammed's pulpit to be removed from that place, in the 54th year of the Hejra; from whence kley from he seems to infer, that the command relative to this affair was given in that year, tho' he actually places it two or three years earlier. But perhaps this inference is not altogether to be depended upon, as he has produced no authority in support of the observations from whence it is drawn, and as Eutychius afferts that a folar eclipse, equally remarkable, happened in the 50th year of that zera. For, from thence we may with at least equal justice infer, that the aforesaid attempt was made in the 50th year of the Hejra .

The Khalîf sends meru go-Khoraſân.

ABD'ALLAH, the fon of Amru, having commanded a Moslem's hand to be cut off, for throwing dust, or gravel, at him whilst he was preaching to the people of Basra, of which veruors to place he then was governor; some of the principal men of Basra and the city complained of his conduct to Moawiyab, who removed him from his post, and substituted Obeid'allah Ehn Ziyad in his room. The lieutenancy, therefore, of Khorasan becoming vacant by this removal, the Khalif conferred it upon one Allam, who had not the least merit to recommend him to his master's favour; so that nothing worthy the attention of an historian happened in that province during the short term he presided over the people there. Nor did the year we. are now upon, that is, the 55th of the Hejra, produce any other remarkable occurrences, at least such as have been taken notice of by the Moslem historians s.

is called by Theophanes, Busur, continued his incursions into christian territories, which he ravaged without opposition, and conducted from thence a vast number of captives into the salf s dominions. Mohammed Ebn Abd allah and Kais, two Explem commanders, appeared at the head of a confiderable andron of thips on the coast of Cilicia, with a body of landforces on board; the first of whom took up his winter-quarten at Smyrna, and the other in Lycia and Cilicia. The Khalif fitted out another fleet, the command of which he gave to one Khâled, called by Theophanes Chale, with orders to suftain that fent to cruize on the coast of Cilicia, in case of need. The following spring the combined Moslem fleet presented itfelf to the view of the Christians on the coast of Thrace, firetching along from the western promontory, known by the name of Magnaura, to the eastern one, called Cyclobium. Frequent conflicts happened between it and that of the Christians; the particulars of which have not been handed down to us. However, it should seem as if the Arabs were superior in those engagements; fince we have been told by some writers, that they besieged Constantinople the whole summer and spring for several years after the 53d year of the Hejra, or of CHRIST 672; but were received with fuch vigour and resolution by the emperor, that they thought it adviseable to withdraw always in the month of September to Cyzicus. In this long siege, or rather repeated fieges, the Arabs loft incredible numbers of men, and many ships consumed by sea-fire, as it was called, because it burnt under water; being the invention of one Callinicus, a native of Heliopolis in Egypt. The Arabs at length, despairing of succels, abandoned the enterprize; but as they were returning home, their fleet was shipwrecked off the Scyllaan promontory. About the fame time, three of the emperor's lieutenants, Florus, Petronius, and Cyprianus, gained a fignal victory in Syria over Sofiân Ebn Awf, who commanded there a numerous body of Arabs; but lost in the engagement 30,000 These missortunes encouraged the Mardaites, of his men. or Maronites, to seize on mount Libanus, where they fortified themselves; and being joined by multitudes of Chriflian captives, flaves, and others, flocking to them from all parts, they reduced the whole country between mount Taurus, written corruptly Maurus in the present copies of Theophanes and Cedrenus, and Jerusalem, made frequent incursions into Syria, and so harasted and terrified the Arabs, who thought that God himself at this juncture interposed, in favour of the Christians, that Moawiyah not imagining himself able to contend with them and the Romans at the same time, sent embassadors to treat of peace with Constantine, who met with a gracious reception at the imperial court.

The emperor, in order to facilitate an accommodation, which Mognitude seemed so ardently to desire, sent with the Arab smbassadors, on their return home, John Pitzigaudes, a perfon of great age and experience, to Syria; where, after feyeral conferences, a peace was concluded on the following terms. I. That it should be inviolably observed by both nations for the space of thirty years. 2. That the Arabs should retain the provinces they had feized. 3. That they should pay yearly, by way of tribute, to the emperor and his fuccesfors 3000 pounds weight of gold, fifty flaves, and as many choice horses. It may not be improper to observe here, that, according to the Chr stian historians referred to, in the 53d year of the Hejra, there was a dreadful mortality in Egypt ; in the 54th, Sofian Ebn Auf was defeated by Florus, Petronius, and Cyprianus, in Syria; in the 55th, the year we are now upon, Abd'allah Ebn Kais and Fadl, two Arab generals, made a descent on Crete, with a body of Mostem troops, and passed the ensuing winter there; and, in the 58th, a treaty was figned hetween Canstantine and Moawiyab. The articles of the treaty here mentioned not having been extremely honourable to the Arabs, 'tis not so much to be wondered at, that both they, and the military operations that preceded them, should have been denied a place in the writings of the Moslem historians F. east been fet in a full light by that author; so that we shall ourselves obliged to have recourse to another Arab writer, places it in the 56th year of the Moslam zera, in order give our readers a more perfect and fatisfactory account of "Meaniyab intending to secure the succession in his fay, formed a delign to render the government, that had hitherto elective, hereditary; and, for this purpose, used means imaginable to oblige the people to declare Yexid his and successor. In order to carry which design effectually execution, he imagined nothing farther would be requisite m to engage them to take an oath of fidelity to Yezid, as his elegue, and partner in the empire. This had been first sugto Meawiyab by Al Mogheirab, the late governor of Cabut was disapproved of by Ziyad, whom the Khalif had conted upon the affair, because he knew Yezid to be a profligate young fellow, addicted to gaming and drinking, and by no neans qualified to govern the Arabs. He, therefore, pernaded both Yezid and Modwiyah, at least for the present, to all thoughts of it aside. But, after Ziyad's death, Medwho was always fond of the project, in the 56th year the Hejra, revived it, and wrote circular letters to the principal men in all the provinces about it. The Syrians, and people of Irak, came readily into the scheme; as did also Malec, the commandant of Medina, who advised the Kbelif to cause Yezid to be proclaimed his heir apparent, or rather, we should imagine, such a notion being countenanced by Abu Jaafar, Al Makin, and Abu'l-Faraj, his partner and collegue, in that city. But Hosein Ebn Ali, Abd'allah Ebn Amer. Abd alrahman Ebn Abu Becr, the brother of Ayesha, and Ab-Zellah Ebn Zebeir, refuling to give their consent to it, the people could by no means be induced to concur with fuch a measure; tho' Moawiyab did his utmost to prevail upon those chiefs to oblige him in this particular. He came in person to Medina, at the head of 1000 horse. He had a conference there with Ayesba about the affair; the result of which was, that the Arabs in general of the province of Hejaz took the oath of allegiance to Yezid. He even threatened those that coposed him in this favourite point with his resentment. But all his efforts, with regard to the above-mentioned chiefs, proyed They were too powerful to be brought into any of his measures by compulsion. However, as Hosein was a man of merit, a near relation, and had the people of Irâlat his devotion, he advised Yezid never to offer him any violence, if he ever came into his power. Abd'allah Ebu Amer, being wholly given up to devotion, would, as he told him, declare in his favour, when nobody else opposed him; and therefore would be a proper object of his mercy, if he should ever prove superior to all his enemies. With regard to Abd'alrabmân Ebn Abu Becr, his attention being folely fixed on women and play, and he being altogether influenced by the example of others, continued Moawiyah to his fon Yezid, if ever he comes in, he is to be treated with lenity and moderation. But as for Abd'allah Ebn Zobeir, he has the subtilty of the fox, as well as the strength of the lion, said the Khalif; and therefore, if ever he can be feized, he must be cut to pieces. These Arab leaders persisting in their resultal to acknowlege Yezid either his father's collegue or heir apparent, Moawiyah found himself obliged to acquiesce in the measures that had already been taken, and durst not proceed to any acts of violence against them. However, he so far carried his point, that the Syrians, the people of Irak, and the bulk of the Arab nation, took the oath of fidelity to Yezid; to which they were bribed by large fums of money, according to Al Tabari; tho', if we will believe Abu'l-Faraj, this oath was extorted by force from the inhabitants of Mecca and Medina. Be this as it will, it was certainly a great action, at this jun-Eture, to change an elective monarchy into an hereditary one, when the family of Hâshem had so powerful a party amongst the Arabs and the people of Irak, that would infallibly in all points oppose Moawiyah, whom they considered as their mortal enemy; when there were still living several of the Com-PANIONS, who themselves aspired to the Khalifat, and who consequently with great impatience expected Moawiyah's disfolution; and when, laftly, Yezid was so abandon'd a youth, that his uncle Ziyad, a man of great experience and capacity, thought that nothing could be more disagreeable than the preceding scheme to all the provinces. To which we may add. that the attempt itself was an innovation, and might therefore have been attended with fatal consequences in an empire that had not long been formed, and that had been lately very much weakened by civil diffensions. This affair, which had been for some time in agitation, being thus brought to a happy conclusion, Yezid gave audience to several embassadors, who came to congratulate him on the occasion, as well as to feveral of the Arabs, who had undertaken a journey to Damascus, then the feat of the Moslem emperor, to offer him their allegiance. Amongst the latter, Al Abnaf, Yezid's uncle, made his appearance; and, at his father's request, took an opportunity of conversing with him: after which, being asked by Moâwiyah what he thought of his nephew's capacity, he . scrupled not to answer him in the following terms: " The fear 66 of God will not permit us to lie, and that of you not to 66 speak truth. You know best both his night and his day; 44 his outfide and his infide; his going out and his coming

"in. You also know best what you design to do. It is our business to hear and obey; yours to give counsel to the people." The Damascenes seem to have been some of Yezia's most zealous adherents, and to have distinguished themselves in a particular manner on this occasion .

As Yezid was now destined to be his father's successor, the Moawiold Khalif grew extremely fond of him; imagining him to yah exhave something grand and majestic in his deportment, and tremely that he was every way qualified to fit at the helm of a puis-fond of bis fant empire. Nay, Moawiyah, tho' in other respects a per-son. son of great discernment and penetration, could not forbear frequently expressing in conversation the high opinion he entertained of his fon's superior abilities. It is said, that, in one of his harangues to the people, he offered up to God the following remarkable prayer: "O God! if thou knowest "that I have settled the government upon Yezid, because, according to the best of my judgment, I think him quali-" fied for it, confirm it to him; but if I have done it out of 44 affection, confirm it not." It feems to be infinuated by an Arab author, that the road from Medina to Mecca was about this time infested by robbers, and that great disorders were committed upon it; fince, according to him, Merwan Ebn Al Hakem, the commandant of Medina, was obliged himfelf to conduct the Hadji's, or pilgrims, to Mecca, the preceding year *.

THE 57th year of the Hejra scarce produced a single event Great that has merited the attention of any historian. Throphanes murmur-only observes, that vast swarms of locusts appeared in Syria ing, and and Mesopetamia, and consequently did incredible damage discontents there, this year. There were likewise at this juncture in in Arabia. Arabia great murmurings and discontents, occasioned by the transaction of the preceding year, of which we have just given our readers a full and ample relation. However, such care was taken by the Khalif, and the officers he employed, that no open attempt was made against the government.

The following year, Ayesha, the daughter of Abu Becr, Ayesha and Mohammed's best-beloved wife, departed this life at Me- and Abdina. Her father derived from her his name of Abu Becr, or d'alrahthe father of the girl; she being very young when the prophet man Ebn married her. She was ever treated by all the Khalifs with the Abu Becr utmost respect, except when she exposed herself in the expedic; dition undertaken at her impulse against Ali. The Moslems fometimes called her the prophetels; and, when they addressed themselves to her, generally gave her the title of the mother of the faithful. She made her exit on the feventh day of the month of Ramadan. Her brother Abd alrahman Ebn Abu Beer, of whom we have spoken above, died a little before her. Soon after the conclusion of the late treaty of peace between the Christians and the Arabs, the ratifications were exchanged; and John Pitzigaudes, the imperial minister, who had been amply rewarded by Modwiyah, for the part he acted in that important affair, returned home to Constantinople this same year .

THE next year, being the 59th of the Hejra, died Aba Abu Ho- Horeira, or the father of the cat, so called by Mohammed, because of his fondness of a cat, which he always carried about with him. He so constantly went under this appellation, that neither his true name, nor his pedigree, is certainly known. He was one of the prophet's intimate companions, and had fo many traditions father'd upon him, that the very number of them renders them suspected to some people; tho' others receive them all as of undoubted authority, without the leaft hesitation. He is looked upon by many of the Moslems as one of the fix authors of the authentic traditions. His true name. according to the common opinion, was Abd alrahman Ebn Sakhar; and his conversion to Islamism is said to have been effected in the seventh year of the Hejra. This year there was a great earthquake in Mesopotamia, which did considerable damage to the church of the Christians at Edessa; but it has not been observed either by the Christian or Moslem historians, that the edifices in other parts of that country faffered in the leaft by any of its concussions 2.

Moâwi-. yah dies.

THE 60th year of the Hejra was rendered remarkable by the death of Moawiyah Ebn Abu Sofian, who died at Damascus about the beginning, or, as others will have it, the middle of the month of Rajeb. His last public speech, which he made when he found himself in a declining condition, was to the following effect. "I am like corn that is to be reaped, and 46 have governed you till we are weary of one another. es am superior to all my successors, as my predecessors were 66 superior to me. God desires to approach all who are de-" firous of approaching him. O God! I love to meet thee, 66 do thou love to meet me!" When he perceived himself and another faithful fervant, to impart from him the following advice to Yezid. " Consider the Arabs as the root and foun-" dation of your empire; and therefore always treat their em-" baffadors with kindness and respect. The Syrians are your " natural friends, and will defend you from the infults of " your enemies; and therefore shew yourself a father to " them: but never keep them long out of their own coun-"try; for they degenerate abroad. Oblige the people of " Irâk to the utmost of your power, even tho' they should " demand of you a new deputy every day: you had better " abandon the dearest friend you have in the world, than have " 100,000 fwords drawn upon you. There are only three " of the Koreish that will attempt to disturb your govern-" ment ; Hosein, Ebn Amer, and Abd'allah Ebn Zobeir. " the last of these appears in arms against you, oppose him; " if he offers you peace, accept of it; and spare the blood " of your people as much as possible." In his Khalifat. Mestemab Ebn Mokhalled Al Ansari added a new tower to the temple, or mosque, erected by Amru Ebn Al As at Al Fostat, which afterwards went by his name. We must not forget to observe here, that Abu Jaafar Al Tabari, as well as Eutychius, afferts, that, in the 50th year of the Hejra, there happened so remarkable a solar eclipse, that the stars in the day-time very clearly appeared; which will farther evince the truth of the inference we have already drawn from that affertion b.

Yezid was then at a town called Hawarin, in the territory of Hems, and did not arrive at Damascus till after his sather had been interred; but, upon his arrival there, he went and prayed at his tomb. For what has been observed here, we are obliged to Abussed; tho' Yezid himself said the suneral prayers over Modwiyah, at his interment, if we will believe Abu Jaasar Al Tabari.

Some farther account of bim. As the Arabs in general, and the Khalif in particular, at this time, were much delighted with poetical performances, a young man once repeated to Moâwiyah a copy of verses, wherein he gave a full and explicit account of his present miétable situation. He had, it seems, married a fair Arabian girl purely for love; and, out of mere fondness, had spent all his substance upon her. The governor of Gusa casting his eyes upon her, and perceiving her to be a charming creature, had ravished her from her husband's bosom. The poor man, to whom the loss of his substance was nothing in respect to that of his wife, being pierced to the very heart, and ready to die with forrow for this misfortune, addressed the Khalif in verse, in these calamitous circumstances. Moâwirah, being very well pleased with the verses, resolved to do him justice; and therefore sent an express to the governor, with orders instantly to resign the woman. He being a person of not the most unrefined taste, told the express, that, if the Khalif would permit him to enjoy her one year, he would be contented to have his head struck off at the end of it. But the Khalif having absolutely insisted upon her dismission, she was brought before him. He was extremely surprized at her beauty, but much more at the politeness and elegancy of her expression. Tho' he had received many embassies, and frequently converfed with the greatest men of his country, he he had never before heard fuch a torrent of eloquence as that which flowed from the mouth of this charming Arabian. The Khalif asked her jocosely, whether she would chuse him, the governor, or her husband, for a constant companion? She, with a modesty peculiar to her sex, answered in verse, that tho' a person in his exalted station could do infinitely more for her than either the expected or deferved, yet that this would by no means be a balance against eternal damnation. She begged of him, therefore, if he intended her any favour, to restore her to her dear husband. Which he not only did, but presented her likewise with a splendid equipage, as well as plenty of gold, in order to restore the shattered circumflances of her husband, who had spent a good fortune upon This story perfectly agrees with what we find related of this Khalif by other authors, and with the character given of him even by Khondemir, the Persian historian. For we are told by an oriental author, already cited in this work, that an Arab robber having been condemned to have one of his hands cut off, in conformity to what is injoined by the Korân in cases of this nature, the criminal immediately composed and. repeated four elegant and ingenious Arab verses upon the spot; which so mollified the Khalif, that he instantly pardoned him. However, it has been remarked, that this was the first fentence pronounced amongst the Moslems that was not put in execution; none of his predecessors having taken the liberty of thewing favour to those whom the ordinary judges had condemned. And with regard to Khondemir, we are informed by that historian, that Modwiyah used to say, "The Hâ" shemites are famous for their valour, and the descendents of Zobeir for their generosity; but I only desire to pass amongs the Moslems for a prince of clemency and humanity." But how laudable soever this might seem, if we will believe Ali, it was not spoken by Moawiyah absolutely without artistice and design.

His munificence.

His munificence was equal to his clemency, if we will believe the Moslem authors. He made a present to Ayesba of a bracelet worth 100,000 dinârs. He presented Hasan at one time with 300,000 dinârs, and Aba allah Ebn Zobeir with 100,000. He frequently bad those who came to pay their duty to him to take away any thing in his palace that pleased them. He gave 100,000 dinârs at once to Hosein, 100,000 to Aba allah Ebn Jaasan, 100,000 to Merwân Ebn Al Hakem, and 4,000,000 at another time to Hasan. However, on the other hand, it must be allowed, that ambition, and an insatiable thirst after empire, almost wholly occupied his mind; as very clearly appeared from the tenor of his conduct, during the Kbalifat both of Ali and Hasan, and even his own s.

His patience and clemency.

THE following remarkable instance of his patience and clemency has been transmitted down to us by Abulfeda. Arwah, the daughter of Hareth, the son of Abd'almotalleb, the fon of Hashem, a very old woman, and his aunt, of Ali's branch of the family, made him once a visit. As soon as Moawiyah had faluted her, she began to reproach him in the following terms. "O nephew," said she, "you have been very injurious and ungrateful to your coufin, who was one " of the COMPANIONS. You also called yourself by a name 44 that was none of your own; and took poffession of what 44 you had no right to. Our family exceeded all men in fufferings for this religion, till God thought proper to take 46 his prophet, in order to reward his labours, and advance if him to a more exalted flation. Then you infulted us, and " we were amongst you like the children of Israel in the fa-" mily of Pharach; tho' Ali bore the same relation to the of prophet that Aaron did to Moses." Amru being then prefent, faid, " Hold your tongue, old woman, and don't talk " like one out of his wits." " What," replied she, " do 46 you prate, you fon of a whore! Your mother was known 66 to be the cheapest and most notorious strumpet in all

" Mecca; who, when the was examined about her com-" merce with five of the Koreish, confessed that she had " lain with them all, and declared, that he must be deemed " your father whom you resembled most. As, therefore, " you were most like old Al As, he was obliged to acknow" ledge himself your father." This unparalleled scurrility, however, did not ruffle nor discompose Moawiyah, who only said to her, "God forgive what is past; what would " you have?" She answered, "Two thousand dindrs, to " purchase an estate for the poor of our family; two thou-" fand more, to marry our poor relations; and two thousand " more for myself, to support me in time of extremity." All which, by the Khalif's command, was paid down to her immediately. Several other instances of this kind might be produced, had we room here to infert what has been related of Moawiyab by the oriental authors, especially those of the Sonnite, or Traditionist, persuasion ".

To what has been said of this Khalif, we must be gleave to Some cupe add, that he was the first who introduced the Meksowrah into toms shat the mosque. The Meksowrah was a sort of elevated place, be introseparated from all the rest, where the Khalif, who was the duced.

supreme pontiff in religious as well as the sovereign in civil affairs, read, or chanted, the prayers that form the liturgy or public office of the Moslems. From the same place he also made the Cotbab, which is a fort of homily or predication, to the people. This, before his time, followed the prayers; but he began with it, for the reason already assigned. He also introduced the practice of laying post-horses upon the roads, and was the first of the Khalifs who spoke to the people in a fitting posture. According to Theophanes, Moawiyah reigned four-and-twenty years; from whence we may infer, that he makes his Khalifat to have commenced at the death of Othman. It has been already observed, that Dionysius Telmarenfis calls Ali Abbas, and relates, that Moawiyab reigned alone, or after the death of Abbas, or Ali, only fixteen years; tho' Ebn Arrabeb and Abu'l Walid, in agreement with the other eaftern writers, affirm, that he fat on the Moslem throne, without any collegue, except his fon, or competitor, nineteen years and three months, and died in the 60th year of the Hejra, or of CHRIST 679. As Dionysius wrote in Syria, and the Syrians adhered to Moawiyah, 'tis no wonder that he, in common with his countrymen, should have had the memory of Ali and his sons in such abhorrence, as to leave their names out of the lift or feries of Khalifs. It may be farther observed, that he called Ali Abbûs, because the latter was the name applied to that Khalif's whole family by the Eyrians;

as also because Ali had a son, destroyed by Yezid, in the sotta year of the Hejra, according to Abu'l Walid, who went under that appellation h.

Where buried.

MOAWIYAH was interred at Damascus, which he made the residence of the Khalifs; and this prerogative that city enjoyed, as long as his descendents, or the Khalifs of the house of Ommiyab, kept possession of the Messem throne. But those of the family of Abbas transferred the imperial seat to Anbar, Hashemiyah, and Baghdad, as will be seen in the sequel of this history. The inscription upon Modwiyah's seal was, Every work bath its reward; or, as others say, There is no strength but in Gop. His secretary was Abd allah Ebri Aws; his principal Kadi, or judge, Fadala Ebn Abd allah, of Medina; his chamberlain Yezid his servant, and afterwards his servant Safwan; the captain of his guards Yezid Ebn Al Horra Al Abasi, Kais Ebn Hamzah, and Dahak Ebn Kais At Eutychius makes Riyab, one of his servants, to have been his chamberlain. For the story of Obeid Ebn Sariba, the Nestor of the Arabs, who is said by the Moslems to have arrived at the age of 300 years, and lived in the Khalifat of Maawiyah, we must beg leave to refer our curious readers to Al Makin, or rather Abu Jaafar Al Tabari i.

SECT. VII.

Yezid reclaimed Y EZID, according to Abu Jaafar, was proclaimed Khapreclaimed Isf, in consequence of his nomination to the succession, the same day his father died. His inauguration was performed on the new moon of the month of Rajeb, in the 60th year of the Hejra, coincident with the 7th day of April, in the year of our LORD 680. He was born in the 26th year of the former æra, and consequently thirty-four lunar years old, when he ascended the Mossem throne. Immediately after his inauguration, he wrote to Al Walid Ebn Otha Ebn Abu Sosian, his governor of Medina, to seize Hosein Ebn Ali-and Abu allah Ebn Zobeir, if they refused to acknowledge his right to the Khalifat. The letter was conceived in the sollowing terms: " In the name of the most merciful God.

Take care not to suffer Hosein, # Abd allab Ebn Amer, and Abd allab Ebn Zebeir, to deviate in the least from the inauguration." Upon the arrival of this letter, Al Walid consulted Merwan Ebn Al Hakem about the contents of it, which he immediately communicated to him. Mrwan advised him to tender the persons therein mentioned he oath of fidelity to Yexid, before they were apprized of the Theif's death; and, upon their refusal to take it, to order their heads to be cut off. Al Walid, therefore, according to Malfeda, sent for Hosein to his house, informed him of Moawineb's death, and invited him to recognize the authority of the new Khalif. Hosein answered, that men of his distinction did not usually do things of that nature in private; that be did not expect to have had fuch a thing proposed to him; and that he thought fuch a declaration as was required of him ought to be made in the most public manner. Merwan, who was prefent, plainly faw that the answer was evalive; nor was the governor ignorant of this; and therefore gave it as his opinion, that Al Walid either ought to oblige Hosein to be explicit on this occasion, or to strike his head off upon the spot. This Al Walid refusing to do, Hofein, after he had reproached Merwan for his advice, by the affiftance of some friends and domestics he had posted at the governor's door, escaped to his own house. Merwan then censuring Al Walid for permitting Hosein to retire, the governor told him, that he was very easy in his present situation; and that he thought it would be a very criminal action to spill the blood of Hofein. After this, Al Walid fent for Abd'allah Ebn Zobeir, in order to make the same proposal to him that he had before. done to Hosein. But Abd'allah deferred, under various pretences, waiting upon him for the space of twenty-four hours; at the end of which, with his family, and his brother Jaafar, he made his escape to Mecca. Al Waltd sent a party of horse in pursuit of him, but without effect. In the mean time, Hosein, by the advice of his brother Mobammed Haniflyab, made secret preparations to follow him, with his family; which he at last found means to do. However, Egypt, Syria, Mesopotamia, Persia, and, in fine, all the Moslem dominions, except the cities of Mecca and Medina, and part of Irak, declared in favour of Yezid. Notwithstanding which, the people of Cufa, receiving advice of Hosein and Abd' allah's escape to Mecca, invited the former to Cufa, and promised to support him in any war he should undertake against Yezid. He, therefore, dispatched to them his cousin Moslem Ehn Okail, to Digitized whom, OSIC whom, as Hesein's representative, they took the oath of allegiance. Yezid's mother, according to Abu Jaafar Al Tabari, was Kaisun Bint Babdal, or, as Eutychius will have it, Misua Bint Yahdak, of the tribe of Calb .

indolent, not to fay treacherous, conduct, dismissed him from the government of Medina, and substituted Amru Ebn Sand: then commandant of Mecca, in his room. Amru, who was a very proud man, soon after he had taken possession of his post, detached Amer Ebn Zobeir with a body of troops again & his brother Abd allah, whom he mortally hated. Abd allah engaged Amer in the field, routed him, and put him in prifon, where he kept him confined till his death. This victory procured Abd'allah no small respect from the people of Medina, who seemed now greatly prejudiced in his favour, However, Holein's superior interest amongst them rendered him incapable of aspiring, by their assistance, to the Khalifat himfelf. Besides, Hosein was supported by the forces of Irak. who still retained a vast veneration for the memory of his father Ali, and confidered the government of Modwiyah as a downright usurpation. The citizens of Cufa had actually declared for him, as has been already observed; and were at this very juncture pressing him to honour them with his prefence. Moslem had, with great difficulty, traversed part of the defarts of Irak, in order to come at them; but, upon his arrival at their city, the reception they gave him made him ample amends for the hardships he had suffained. They not only came to a resolution to spend all their blood and treasure in support of Hosein's just pretensions, but determined likewife to enter immediately upon action with an army of 18000 men. And what crowned all was, that the affairs concerted between them and Moslem were carried on with so much secreey, that Al Nooman, Yezid's lieutenant, himself was a stranger to their deliberations. In the mean time, Holein receiving advice of the happy situation of his affairs at Cufa, made the proper dispositions for his departure from Mecca, in order to fet out upon his journey for the former city 1, memflances might appear against him, nor be the aggressor any shape whatsoever, unless he should be forced to act patrary to his inclination by some gross insult offered to his wifon. But he fwore by that God besides whom there is no her, that, if they revolted from their Imam, he would fight Hong as he could hold his fword in his hand. Upon which, those that stood by told him, that the present conjuncte did not so much require words as action; and that he atted like one of the weak ones. To which he replied, that he would rather be one of the weak ones in obedience to GOD, than one of the strong ones in rebelling against This inactive conduct not pleasing Yezid, he removed Al Nooman from his post, and annexed the government d'Cufa to that of Bafra, in favour of Obeid'allab, the son of Zinad, to whom Yezid had been reconciled by the interposition of Sarkhun Ebn Moawiyah; he having before conceived a diffike to him, on account of his father Ziyad, who had refused to concur with those who had nominated him to the fucceffion in his father's life-time. Al Nooman, or Al Noaman, 22 he is called by Abu Jaafar, was the fon of Bashar, a citizen of Medina, and a man of too indolent a temper to sustain the weighty office of commandant of Cafa at this juncture, when most of the citizens in reality were disaffected to Yezid; and therefore this was a sufficient reason for removing him from that post. But as he belonged to a city that bore an impla-cable hatred to the house of Ommiyah, 'tis not improbable that the Khalif might have had some cause to suspect his integrity; which if we admit, this must have been an additional reason for his dismission. Be that as it will, the new Khalif, if we will believe Abulfeda, upon his first accession to the throne, kept all his father's officers and lieutenants in the places that had been affigned them; and had nothing more at heart than an attempt to win over those who had always opposed his interest by gentle means. In consequence of which disposition, he resolved, if the conduct of the house of Hâsbem did not oblige him to deviate from the plan he had laid down, to have recourse only, for the reuniting the divided members of the Arab nation, to methods of lenity and perfuzition m.

But they were extremely mortified, when they discovered this stranger to be the Emir Obeid'allah; who went immediately to the apartments fitted up for him in the castle, attended only by an escorte of seventeen horse. The first object of his deliberations was the extinction of the present sedition, but too visible to him, that had been excited in the city by Moslem. In order to which, he commanded a trusty servant to disguise himself, and to personate a stranger come out of Syria to see the inauguration of Hosein; that he might gain admission into Moslem's house, by his address insinuate himself into that officer's confidence, and by this means penetrate all his coun-Which having done, he made a faithful report of what he had learned to his master. In the mean time, Moslem lodged at one Sharik's house, to which he had removed from Hani's, where he had taken up his quarters at his first coming to town. Obeid allah having been let into all the secrets of the adverse party by his servant, sent a messenger to Sharik, who was one of the grand Omera's, to inform him, that he intended him a visit on a certain day, which he named. Sharik being apprized of this, tho' he was then fick, immediately came to a resolution to receive him, and to place Moslem in a corner of the room, that he might destroy him, upon a fignal given. The vifit was accordingly made, and Moslem had a proper place affigned him, for the purpose above-mentioned; but his heart failing him, Obeid'allah escaped, and Sbarik died three days after. As for Hani, in whose house Moslem at first had lodged, and who attended the new goyernor in the aforesaid visit, upon searching the registers, he was found to be an old offender, and one that had before opposed Oheid'allab; wherefore he was conducted by some of the Omera's, at the governor's command, to the castle. Upon his arrival there, Obeid'allah asked him where Moslem was, and how he came formerly to admit him into his house? Hani, after he had in vain endeavoured to deny the fact laid to his charge, answered, that Mosem forced himself into his house, and did not come thither by his invitation. Callah then commanded this prevaricator to produce him; who instantly replied, that if he was under his feet, he would not take them off from him. This so exasperated Obeid'allah, that he gave him a blow on the face with his mace, which broke his nose; upon which, Hani attempted to snatch a sword from one of the guards, but was prevented, and tho governor ordered him to be closely confined in a room of the castle that had been prepared for his reception. The news of this event foon reached the ears of Moslem, who thereupon mounted his horse, assembled a body of 4000 men, and im-Digitized by Goog mediately mediately invested the castle. This at first surprised Obel-Callab, tho' he foon recovered himself, and made a speech to the people; wherein he used a great variety of arguments to diffuade them from withdrawing their allegiance from the Kbalif. This produced the defired effect; infomuch that all Mossem's followers, except about thirty, gradually deserted him. He, therefore, found himself obliged to leave the city; which, by the favour of the night, he did, and made his escape to a little cottage, belonging to an old woman, in a field at a little diffance from Cufa. However, her son, in hopes of meeting with the reward promifed by the governor to the person who should give any intelligence of him, discovered to Obeid'allab the place of his retreat; who thereupon fent a detachment of eighty horse to seize him. Mesiem for fome time made a gallant defence, and thrice cleared the house of them; but being at last overpowered by numbers, and grievously wounded in several places, both his lips particularly being almost cut to pieces, he was seized, disarmed, and carried bound upon his own mule to Cafa. One of the governor's men perceiving him to shed tears, told him, that it did not become a man imbarked in so great an undertaking to weep. Moslem replied, that he wept not for himfelf, but for Hofein and his family, who were then, as he apprehended, on the road to Cufa. After which, turning to Mobammed Ebn Al Asbat, he desired him to acquaint Hesein with his bad success, and intreat him, if upon his journey, to return to Mecca. This Mehammed not only promised to do, but likewise actually sent an express to Hosein, to hinder him from advancing to Cufa; the the person employed on this occasion never came near him. When Moslem arrived at the castle, he asked for a draught of water; but one of the men there told him, he should have nothing to quench his thirst, till he drank the Hamim, or boiling liquor that the Mobammedans pretend the damned shall drink in hell. When Obeid'allah appeared, Mostem refused to salute han; saying, he should serve Yezid himself in the same manner, if he were present, unless he would promise him a pardon. The governor then upbraided him with coming to Cafa, in order to fow the feeds of diffension amongst a people who were perfeetly well satisfied with the present administration. Moslem resolutely answered, "That is absolutely false. The people " of this province know very well, that your father Ziyad " inhumanly butchered their principal men, and exercised a " tyranny over them more intolerable than that of the worst " of the Khofra's, or the Cæsars: whereas our intention is so to govern them with justice and moderation, and appeal to the determination of the book." Obeid allah then called him ropus, and reproached him with drinking of wine at Medina; which he denied in the strongest terms. Perceiving that he was to fall a facrifice to the governor's refentment, he left one of his friends 700 dinars, to take care of his body. and to hinder Holein from approaching Cufa. After which he was beheaded on the top of the castle, as Hani was in the street. Both of their heads were fent for a present to Yezid. together with a letter containing an account of their crime. and the circumstances attending their execution; which happened on the 8th day of the month of Dhu'lhajja, in the both year of the Hejra. With regard to the collection of regifters, or book of records, as 'tis called in Scripture, abovementioned, we must beg leave to observe, that the antient Persians, to whom the province of Irak, in which Cufa is situated, appertained, preserved the memory of the principal events of their state every year, and even every day, in a fort of annals and journals, which formed that collection, and were recited in order of time as they happened, as may be inferred from facred and profane authors. In these annals and iournals the names of the benefactors to the public, as well as of malefactors, were inferted, both amongst the Persians and the Medes. This most clearly appears from Herodotus. Thucydides, and Josephus, as well as from several passages of Scripture. 'Tis no wonder, therefore, that the same custom should prevail in the time of Yezid amongst some of the defeendents of those antient nations. The detachment sent by Obeid allab to feize Mosem at the old woman's cottage, and conduct him to Gufa, confished of 1000 horse, notwithstanding what has been advanced to the contrary by an Arab author here referred to, according to Abu'l-Faraj a.

Hosein

The favourable advices he had received from Moslem, tofets out for gether with the earnest and repeated sollicitations of the Cufans, who had sent him a list of 140,000 men that were ready to obey his orders, induced Hosein to think of setting out directly for Cissa. The wisest of his friends, however, considered this as a desperate enterprize, and therefore endeavoured to dissuade him from it. Abd'allah Ebn Abbas, in particular, told him, that as the Emir Obeid'allah's forces had the proper posts assigned them for the desence of the country, and as the Casans at best only had invited him to a war, in which they would probably desert him, he ought by no means to imbark in so perilous an undertaking. Abd'allah Ebn Zo-

fen, tho' in a more faint and languid manner; he being in railty rather defirous of precipitating him into dangers, than of delivering him from them; fince, in case of Hosein's death, he thought he might, with the greater case, aspire to the Khalifat himself. But Hossis still persisting in his former refolution, Abd'allab Ebn Abbas, who had a most sincere and cordial respect for him, represented to him, that if he was, fixed in his intention of entering into a war against Yould, he ought to flay till his friends at Cufa had dispatched the new governor imposed upon them by the pretended Khalif, and then either foin them, or retize to some place of strength in Hejax; that, in the mean time, he should write circular letters to his friends, defiring them to affemble their forces with all possible expedition, and not suffer any part of the scheme he had formed to transpire; and that at least, if nothing could divert him from appearing immediately at the head of the Cufans, he ought not to entertain any thoughts of taking his wives and children along with him, left he should meet with the fate of Othman, who was murdered in his family's fight. Befides, added he, your departure from Mecca at this functure, especially if you leave him behind you, will give infinite pleasure to Abd'allah Ebn Zobeir, who wishes for your death, in order to dispute himself the Khalifat with Yezid. But Holein still proving inflexible, Abd'ollab Ebn Abbas left him, and told Ebu Zobeir, whom he met foon after, that he had no reason to be sad, since Hesein, hurried by his deskiny, was obstinately bent upon his own destruction. Nay, tho the same Ebn Abbas sat up with him afterwards a whole night, in order to prevail upon him to remain at Macca a little longer, and at least till his troops were ready to enter upon action, he could make no impression upon him. Hosein, therefore, with his family, and some other attendants, fet out from Mecca either on the 8th of Dhu'lbajja, the very day on which Mofiem and Hani were executed at Cafa, of which Hosein had not yet received advice, or the day before, as we learn from an anonymous oriental bistorian °.

THE Emir Obrid'allah, being apprized of Hofein's ap-Obeid'alproach, detached Harro Ebn Yexid, of the tribe of Teminah, lah fends with 1000 horse, to meet him on the road, and conduct him, a body of with all the people attending him, to Cufa. Harro, who was troops far from being an enemy to Hosein, advanced at the head of against his troops to Asberof; and, when Hosein came up, imparted him. to him the orders he had received. Hosein at first attempted to engage Harro directly in his interest; but finding this impracticable, he faid, he would die rather than fuffer those orders to be put in execution; and commanded his men inflantly to continue their march. But this Harro opposed; which provoked Holein to curse him in the following terms, pretty frequently used amongst the Arabs, May your mother be childless of you! This not a little exasperated Harre; who, nevertheless, only replied, "If any other person had treated " me as you have done, I should not have failed recriminating; but there is no room to speak of your mother without " the highest respect." Then ordering his men to retreat, he told Hosein, that he was not commanded to fight him, but only to conduct him to Cafa; adding, that if he thought fit either to go to Medina, or take any other road that did not lead directly to Cufa, he should meet with no opposition from him. Nay, he ventured farther to assure him, that if he could asfemble a body of troops fufficient to enable him to fall upon Obeid'allah's forces, and not fuffer himself to be attacked first by that commander, he would, in his opinion, be in a fair way of carrying his point. After which, Hosein moved towards Kadesia, famous for the bloody battle fought there between the Arabs and the Persuns, and was accosted at Adib by a fmall party of four horfe; whose guide Thirmah informed him, that the noblesse of Cufa were resolved to oppose him; and that the the rest of the Cufans were his friends, to-morrow their swords would all be drawn against him. He also assured him, that his mellenger Kais, who had been fent before to difpose the Cufans to give him a good reception, had been thrown down headlong from the top of the caftle, for curling Obeid'allab, and his father Ziyâd, when he was commanded by the former to curse Ali and Hosein. This news greatly affected Hosein; upon which, Thirmah offered to conduct him to mount Aja, a place impregnable by its fituation, in the province of Najd, and even to attempt affembling a body of tea thousand men, of the tribe of Tay, to support him. But Herfein still persisting in his resolution of advancing towards Kadefia and Nineveh, Thirmah took his leave of him, and, with the four horse he was conducting, continued his rout. next day Hosein, with Harro, who still attended him, arrived at Niniveb, a town distant from the antient city going under the same name, which stood on the eastern bank of the Tigris. Here Harre met with an express who brought him an order from Obeid'allah to prevent Hesein from possessing himself of any fortified town, or place of strength, before the arrival of his forces. This order came to hand on Friday the fecond day of the month Al Moharram, in the 61st year

year of the Hejra; and the next day Amer Ebn Saad, having received advice of Holein's approach, appeared with a body of 4000 men, who had for some time pitched their tents without the walls of Cufa. Those troops were upon the point of marching to Deylam; but as the partifans of the house of Håsbem began now to be in motion, Obeid'allah commanded Amer to lead them against Hosein. This, for some time, at the infligation of his nephew and others, Amer refused to do; but at last, being intimidated by Obeid allab's menaces, he moved with all his forces to Kerbela, where Hosein was at that time posted. Here he was joined by Harro with 1000 horse; so that, after this junction, the Moslem troops destined to act against Hosein amounted to 5000 men. However, before the commencement of hostilities, several messages passed between Amer and Hosein; when the latter finding his affairs in a desperate situation, and that the Cufans had deserted him, offered to return home, if Obeid'allah would permit him. Upon this, Amer wrote to the governor, and acquainted him with the overture made by Hosein; but received for answer, that no proposal from him would be listened to, till he had acknowledged Yezid to be the true and lawful emperor of the faithful. At the same time, Obeid'allah commanded Amer Ebn Saad Ebn Abi Wakkas to cut off all communication between Hosein's camp and the Euphrates, or rather those branches of it called by Abu'l Faraj the rivers of Kerbela; that by this means he might oblige him to furrender to the Khalif's forces, without any effusion of Moslem blood. In these calamitous circumstances, Hosein and Amer, at the request of the former, held a conference between the two armies; each of them being attended by an escorte of twenty horse. In this conference, Hosein desired to be permitted either to accommodate matters in person with Yezid, or to return into Arabia, or, lastly, to command some remote garison in Khorasan, where he might distinguish himself against the Turks. But Obeid'allah was dissuaded from accepting of any of these conditions by Shamer Ebn Dhu'ljeyowsh, who scrupled not to accuse Amer of carrying on a clandestine negotiation with Hosein; though the governor at first discovered no repugnancy to an accommodation. According to a tradition, mentioned by Mr. Ockley, tho' he names not the author of it, Hosein begged he might either have leave to return to the place from whence he came, or be permitted to found the people of Irâk, in order to discover whether they had really any intention of declaring for him. Be that as it will, Obeid'allah would grant neither Hosein, nor the people attending him, any terms; offering them only this alternative, either to submit Mon. Hist, Vol. II.

OBEID'ALLAH being at this time fufficiently apprized of the feditious disposition of the Cufans, was resolved to bring matters to an eclaircissement, before Hosein advanced nearer to the gates of their city. He, therefore, sent Shamer, upon whom he could intirely depend, with a body of 5000 men. to reinforce the troops under Amer; whom he ordered once more to assure Hosein, that if he and his men would submit to Yezid, no violence should be offered them; but that if they refused such submission, they should all be put to the fword. He likewise ordered Shamer to strike off Amer's head, if he discovered any reluctance to an engagement with Hofein, and to take upon himself the command of all the forces. At the same time, the governor offered his protection to Abbâs, Abd'allah, Jaafar, and Othmân, four of Ali's fons; which they refused to accept; saying, that the security of God was better than that of the fon of Somyab. By which appellation, they intended to stigmatize Obeid'allah; inti-mating thereby, that he was the son of one of Somyab's bastards, his father Ziyad having been the fruit of an illicit commerce between that ftrumpet and Abu Sofian. Amer having received Obeid'allah's orders by Shamer, together with a letter severely reprimanding him for not attacking Hosein fooner, drew up his army in order of battle, and advanced towards the enemy. This happening after evening-prayer. Hosein, who, with his brother Abbas, was then in his tent, begged a truce till the following day; which was easily granted by Amer. In the mean time, Hofein's fifter viewed with the utmost horror and consternation her brother's approaching fate. She was quite disconsolate, fainted away. and discovered all the symptoms of grief and despair; tho Hosein did every thing in his power to comfort her. He endeavoured also to calm the minds of his men, who seemed then to be under the most dreadful apprehensions, by advising them to retire to their respective habitations. This, however, they could by no means be induced to do, most of them being determined not to survive him. But notwithstanding the ferment they were in, he did not omit making the proper dispositions for his defence. He ordered all the tents, of which his camp was composed, to be fastened to one another with ropes and cords, and to be fortified at one end with a trench; so that the whole, which was finished in the night, formed a fort of barricade. Into the trench he caused to be thrown a large quantity of wood, and other combustible materials, which his men set on fire, to prevent their being furrounded; fo that they could be attacked only They spent the night in prayers and supplications. whilst the horse of the enemy's guard were perpetually moving round them. The next morning, the troops on both fides made fuch movements, as are for the most part immediately previous to an engagement. Hosein drew up his small army, which, according to an Arab writer of good authority, confifted only of thirty-two horse and forty foot (tho' Abu faafar makes the whole number to have amounted to fifty horse and an hundred foot) in order of battle, and made as good a dispofition of this inconfiderable force, as the nature of the ground on which he incamped, and the short space of time, allowed him to do it in, would permit. Amer, as foon as the day appeared, having ranged his troops in battle-array, approached the barricade, in order to begin the attack; and found Hofein, who had before washed and perfumed himself, according to the Arab custom, wherein he was followed by his principal officers, prepared to receive him in a proper manner. Upon this motion of Amer, Hesein instantly mounted his horse, as did his son Ali, laid the Korân before him, and earnestly pressed the foldiers that attended him to a performance of their duty. This drew a fresh flood of tears from his listers and daughters, who rent the air with their lamentations; upon which, he fent his fon Ali, and his brother Abbas, to pacify and appeafe them, declaring, that he would die in the field of battle rather than renounce his right in so servile a manner as was required of him to any tyrant whatfoever. Which moving scene so affected Harro, that he expressed great forrow for having intercepted Hosein, immediately joined him with thirty horse, and came to a determination to die with him. He also made a final effort to mollify Amer, but without effect; that general alledging, that the express orders he had received from Obeid'allab would not permit him to follow pacific measures. Upon which, Harro upbraided him, as well as the Cufans in general, with having imposed upon Hoseir, and with having deprived him and his men of the water of the Euphrates, of which Jews, Christians, and Sabians, were permitted to drink, and in which even hogs and dogs were suffered to sport themselves. An accommodation, therefore, being impracticable, Shamer Ebn Dbu'ljeyowsb began the attack, and showers of arrows were on both fides discharged. But before the action became general, Abd allah Ebn Amer, having obtained leave of Hosein to fight them, killed Yafer and Salem, two of Amer's men, in fingle combat; and another of the enemy attempting to engage Hosein, his horse threw him, dragged him with his lest foot in the stirrup, his right leg having been cut off by one of Hosein's men, and at last destroyed him, by dashing his head Several other combats were fought. against some stones. wherein Hosein's men, being animated by despair, were superior to their antagonists; which induced Amer to order his fordiers to defift from that kind of engagement. After this, Amru Ebn Hejâj, who commanded the right wing, charged Hosein's troops with great fury, crying out aloud to the Cûfans, "Behave with bravery against those who separate from the religion, from the congregation, and from the Imam." To whom Hosein, with great coolness, replied, "You are "the feparatifts; when your fouls have taken their flight from your bodies, you will know which of us deferve hells fire most." In this attack, Mostem Ebn Ausajab, the first that fell on Holein's fide, was killed, after he had behaved with unparalleled bravery. Several other Arab officers likewise at this time loft their lives; though the Cufans, notwithstanding the inequality of numbers, were not able to make themselves masters of the person of Hosein. The little body of cavalry that furrounded him fustained the shock with incredible firmness and intrepidity, and at last forced the enemy to retire with confiderable loss q.

Holein defeated

THE right wing thus failing in its attempt upon Hosein, Shamer, who commanded the left, fell upon the Arab cavalry and killed. with fuch fury, that he had well nigh broke them, and everi penetrated to Hosein. However, he was at last repulsed, and obliged to fend to Amer for a reinforcement of 500 archers. Upon the arrival of these succours, the Cufans under Shamer renewed the attack upon Holein's camp, and so galled his cavalry, or rather their horses, with their arrows, that they were obliged to difmount, and fight on foot. Amongst the rest, Harro being forced to abandon his horse, by reason of a wound he had received, defended himself with his sword for a considerable time. Shamer, finding his efforts hitherto ineffectual, resolved to destroy the barricade; and therefore commanded his men to advance, and overthrow the tents that formed it. But they met with fuch a warm reception from the troops which defended them, that, after a vigorous action, they were again repulfed, left feveral of their men dead upon the spot, and were obliged to betake themselves to a precipitate flight. Shamer then attempted to fet fire to Hbfain's tent, but without effect; the Arabs driving his troops before them, and forcing them to abandon the camp they had attacked, with confiderable loss. The battle now grew hot in all parts; notwithstanding which, Hosein performed his devotions with great fervency, faying the noon-prayers amongst the poor remains of his shatter'd troops, to which he added that of Fear, which is never used but in cases of the last extremity. The fight having already proved almost fatal to Hofein, notwithstanding the incredible valour of the Arabs, most of his men having been killed, and amongst the rest Habib. an officer of great merit and distinction; Shamer charged the small phalanx that supported him with such fury, that he broke it, put to the fword several of the soldiers that formed it, particularly one that had killed no less than ten of his men, as also Ali, the son of Hosein, who was first wounded with a lance, and afterwards cut to pieces, with unrelenting barbanty. Most of the rest were shot by the Irakian archers; so that Hosein, his little fon Abd'allah, and a nephew of his, that was likewise a child, were almost the only persons who survived the common destruction. The last of these had his hand cut off, and was killed, when he was upon the point of embracing his uncle Hofein; and Abd'allah was struck dead with an arrow, whilst he was in his father's lap. As for Hosein himself, he first received a wound in the head, which filled his helmet with blood, and was afterwards shot in the mouth with an arrow, whilst he was quenching his thirst. However, he continued still to defend himself like a man animated by despair; insomuch that none of the Irakians durst, for a confiderable time, attempt to give him the fatal stroke. Nay, his fister Zeinab, the daughter of Fâtema, turning to Amer, asked him whether he could have the heart to see Hofein flain? Upon which, the tears ran down his beard, and he turned his face away from her. But Shamer, who was of a more fierce and brutal disposition, cursed and upbraided his, men for not approaching Hesein; whereupon one of them wounded him in the hand, another in the neck, and a third thrust him through with his spear. In fine, he received thirtyfour contusions, and thirty-three wounds. After his death, his head was cut off, and the Irâkians rode over his dead body so often, that they trod it into the very ground. Shamer, not fatisfied with his blood, intended to have butcher'd likewise his youngest son Ali, afterwards called Zein Alabedin, or Zein Alab' addin, i. e. the ornament of the religious, who was then very fick, and young; but was diverted by one of his officers from putting in execution so cruel a design. All the riches and spoil taken from Hosein and his family, even the womens Dig tized by richelb 9 C richest cloathe, were divided amongst the Khalif's troops; tho' the particular manner in which this was done has not been handed down to us by any of the Moslem authors. The night after the battle, Hawla carried Hosein's head to his own house; which so disgusted his wife, that she abandoned his bed, and could never afterwards be perfuaded to cohabit with Nay, the woman that he took to supply her place that night, was terrified, as we are told by an Arab writer, by a supernatural light ascending from the spot on which Hosein's head was deposited towards heaven, and certain white birds that continually hovered over it. The next morning, Hawla carried the head to Obeid'allah, who struck it over the mouth with his stick, and treated it with great contempt. offended Zeid Ebn Arkom, that he gave the governor opprobrious language, for discovering so savage a disposition; which had like to have cost him his head. Thus ended the battle of Kerbela, fought on the 10th day of the month Al Moharram, in the 61st year of the Hejra; which proved so satal to the house of Hashem, and so firmly established Yezid upon the Moslem throne. The Arabs, according to an eastern author, much esteemed by Mr. Ockley, had 72 men killed in the action, 17 of whom were descended from Fâtema; and the troops of Irâk 88, besides a considerable number wounded; tho', if we will believe Abu Jaafar Al Tabari, not above thirty-eight of the Khalif's men fell on the field of battle. According to the same historian, Obeid allab ordered the head of Hosein to be carried through the city, exposed to public view, fixed for fome time, with forty others, upon one of the gates of Cufa, and afterwards, with the women, and his fon Ali, fent to Yezid at Damascus. Hosein, as some say, was about fifty-five or fifty-six, or, as others will have it, fifty-eight or fifty-nine, years old, at the time of his death. The principal officers flain on the fide of the Arabs. in this unfortunate action, besides Hosein, were Habib, Ab-Sallah Ebn Mossem Ebn Okail, Mohammed and Awn, the sons of Abd'allah Ebn Jaafar Ebn Abu Taleb, Ali the elder son of Hofein, Harro Ebn Yezid, and Moslem Ebn Ausajab. Some authors relate, that Hosein was killed by Senan Ebn Anas, and others by Shamer himself. The Arab historians likewise differ in their opinion concerning the person who cut off Hofein's head; some of them ascribing this barbarous action to Hawla Ebn Yezid, and others to Nafr. Zeinab, Hosein's daughter, went, after the battle, to the citadel, where Obeid'allah had a conference with her, in which he reflected, with great warmth and asperity of expression, upon the family of Hosein; which provoked Zeinab to reproach him for his cruelty in such severe terms, that he was near iffuing an order.

for her execution. After examination, finding that Hosein's youngest son Ali was arrived at puberty, he also threatened to execute him before her face; but, being mollissed by her tears, he was at last prevailed upon to spare both of them, notwithstanding the high provocation he pretended to have received. We must beg leave to inform our curious readers here, that Kerbela, or Kerbala, was the name of a district, or territory, in Babylonian, or Chaldwan, Irâk, samous for the death and sepulchre of Hosein. This district, or territory, lies a little to the west of the city called Kasr Ebn Hobeirah, and at a small distance from Cûfa. The Persians still retain the name of Kerbala in their songs and elegies, made to commemorate the stal death of Hosein; from whom the bulk of those sectaries, as has been already observed, derive the descent, or succession, of their Imâms.

THE first time Obeid'allah went to the great mosque in Yezid's Cufa, after the defeat of Hosein, he made a speech to the behaviour people, which contained several expressions injurious to the to the famemory of Ali, and highly reflecting upon his family. He mily of praised God therein for discovering the truth, and those who Hosein, were in possession of it; as also for assisting Yezid, the emperor of the faithful, and his party; and, lastly, for destroying the liar Hofein, the fon of the liar Ali, and his adherents. This so incensed the friends of the house of Hashem, many of whom were then present, who rose up from their seats with great indignation, that they could scarce forbear shewing their resentment in the most public and violent manner. One of them in particular, who in two battles had lost his eyes, and continued for the most part in the mosque from morning till evening, performing his devotions, cried out, whilst the governor was in the midst of his harangue, O fon of Merjanah! the liar, and the son of the liar, you, your father, and those from whom you derive your commission, kill the sons of the prophets, and yet pretend to speak the words of honest men. Upon which, Obeid allah ordered him to be instantly seized; but he was foon rescued by those of his own party, about 700 of whom were at that time in town. However, he was killed not long after, and hung upon a gibbet, erected for that purpose at a small distance from Cufa; which barbarity rendered Obeidallah extremely odious to the inhabitants of that place. Nor was his bloody treatment of Hofein at all relished by the Khalif; who, upon the arrival of an express dispatched from Cufa, to bring him advice of what had happened, and to congratulate him upon the success of his arms, is reported to have shed tears, and faid, "God curse the son of Somyah," meaning Obeid'allah; "I should have been well pleased without the " death of Hosein. Had he been with me, I should have ce pardoned him. God loved Hosein, but did not suffer him " to arrive at the dignity to which he afpired." Before young Ali, and the women of Hosein's family, entered Damascus, Yezid consulted his courtiers about the disposal of them. One of these told the Khalif, that nothing could better support his interest than the extinction of the line of Hosein; to whom, Yezid, not approving of what he proposed, made no manner of reply. Another of a milder disposition delivered his sentiments in the following terms: "O emperor of the faithful, treat them as would the apostle of God himself, were he to see them in this disconsolate condition." This moved his compassion; which was farther excited, when he saw the head of Hosein; infomuch that he could not forbear breaking out into this pathetic exclamation: "O Hosein, had it been " in my power to have faved thee, thy life should not have been taken away!" When Hosein's wives and children were brought before him, and he saw the women appear in fuch mean and fordid attire, he curfed Obeid'allah again, calling him by way of contempt the fon of Somyab, for fuffering his troops to ftrip them of their most valuable effects in so shameful a manner. He afterwards entered into discourse with Ali, the fon of Hosein, and his fisters Fâtema and Zeinab, wherein some warmth and asperity of expression, not to fay personal reflections, on both sides were used; tho', when the conversation was over, the Khalif ordered them to be conducted to the hot bath, and fent them cloaths fuitable to their quality, as well as all forts of refreshments, to comfort them after the fatigues they had fustained. He also treated the women with the utmost respect; Moawiyah's widows keeping them company for the space of three days, at his command, and mourning with them for Hosein. He once asked Amru. Hasein's son, a child, whom he took with him, as well as his brother Ali, whenever he walked abroad, whether he would fight his fon Khaled? Amru answered, "Give me one knife, " and him another." Which an enemy of the house of Hâfhem taking advantage of, said to Yezid, in order to incense him against the child, " One serpent naturally begets another." But this produced no alteration in the Khalif's conduct. He continued to treat with lenity, not to fay tenderness, the distressed family of Hosein; and dismissed them with great politeness, after they had sufficiently refreshed themselves, and were upon the point of setting out for Me-and, the place of their destination. He ordered his wives and children to take leave of them in a friendly manner; commanded Nooman Ebn Bashar to furnish them with a proper ekorte, as well as a quantity of provisions sufficient to enable them to perform the journey they were to undertake; and once more assured them, in the most moving terms, that he would have faved Hosein, had it been in his power, even the this could not have been done without the loss of some of his own children; and that he would endeavour, by all possible means, to make the place of their residence agreeable to them. The commander of the escorte that attended them so won the hearts of Fâtema and Zeinab, by his tenderness and indulgence, that they offered him all the jewels the plunderers had left them; which he modefully declined accepting. telling them, that, " had he been influenced by any worldly " confiderations, a less reward would have been sufficient; " but that the kindness they had met with from him was " shewn them for God's sake, and on account of their rela-" tion to the prophet." Upon their arrival at Medina, they were visited immediately by the whole family of Hashem, who came to condole with them for the loss of their father, and their unhappy fate. We must not forget to inform our readers, that, according to Khondemir, Ali, furnamed Zein Alabedin, or Zein Alab' addin, i. e. the ornament of the religious, as has been already observed, at this time conducted with the rest of the family to Medina, has all along been considered by the Persians as the fourth lawful Imam s.

FROM the preceding account of Yezid's behaviour to the Where family of Hosein, extracted from some Arab writers of good Hosein's authority, it appears highly improbable, that he should have bead and insulted the head of that Imam; and not, without great diffi-body were culty, have permitted it to be buried at Damascus, as we find buried. afferted by M. D'Herbelot; in which article, as well as many others, he seems to have been missed by the Persian historians. The place in which the Khalif ordered it to be interred there was called Bab al faradis, the garden-gate; from whence it was removed first to Ascalon, or Ashkelon, in Palestine, and afterwards to Caire or Al Kabirah, by the Fâtemite Khalifs of Egypt. Some of those Khalifs erected a monument, or mosque, over it, which went under the name of Mashhad Hosein, the sepulchre of Hosein the martyr. These Khalifs were masters of Syria and Egypt, from before the year 400 till after the year 660 of the Hejra, and pretended that Hosein's head came not in-

to Beyot till after the 500th year of that ara. But that flory has been rejected, fays a reputable Arab author, by the Imarres of the learned. Those princes deduced their origin from Fatema, the daughter of Mohammed, and consequently looked upon themselves as descended from Ali; for which reason they assumed the name, or rather the surname, of Fatemites, as 22 appellation more immediately pointing out the nobility of their With regard to the body of Hosein, it was interred in the plain of Kerbela, where he was flain; and Adade dawla, surnamed also Abu Shaja', the second Soltan of the dynasty of the Buiyans, or Deylamites, raised a sumptuous monument upon the spot where it was inhumed, which is to this day vifited with great devotion by the Persians. This Soltane called his magnificent edifice Kunbud Faiz, which, in the Perfan language, signifies the magnificent dome; but at this time it goes amongst the Arabs under the denomination of Mashbad Hosein, the sepulebre of Hosein the martyr. The Khalif Al Motewakkel, being an enemy to the house of Ali, forbad, under rigorous penalties, any of his subjects to perform the pilgrimage to Hosein's tomb. Nay, in order effectually to prevent this, he intirely razed the mosque built upon the spot, where had been deposited the remains of that Imam; and not content with this, being resolved to efface all traces of it, he attempted to draw a canal of water over that place. But the water, say the Shittes, would never approach it, keeping its sinance out of respect; from whence that water received the denomination of Hair, that is, aftenished and respectful; a name which has fince passed to the sepulchre itself, on account of this miracle. The Shiites call that sepulchre Mashhad Mekaddes, Moali, and Moazeki, i.e. the holy, sublime, and pure place, or fepulchro; because Hosein, whom they regard as a martyr, suffered death there. Nor did this impious attempt of Al Motawakkel, according to some Persian traditions, go long unpunished; Ali soon after appearing to him in his sleep, and, after having reproached him with the outrages committed upon his descendents, gave him seven lashes with a whip that he had in his hand. The Khalif telling his friends the next day what had happened, one of them affured him, that the whip Ali had in his hand was no other weapon than the famous sword Dhu'l-Fakar, which belonged at first to Monda Ebn Hejah, the Sahamite, and fell into the hands of Mohammed at the battle of Bedr, and, after the prophet's death, came into the possession of his fon-in-law Ali; to which he likewise added, that this dream, or vision, portended some signal missortune to him, by way of punishment, for the hatred he bore the family of that Imam. Which prediction, or prognostication, continue the same traditions, was verified two days after, when Al Motawakkel

the affaffinated by some of his servants, that were Turks, at the instigation of his son A Montaser, who, after his death, mounted the Mossem throne. We are told by an author extremely well acquainted with the oriental historians, that the separcher of Hosein stood not very far from that of his sather in; tho', according to an Arab writer of considerable credit, one Naim was angry with any one who would pretend to point out the place where the former of those Imâms lay interest to

THE death of Hosein did not remain long unrevenged; se-Hosein's persons appearing in this and the following reigns, who death demanded the blood of Hosein; that is, in the language of the after-Mossems, insisted upon vengeance being taken of the mur-wards rederers of that Imâm. Al Mokhtâr, one of the chiefs of that venged. faction, in particular, boafted that he had destroyed near 50,000 of the enemies of the house of Ali, without reckoning those who were flain in the battles which he fought. The two titles generally given by the Persians to Hosein are Shahid, the martyr, and Seid, the lord. By the words Al Seidan, the two lords, without any addition, they always understand the two eldest sons of Ali, Hasan and Hosein. According to Ebn Shihnah, the latter of those Imams made before God every twenty-four hours a thousand adorations, or prostrations; and, at the age of fifty-five years, had performed 25 pilgrimages to Mecca on foot; whereas one of them would have been sufficient to have procured salvation for a pious Moslem. We are told by Abu'l-Faraj, that there fell no less than three of his own fons, and seven of those of Ali, with Hosein, when he was killed in the battle fought on the plain of Kerbela u.

YEZDI, in a treatife concerning divine love, relates, that Aromark-Hosein having one day asked his father Ali if he loved him, able saying and received for answer, that he loved him tenderly; he then of Hodemanded of his father if he loved God? to which he also sein. answered in the affirmative. Upon which, Hosein said to him, "Two loves can never meet in the same heart." At these words, Ali was so moved, that he could not forbear shedding tears; when Hosein, touched with the impression his words had made, in order to comfort his father, agains asked him, "Whether he should consider the sin of infidelity, " or his death, as the greater evil?" Ali replied, "I would " rather deliver you up to death than abandon my faith." "By this mark then," faid Hosein, "'tis apparent that the love you have for me is only a natural tenderness; and that " you bear towards God a true love." Many other fayings, attributed to Hosein, have been preserved by the Persians, who hold his memory in the highest veneration, and consider him as the great progenitor of their Imams. Hence it comes to pass, that the day of his death, the 10th of the month Al Maharram, in the year of the Hejra 61, is so celebrated amongst them, that they have all along, from that very year to this day, called it Yaum Hosein, Ruz Hosein, the day of Hosein. Nor can it be doubted, but the anniversary weeping and extravagant lamentation on this day, still kept up by the Perfians, principally contribute to the subastence of the aversion boxe by that nation to the other Moslems, who entertain different sentiments of this great Imâm. The superstitious obfervance of this day, and the many ridiculous fictions framed. by the Shiites concerning Hosein, have been sufficiently exposed by an Arab author, cited often in this work; to whom, for farther satisfaction on this head, we must beg leave to refer our curious and inquisitive readers w.

Salem's wife, at this juncture, borrowed some jewels of the prince of Sogd's lady, which she carried off with her, upon the return of the Arabs into their own dominions. In the mean time, Salem fent a strong detachment, under the command of Mohalleb, to Khowarazm, the principal city of the Turks, or Tartars, in those parts, which exacted an immense fum of the inhabitants, amounting to 50,000,000 pieces of money; part of which he referved for his own use, and sent the rest to Yezid. Then he advanced to Samarkand, forced the citizens to pay him likewise a vast sum of money, and afterwards retired with little loss into the provinces he governed. The city of Khowarazm, in the time of the Khalif Yezid, was the capital of the kingdom of the same name, the Chorasmia of Ptolemy and Herodotus, and the same with that afterwards called Kharizme, Korkang, Orkang, and at present Urgens. It was situated in a western direction from the Jibûn, the Oxus of the antients; or, as the situation of Urgens has been more accurately determined by the modern geographers, in a great plain to the north of the river And, in lat. 30° 50', twenty-five German leagues from the eastern shores of the Caspian sea. The tract called Sogd, or the Sogd of Samarkand, went under the name of Sogdians in the days of Ptolemy and Ammianus Marcellinus, and of Sugdias in those of Dionyfius Afer. The natives were denominated Sogdiani and Sogdii, in the Roman times, as appears from Ptolemy and The Moslems, under the conduct of Moballeb, did not only acquire an immense quantity of plunder in this expedition, but likewise made themselves masters of the kingdom of Kbowarazm *.

earth; in his speeches to the people; which produced the defired effect. For, the citizens, who had always been wellaffected to Hofein, heard these discourses with delight; especially as Abd'allab took care, in them, to give the highest character of that Imam; to expatiate upon his heroical conduct, in preferring to an ignominious life an honourable death = to magnify his merits, and remind them of his supereminent fanctity; and, in fine, to exhibit to their view every thing: that might excite in them a defire of revenging his death, and infoire them with an abhorrence of that government, which had been the cause of it. They, therefore, flocked to him in such numbers, that he soon found himself at the head of a very confiderable force. Yezid, being informed of his progress, fwore he would have him in chains, and accordingly fent a filver collar for him to Merwan, then governor of Medine, with orders to put it about his neck, and fend him to Danascus, if he did not immediately desist from his attempt. But Abd'allab, having secured the affections of the people, ridiculed both the Khalif and his deputy, as well as the collar that had been prepared for him. As Yezid was a man of a very diffolute life, spending his time wholly in drinking wine. and with his dogs, and had not the least regard for religion, he was perfectly abhorred by the Arabs; and confequently the menages he uttered against Abd'allah did not in the least tend to the diminution of his authority. Besides, it was very well known in Arabia, that when his father Moawiyah had reprimanded him for his abandoned course of life, and advised him to conform his actions more to the precepts of the Kerân, he had flighted his wholfome reproofs, and treated with contempt his falutary admonitions; which made the Arabs to confider him as a wretch altogether incorrigible. About this time, Amru Ebn Sa'id, governor of Mecca, having been affured by Abd allah Ebn Amru in Egypt, a person who had studied the prophet Daniel, and was celebrated amongst all the Moslems for his wisdom and knowledge of future events, whom he had consulted on this occasion, that, in his opinion, Ab-Callah Ebn Zobeir would live and die a king; this prejudiced farther in his favour the bulk of the Arab nation. Nay, Amru Ebn Sa'id himself, tho' he secretly hated him, thought it policy, as affairs then stood, to keep up a good understanding with him. This induced some of Yezid's courtiers, who probably before were no friends to Amru, to suggest to the Kbalif, that, had the commandant of Mecca been heartily in his master's interest, he might have seized Abd'allab Ebn Zobeir, and fent him to Damascus. Upon which suggestion, Yezid dismissed Amru from his post, and substituted Walid Ebn Otbab in his room. These commotions happened in the 61st year of the Hejra, about the same time that Salem Ebn Ziyad was employed in the expedition to Samarkand, or at least a little before the commencement of that expedition. According to Abu Jaafar Al Tabari, Salam first advanced to Nisaber, or Naisabour, the capital of Khorasan. which he reduced; and from thence penetrated to Khowarazm, which likewife furrendered to him. The same author also relates, that he detached Mohallob Ebn Abu Safra with a body of troops against Khatan, queen of Bukbara, or Bekhara, who had been joined by the king of Sa'id with an army of 120,000 men. Mohalleb, continues he, notwithstanding the prodigious inequality of numbers, defeated Khatûn, and the king of Sa'id, and dispersed their numerous forces. The king of Sai'd, on whom Khatin had promised to bestow herself in marriage, was killed in the action, together with a confiderable part of his troops; after which, Bulbara, or Bukhara, a very famous and antient city of Mawara'lnahr, Transoniana, or, as it is now called, Great Bukharia, submitted to the victors, and was, with the territory belonging to it, annexed to the Moslem empire. The city of Bukhara, the capital of Great Bukhâria, or rather of the province of Bukhâria, properly so called, and situated in lat. 39° 30', is at present the relidence of the Khan of Great Bukharia, of a vast extent, and fortified with a firong rampart fenced with earth. It stands about seven days journey to the south of Samurkand, upon a little river, that is faid to fall into the Jihan, the Amu, or the Oxus, about the 92° of longitude. This river is called by the Arabs Sogd, or Al Soghd, and, as some writers affert, has its source in the cold and mountainous part of Fargana. Its water is faid to be very bad, and to breed worms in the legs of those who drink it. One of the three parts of Bukbara is formed by the Khan's castle, and the buildings depending upon it; another by the places destined for the Mursas, or officers of the court, and others belonging to the retinue of the Khân; and the third, which is larger than the others, for the burghers, merchants, and other inhabitants. The mosques. baths, and fuch-like public edifices, are built of brick, and of a fine flructure; but the other buildings confift only of earth. The fituation of this place is very convenient for trade, especially that between Grand Tartary, Persia, and the Indies; and the inhabitants actually supply the dominions of the Great Mogul, and part of Persia, with all sorts of dried fruits of a most exquisite flavour. It has produced a very considerable number of learned men, and some of the brightest genius's of the east; amongst whom we may reckon the famous Ebn Sina, or Avicenna, fo well known by his writings even in our part of the world. Some authors place it above a day's day's journey from the Oxus. It was surrounded with delicious gardens, stately towers, magnificent palaces, or rather splendid country-seats, pleasant villages, and sine verdant fields; all which were invironed by a wall of twelve parasanges in extent, in the days of Abulfeda. We are told by Yâkût, that the Arabs passed the Jibûn, the Amû, or the Oxus, over-threw the Bukhârian forces assembled by Khatûn, and possessed themselves of Bukhâra, in the Khalisat of Moâwiyah, about the 55th year of the Hejra. But the best and most antient Arab historians six this expedition, as has been already observed, with greater accuracy and precision, in the 61st year of that æra.

Medina.

WALID EBN OTBAH had no fooner entered upon the government of Mecca than he began to exert his authority, by imprisoning 300 of his predecessor Amru's dependents. However, Amru found means foon to release them; which having done, he undertook a journey to Damascus, was introduced to the Khalif there, and met with a gracious reception from him. But notwithstanding this, Yezid rebuked him for being remis in the execution of his commands, and for not being active enough in extinguishing the rebellion of Abd'allah and his adherents. Amru, being a man of great address and penetration, easily justified his conduct, and that so much to the Khalif's satisfaction, that he told him he was an honester man than those who had taken such pains to misrepresent him; and that he should, for the future, repose an intire confidence in him. About this time, one Najdah, a powerful Arab of Yamâma, appeared at the head of a body of troops he had affembled against Yezid, and discovered a strong disposition to take the oath of allegiance to Abd'allah Ebn Zobeir. In the mean time, the new governor Walid made use of all his skill to circumvent Abd allah; but without effect, that general being always upon his guard. This conduct, however, giving great disgust, as well as terrible apprehensions, to Abd allab, he sent a letter to Yezid, informing him therein, that Walid was totally unfit for the post he had honoured him with; and that if he would fend to Medina a person of a more tractable disposition, all differences between them might easily be composed. Yezid, desirous of peace upon any terms, indiscreetly dismissed Walid, a man of an unshaken fidelity to him, at the infligation of his mortal enemy, and fent Othman Ebn Mohammed Ebn Abu Sofian, a man by no means qualified for so important a trust, to take upon him the government of Medina in his room. Soon after this event, some embassadors, or rather deputies, were sent from that city to Damasrus, where they waited upon Yezid, who received them kindly, and made them confiderable presents; but his converfation gave them such offence, that, upon their return to Medina, they inflamed the people there greatly against him. They represented him as a man wholly addicted to wine, finging girls, and dogs, and void of all religion; for which reafon they publickly renounced their allegiance to him, and were joined herein by many of their fellow-citizens, who came to a resolution to depose him in a formal manner. Al Mondar, one of the embaffadors, instead of returning home, went to Bafra; where he was courteously entertained by Obeid'allah, who had formerly been acquainted with him. Yezid being apprized of this, and of the feditious proceedings of the embassadors at Medina, wrote to Obeid allah to put him under arrest till farther orders. But Obeid allah, considering a compliance with the Khalif's commands in this point as a violation of the laws of hospitality, enabled Al Mondar to make his escape; who, upon his arrival at Medina, confirmed what the other deputies had related of Yezid; to which he likewise added, that his almost total neglect of prayers had rendered him infamous in the fight of all who had any regard for the Mosem faith; and that he would not be bribed by the hundred dinârs given him by the Khalif for that purpose to conceal the truth. This coming to Yezid's ears, he threatened A Mandar with his refentment, and dispatched Al Nooman Ebn Bafbir to Medina, to bring the people there back to a fense of their duty. This he endeavoured to do, by pointing out to them the effusion of Moslem blood, that must be the natural consequence of their persisting in such a rebellion; but without effect. The troubles mentioned here commenced in the b2d year of the Hejra, or of CHRIST 681; in which also died Moseilama Ebn Mokhalled, of Medina, the governor of Egypt. He was succeeded in that post by Sa'id Ebn Yezid At Azdi, who continued in it till the death of Yezid. The tribe of Azd, to which Sa'ld belonged, which was very famous amongst the Arabs, produced several illustrious men, who asfumed the furname of Al Azdi, or the Azdite; amongst whom were Abu Becr Mohammed Ebn Wasa and Abu Ishak Ismael, two celebrated Moslem doctors. The first of these, who died in the 127th year of the Hejra, was one of the most learned of the Tabein, or Tabeites; that is to say, the followers, or adherents, who were the successors of the Companions; and the latter was a native of Basra, who wrote a piece much Mod. The inha-Medina d pose Yezid.

THE people of Medina having renounced all allegiance to bitants of Yezid, and being highly incensed against him, appointed Abd'allah Ebn Moti to preside over the Koreish, and Abd'allah Ebn Hantelah over the Ansars. The latter of these was a perfon of great distinction, and adorned with many excellent endowments. He was one of the embassadors sent lately to Damascus, and took his eight sons along with him. Yezid having been before apprized, that he was very religious and devout, and for that reason extremely popular amongst his fellowcitizens, took care to carefs him more than any of the other deputies that attended him. He made him a present of 100,000 dinars, and every one of his fons 10,000, besides a proper number of vests suitable to the quality of the persons for whom they were designed. In the beginning of the 63d year of the Heira, the Arabs of Medina put their menaces against Yezid in execution. After they had affembled about the pulpit in the mosque there, one of them said, I lay aside Yezid as I do this turbant; and then threw his turbant upon the ground. Another faid, I put away Yezid as I do this shoe; casting away the shoe at the same time from him. These examples being followed by others, there was a large heap of shoes and turbants almost instantly formed upon the spot. Then they dismissed Othman, Yezid's lieutenant, and banished from Medina the house of Ommiyab, together with all their friends and dependents. These, to the number of about a thousand, took refuge in Merivan Ebn Al Hakem's house, where they were so closely besieged by the Hâ/hemite faction, that they found themselves obliged to send to Yezid for immediate assistance; intimating in the letter they wrote to him, that, unless they received speedy relief, they must all inevitably perish. wondered that so considerable a number of men should suffer themselves to be confined, without making the least resistance; and asked Amru Ebn Sa'id, the former governor of Mecca, whom he had lately recalled from thence, whether he would march with a body of troops to Medina, in order to chastize the rebels there? But Amru declining the command of the forces offered him, the Khalif put Weslem Ebn Okba, the very antient and infirm, at the head of the troops that were to undertake the intended expedition. However, the conduct of the friends of the house of Ommiyah, who had suffered themselves to be cooped up in so ignominious a manner, irritated Meslem to such a degree, that he pronounced them both cowards and traitors to their prince, and declared that they ought not to be delivered before they had at least made one effort to extricate themselves out of the difficulties in which their pufillanimity had chiefly contributed to involve them. But Yezid's command being peremptory, he was obliged to submit. The Khalif ordered him to spare Ali, the fon of Hosein, and his family, as they had had no hand at all in the present commotions. He also ordered him to summon the city of Medina, upon his arrival before it, three days fucceffively; and if, after such summons, the citizens resuled to furrender the town, to take it by storm, and give it up to the foldiers to be plundered for three whole days. The inhabitants of Medina, being apprized of the impending storm, permitted all the members of the house of Ommiyab, together with their friends and adherents, to retire quietly out of the city; tho', before their departure, they extorted from them a promise never to appear in arms, or commit any hostilities. against the dominant faction ..

MESLEM EBN OKBA AL MARSI, having received his in-Meslem structions from the Khalif, begun his march for Medina with takes Me-5000 foot and 12,000 horse; and, upon his arrival before the dina by town, the citizens having refused to surrender, made the ne-form, and cessary preparations for a general assault. He proposed to at-plunders tack the place on the east fide, that the troops which defended ". it, and had furrounded it with a ditch for their fecurity, might have the fun in their faces; and this proved of fignal fervice to him. However, the garison, for a considerable time, made a vigorous desence; insomuch that Meslem advanced very slowly in the siege. But at last most of the Ansar's and the principal' officers being killed, the Arabs within the town offered to capitulate. Messem refused to grant them any terms; and infifted upon their furrendering at discretion. But this last summons not being complied with, the Moslem general, after a faint opposition, entered the place; sent Ali, whom he treated with great respect, in pursuance of the orders he had received, home upon his own camel; put all the men he met with to the fword; and, tho' the prophet was buried there, permitted the Syrian forces to get a thousand women with thild, and to pillage the city for three days together, without

Those that escaped the sword, he obliged to intermission. own themselves slaves and vassals to Yezid; for which extreme feverity the Arabs furnamed him Al Mufrif, i. e. extravagant, exorbitant; because his orders did not extend to authorize the enormities he had committed. Medina was taken in the night, towards the close of the month Dhu lhajja, in the year of the Hejra 63, or of our LORD 682. The Moslems confidered Ebn Okba ever after as an impious person, for his barbarity to the citizens of Meaina, especially as the prophet himfelf had denounced a fort of curse against him, which was couched in the following terms: " If any man shall hereafter " fack or plunder my city, the wrath of God shall most cerse tainly remain upon him b."

Yezid dies.

AFTER the reduction of Medina, Messem marched with his army towards Mecca, in order to chastize the insolence of Abd'allab Ebn Zobeir, who then resided in that place; but he died on his march, in the month of Al Moharram, the following year. Upon his death, Hosein Ebn Thamir Al Selwi took upon him the command of the army, and advanced to Mecca, which he belieged for the space of forty days; during which term, he battered the town, by the affiftance of his military engines, with so much fury, that he beat down a great part of the famous temple there, and burnt the rest. Nor had the city itfelf escaped the same fate, had not the news of Yezid's death recalled Hosein into Syria, and forced him to abandon the siege c.

The Syreturn bo i:e.

ABD'ALLAH EBN ZOBEIR had before been informed of rian forces the Khalif's decease, and even apprized the Syrian troops of it from the walls; asking them, at the same time, for whom they fought, as Yezid was most certainly dead? However, they would not believe him; but continued the fiege with great vigour, till they received farther information. As foon as this news was confirmed, Hosein told Abd'allab, that, as a farther effusion of Moslem blood was altogether unnecessary, he would take the oath of allegiance to him; and affured him, that all the forces under his command, amongst which were all the principal men of Syria, should be at his devotion. But Abd'allah, at this juncture, durst not trust him; and therefore refused the overture made him; tho' afterwards, when too late, he repented of this conduct. During the conference between them, Hosein turned his horse aside, in order to avoid killing some of the temple pigeons, that were pecking

Hosein replied, that " he would never for the fu-" ture fight against him." After which, he desired leave to go in procession round the Caaba; which was immediately granted. Some pretend, that the temple was not fet on fire by the engines employed by the Syrian army in the fiege; but by a little fire accidentally wasted by the wind from the top of Hoscin's spear, the sparks of which were communicated from thence to the hangings and wood-work of that edifice.' We must not forget to remark, that the house of Ommiyah attended Hosein into Syria; and that Yezid, before his decease, having received advice of the death of Meslem, confirmed Hosein Ebn Thamir Al Selwi in the command of the Moslem forces before Mecca. The engines made use of by Hosein in the siege of that place were a species of the catapult, or catapulta, a military machine generally employed on fuch occasions by the antients, as we learn from Abu Jaafar Al Tabari d.

YEZID died at Hawwarin, in the territory of Hems, in Descripthe beginning of the former Rabi, and the 64th year of the tion of Hejra, or of CHRIST 684. He died in the 39th year of his Yezid's age, after he had reigned about three years and fix or eight person, months. As to his person, he was either of a ruddy, accord-and his ing to Abulfeda, or, as Abu Jaafar will have it, of a swarthy character. complexion. He was a tall thin man, had a handsome beard tinged with Al Henna, curled hair, black eyes, leprous fingers, and a face pitted with the small-pox. His under-lip was inverted, when be laughed. He left behind him several children of both fexes. His fon Khâled is reported to have been skilled in the art of alchemy, and his son Abd'allah to have been the most exact archer of all the Arabs of his time. His mother's name was Meisûn, the daughter of Yahdak, of the tribe of Calb. She had an excellent genius for poetry; and, at Moawiyah's command, took her son Yezid with her into the defart amongst her own relations there, in order to inspire him with poetic sentiments. Nor was this education altogether thrown away upon him, as he discovered himself capable of drawing up a tolerable good copy of Arabic verses, on several occasions. Yezid was the first Khalif that drank wine publickly, and was waited upon by eunuchs; which gave great offence to the Mohammedans. He was extremely fond of dogs; which likewise not a little disgusted vast numbers of his subjects, as the more scrupulous Moslems have an aversion to those animals. But he was rendered the most disagreeable to the Arabs by his avarice and impiety. This occasioned a certain author to observe, that the Moslem empire could only flourish either under a pious prince, such as were the four first Khalifs, or a liberal one, such as was Moawiyah; and consequently that, under fuch an impious and avaritious prince as Yezid, every thing must be lost. The ravages committed at Medina, or the city of the prophet, by this Khalif's order, are considered by the Mohammedan doctors as the highest instance of his impiety, and as the principal cause of his being cut off in the flower of his age. In support of which notion, they produce this faying of Mohammed, Whoever injureth Medina shall melt away, even as salt melteth away in the water. The Persian writers have the memory of Yezid in such abhorrence, that they always mention him with abomination. and generally annex to his name the following malediction, The curse of God be upon him. Which they do not so much on account of his vices, as because of the death of Hosein, whom, with all his family, he attempted first to destroy by poison, and afterwards caused to be killed on the plain of Kerbela. His principal secretary of state was Abd'allah Ebn Aws, and, after him, Raml Ebn Omar Al Adri; his Kâdi, or judge, Ebn Idris Al Holwani; his chamberlain, Khâled his servant, or, as others fay, Safwan; and the captain of his guards. Hamid Ebn Kharbat Ebn Yahdak, of the tribe of Calb, and afterwards Amer Ebn Abd'allah Al Hamadani. The first day of his Khalifat was Saturday, and the last Monday. He was looked upon as so irreligious a prince, that some of the Moslems, and particularly the Persians, called, in after-ages, all those persons void of religion Yezid and Yzit. The Persian poet Jami being one of these, a man, named Mezid, was refolved to infult him on that account; and, therefore, one day, as foon as he entered the room where an affembly was met at Jami's house, he cried out with a loud voice, The curse of God fall upon Yezid! Jami perceiving that these words were pointed at him, instantly replied, May that curse fall upon Yezid and Mezid! The smartness of which repartee consists in the words, upon Mezid, which were not only applicable to the aggressor, but likewise denoted MORE AND MORE .

In the Khalifat of Yezid, the Moslems made an absolute Carquests conquest of Khorasan and Khowarazm, and put the territories made by of the prince of Samarkand under contribution. The motto, the Mosor inscription, of his seal was, God is our Lord. He was lems in the buried at Damascus, in the sepulchre of the little gate; and his Khalifat son Mosawiyah, whom he nominated, when at the point of of Yezid. death, emperor of the saithful, said the prayers usual on such occasions over him. Theophanes barely mentions the death of Yezid, whom he calls Izid, without taking any particular notice of the cause, circumstances, or effects of it; and Dionysius Telmarensis only tells us, that Yezid died in the year of Seleucus 992, or of Christ 681, and was succeeded by Merwan. There is an author, named Al Fadhl Al Berid, who has written the history of this Khalif, under the title of Akbar Yezids.

His yah II. mother was the daughter of Hashem, or, as others say, of succeeds Khâled Ebn Abu Hâshem Ebn Otba Ebn Rabia Ebn Abd Shams, his father The Arab writers represent this young prince as of a religious Yezid. disposition, but of a very weak constitution; and tell us, that he had not completed the twenty-first year of his age, when he mounted the Moslem throne. He was of the sect of the Kadarians, having been instructed in their principles by his favourite master Omar Al Maksus, whom he consulted, in order to know of him whether he should accept of the Khalifat, or not. Omar told him, that if he found himself equal to the duties of that arduous post, he ought to accept of the high dignity offered him; if not, that he ought to decline it. Some of the eastern writers make the Kadarians to have been originally a branch of the Motazalites, or the followers of Wasel Ebn Ata, who, with their master, were expelled the school of Hasan of Basra, whose scholar he was, and thenceforth called Motuzalites, or Separatists; the others look upon Kadarians as really a more antient name than that of Motazalites; Mabad Al Johni, and his adherents, who disputed the doctrine of predestination before Wasel quitted his master, having gone by that appellation. For which reason, some use the denomination of Kadarians as more extensive than the other, and comprehend all the Motazulites under it. This seed deny absolute predestination, saying, that evil and injustice ought not to be attributed to God, but to man, who is a free agent, and may therefore be rewarded or punished for his actions; which God has granted him power either to do or to let alone. And hence it is faid they are called Kadarians, because they deny Al Kadr, or God's absolute decree tho' others, thinking it not so proper to affix a name to a section from a doctrine which they combat, will have it come from Kadr, or Kodrat, i. e. power, because they affert man's power to act freely. Those, however, who give the name Kadarians to the Motazalites are their enemies; for they disclaim it, and give it to their antagonists the Jabarians, who likewife refuse it, as an infamous appellation, because Mohammed is faid to have declared the Kadarians to be the Magians of, his followers. But what the opinion of these Kadarians in Mohammed's time was, is very uncertain, The Motazalites fay the name belongs to those who affert predestination, and make God the author of good and evil, viz. the Jabarians; but all the other Mobammedan fects agree to fix it upon the Motazalites, who, they say, are like the Magians, in establishing two principles, light, or God, the author of good, and darkness, or the devil, the author of evil. But this cannot be faid of the Motazalites, who generally ascribe men's good deeds to God, but their evil deeds to themselves; meaning thereby, that man has a free liberty and power to do ejther good or evil, and is master of his actions. For which reason it is, that the other Mobammedans call them Magians, because they affert another author of actions besides GoD. And, indeed, it is a difficult matter to fay what Mohammed's own opinion was in this matter. For, on the one fide, the Kerân itself is pretty plain for absolute predestination, and many sayings of Mohammed are recorded to that purpose. On the other, it is urged in behalf of the Motazalites, that Mohammed declaring, that the Kadarians and Morgians had been cursed by the tongues of seventy prophets, and being asked who the Kadarians were, answered, Those who afferted, that God predestinated them to be guilty of rebellion, and yet punishes them for it. Al Hasan is also said to have declared, that God fent Mohammed to the Arabs, while they were Kadarians, or Jabarians, and laid their fins upon GoD; and, in confirmation of this point, a passage is produced out of the Karan. Both parties, therefore, have recourse to the testimony of Mohammed in support of their respective, tho' contrary, opinions; and consequently make him to contradict himself at least in some of his decisions. Ebn Awn, one of the most. celebrated Niosem doctors, would not falute a Kadarian, if he met him; faying, that the fect to which he belonged ought, to be considered as the Magians of the Mohammedans; and Shaabi, another of those doctors, makes the Kadarians to have agreed in all points with the Motazalites. Abu Zakaria Yabya Ebn Abu'lkhair, a doctor following the sentiments of the samous Al Shâfei, has written a treatise against the tenets of the Kadarians, intituled, Entessar fil redd ala al Kadaria al albrar. Omar Al Maksia seems to have been one of the principal members of this sect, in the days of Yezid, who probably savoured it, as he intrusted him with the education of his son. Al Maksia told this young prince, that, unless he sound himself capable of administering justice exactly to the Massems, he ought by no means to take upon himself the title of emperor of the faithful 2.

proceeding to an election, the choice fell upon Merwan Ebn Al Hakem, who was the fourth Khalif of Syria. However, Abd'allah Ebn Zobeir had been advanced to the Khalifat, in Arabia, after the death of Yezid. He presided over Hejaz, Yaman, Irâk, Khorafan, Egypt, and all Syria, except that part called Ordon, or Al Oroddan, which adhered to Yezid. We are told by Abu'l-Faraj, that Moâwiyah's speech, immediately preceding his abdication, was to the following effect: " My grandfather Moâwiyah deprived a man more worthy than " himself of the Khalifat. Nor did my father merit that " fublime dignity, though he obtained it. BEFORE we proceed directly in our history, we must here Some combeg leave, by way of digression, to give a short account of motions in some commotions that happened in Irak immediately after the Irak. Obeid'allab Ebn Ziyad, the governor of death of Yezid. Bafra, being apprized of that event, represented, in a set speech, to the Basrans, that " he himself was their country-" man, as being a native of Bafra; that, since he had taken " the government upon him, he had destroyed 140,000 of " their enemies; that there was no person surviving that de-" struction from whom they had any reason to apprehend the least opposition; that the territories of Basra formed "the most considerable province of the empire, both with e regard to their extent, and the number and valour of their 16 inhabitants; that, till the commotions in Syria were ap-66 peafed, they ought to appoint a person to preside over them, " who was duly qualified to be the protector of their state; " and that, after this, if the Moslems elected a Khalif dis-" agreeable to them, they might, under the conduct of the " person they had chosen, affert their independency." The Bastrans, clearly perceiving his intention in this speech, offered him the government of their country; which he at first affected to refuse, but afterwards accepted, at the repeated follicitation of his friends. However, as foon as it was known that the Cufans would not acknowledge him, but even threw dust, or gravel, upon his deputy, the Basrans immediately deserted him, and even expelled him their city. Nor could he prevail either upon the Najari, a tribe of the Anfars, or even his own relations, tho' he had divided a great part of the 16,000,000 pieces of money, found in the treasury of Bafra, amongst them, and kept the remainder himself, to espouse his quarrel. So odious had he rendered himself to all ranks and degrees of men by the enormous cruelties he had committed! Nor could his brother Abd'allah, who kept him disguised in women's cloaths at Masua's house, lest any violence should have been offered his person, protect him from the rage and fury of the Basrans, tho' he distributed 200,000 pieces of money amongst them; and though Masad exerted himself, to the utmost extent of his abilities, in his favour. He was, therefore, at last constrained to abandon the city, attended by an escorte of 100 men, that had been assigned him by Masud; and, immediately after his departure, the mob plundered his house, and pursued him. Being much fatigued by riding upon a camel in the night, he exchanged that beaft for an als; and, with great difficulty, made his escape into Syria. Soon after his arrival at Damascus, Hosein Ebn Thamir. Al Selwi returned thither, with the troops that had formed the fiege of Mecca, and gave a faithful account to Merwan of the situation of affairs on that side. He likewise informed him of his offer to take the oath of allegiance to Abd'allah Ebn Zobeir, who refused to accept of it, or at least to undertake a journey to Damascus, in order to be invested there with the supreme authority. He therefore advised Merwan, and the house of Ommiyah, to take care of themselves in time, and fix their interest upon a solid basis, by the election of a new Imâm, before the torrent of faction was too rapid to be stemmed. Merwan, after hearing Hosein's discourse, proposed to make his submission to Abd'allah Ebn Zobeir; but was dive ted from his resolution by Obeid'allah Ebn Ziyad, who told him, that, in the present conjuncture, no superior ought to be acknowleged by him who was at the head of the Koreish. The people of Damascus had constituted Dahak Ebn Kais Al Amri their protector, till the Moslems should concur in the election of an Imâm. Dahâk favoured Abd'allah, and declared his ir tention of supporting him. The Basrans were altogether in tumult and confusion, and could not fix upon a governor, during the interregnum, after their ejection of Obeid'allah. This induced them at last to write to Abd allah, to take the government upon him. He complied with their request; but could not be prevailed upon to stir from Mecca, at that time the place of his residence. Nor could Merwan be persuaded to permit any of the Syrians to perform the pilgrimage thither, lest they should join Abd'allah, and thereby contribute to his exclusion from the Moslem throne k.

However, Abd'allah might eafily have fixed himself in the Khalifat, and have settled his interest upon a lasting foundation, had he not too rashly formed a design either to banish or exterminate the house of Ommiyah; and, in consequence of this scheme, sent orders to his lieutenant at Medina to cut off, or, as others fay, eject every member of that house. He was surnamed, according to some, Abu Becr, or, as others will have it, Abu Habib. His mother was Asma, the daughter of the first Khalif Abu Becr. He was inaugurated at Mecca on the ninth day of the month of Rajeb, after there had been an interregnum during the former and latter Tomada, and the eight first days of Rajeb. He appointed his brother Masab, or Masab, Ebn Zobeir governor of Basra, Abd'allah Ebn Moti that of Cufa, his brother Obeidah Ebn Zobeir that of Medina, and sent Abd'alrahman Ebn Okba Ebn Jabram in the same capacity to Egypt. to which place they had made their escape, after they found it necessary, for their own safety, to take their leave of Medina. Syria, therefore, or rather the whole Moslem empire, was at this time divided into two potent factions; one of which, under the conduct of Hassan Ebn Malec, declared for Merwan, and the other, under that of Debak Ebn Kais, for Abd'allah. The latter was a person of great distinction, and had been constituted by Moawiyah I. commandant at Cufa, in the 54th year of the Hejra. His adherents, from his father Kais's name, were denominated Kaisians. Several conferences were held between the leaders of these factions, and all possible methods made use of to dispose both parties to an accommodation; but without effect. The forces on both fides. therefore, commanded by Merwan and Dehak, found themfelves at last obliged to come to a general action, which ended in the defeat of the Kaisians. As soon as they began to break, Merwan sounded a retreat, and would not suffer his men to pursue them. The battle was fought at Marj Raht, a place in the plain of Damascus, at a small distance from that city. Debâk himself was killed upon the spot, together with a great number of his horse, and about eighty of the Syrian nobility. When Dehâk's head was brought to Merwan, at the fight of it he expressed great concern, and said, ". This is a wery preposterous thing, that I, who am an old man, and " whose bones are so wasted, that I am reduced almost to 66 nothing, should bring armies together, in order to cut one another to pieces." After this victory, the citizens of Damascus submitted to Merwan, who lived in the house where Moâwiyab used to reside. He also married Yezid's widow. having before declared that Khalif's fon Khâled, then a minor. his fuccessor. However, Abd allah Ebn Zobeir kept his ground still in Arabia, tho' the inhabitants of Damascus had renewed their oath of fidelity to Merwan, after the battle of Marj Raht, in the month of Dhu'lkaada. Soon after which event, the people of Hems, receiving advice of the death and defeat of Dehak, revolted from Abd'allah Ebn Zobeir, whose interest they had espoused; upon which, Nooman Ebn Bashir, Abd'allah's governor there, betook himself, together with his wife and family, to flight. But the citizens pursued him, cut off his head, and brought it with them, as well as his wife and children, in triumph to Hems. In the beginning, therefore, of the 65th year of the Hejra, Merwan was in possession of the Khalifat of Syria, as Abd'allah was of that of Hejaz, Yaman, Egypt, and Irâk m.

MERWAN, foon after his accession, advanced at the head of Merwan a confiderable army towards the frontiers of Egypt. Ab- conquers d'alrahman Ebn Okha Ebn Jahram, Abd'allah's lieutenant there, Egy Pt. being informed before of his delign, had made the necessary dispositions for giving him a proper reception, in case he should attempt to make an impression upon that country. He sent before him Amru Ebn Sa'id, with a body of troops, to facilitate the passage of his forces, as well as the conquest of Abd alrahmân being worsted in several brisk actions that happened between him and the Syrians, at last, for a sum of money, surrendered the whole country to Merwan, and retired with the Arabs under his command into Hejâz. Syrian troops then immediately possessed themselves of Egypt, and obliged the inhabitants of that region to take the oath of allegiance to Merwan. Things being in this happy situation, the Syrian Khalif appointed his fon Abd'alaziz to preside over Egypt, and, with the greatest part of his forces, returned to Whilst he was upon his march for that city, he was informed, that Abd'allab had fent his brother Mus'ab against him with a powerful army. Upon the arrival of this disagreeable news, Merwan detached Amru Ebn Sa'îd, with a body of his troops, to give the enemy battle, without loss of Amru foon came up with Mus'ab, brought him to a general action, and intirely defeated him. In fine, Mus'ab was forced to betake himself to a shameful flight, a great part of his men were cut to pieces upon the spot, and the remainder of them so dispersed, that they found it impossible to rally. After which, Merwan's troops, having sustained a very inconsiderable loss, enter'd Damascus in a triumphant manner ".

This year the people of Khorasan chose Salem Ebn Ziyad, Salem who had before been governor of that province, for their elected protector, till the Moslems could concur in their election of an protector Imam. Salem continued in this post about two months; and, of Khorarduring that short term, rendered himself extremely popular san. amongst those who had put themselves under his protection. He had likewise discharged the duties of his sunction, when governor, so much to their satisfaction, that, within the space of a few years, they named above 20,000 children, born amongst them, Salem, out of their great regard and affection for him. The natives of Khorasan, therefore, enjoyed perfect tranquillity at this time, when tumults and seditions, not to say open war, disturbed the repose of many other parts of

128 In the 65th year of the Hejra, the followers of Ali, and An insurrection of their dependents, at Cufa, likewise put themselves in motion. They proposed to afferable in a body at Nokhailah, and march the followers of from thence into Syria the following year, in order to revenge Aliagainst the death of Hosein. As the Cusans now restected upon their both the base and perfidious conduct to that Imam with the utmost de-Khalîfs. teffation, they thought themselves obliged, both in point of honour and duty, to take vengeance of his murderers, as the best atonement they could make for so enormous a crime. For this purpole, they fent circular letters to their friends, inviting them to contribute all in their power to the execution of so laudable a defign. The five principal persons, to whom the management of the whole affair was committed, Solimun Ebn Sorad, who was one of the Companions, Mosabbib Ebn Nahbah, one of Ali's most intimate friends, Abd allah Ebn Sa'id, Abd'allah Ebn Wâli, and Refaa Ebn Shaddad, met together at Soliman's house, attended by a vast number of their adherents, in order to concert the proper measures that were to be pursued on this occasion. To the Shiites, or sectaries of Ali, now assembled, Mosabbib made an elegant speech : wherein he fully fet forth the heinousness of the crime the Cafans had been guilty of, in deserting Hosein, the grandson of the prophet, and his family, after they had invited him to their city, and so solemnly engaged to support him; adding. that they could no otherwise, in any degree, atone for that crime, than by bringing his murderers to condign punishment; which might easily be effected, if they could pitch upon a proper general to lead them against the perpetrators and abettors of that execrable fact. Refaa then proposed to the affembly, for a general, Soliman Ebn Sorad, the chief of their fect, or rather political party; a man reverenced by all for his years, dignity, piety, and experience; who was unanimously elected, and, after having made a speech suitable to the occasion, accepted of the command. Abd'allah Ebn Waliby the unanimous suffrages of all the Moslems present, was then appointed treasurer, and a considerable sum of money depofited in his hands. After which, Soliman dispatched circular letters to Sand Ebn Hodaifa, and others, to excite them to act with vigour, and forward as much as possible the execution of the plan of operations that had been formed; and, in a short time, received from them such satisfactory answers, as greatly animated both him and his friends. It may not be improper here to observe, that this affair had been in agitation ever fince the death of Yezid; so that the followers of Ali had amassed vast quantities of provisions, erected large magazines; and, in short, taken all the necessary precautions to render this enterprize successful. It has been remarked by Abu'l-

Faraj, that Solimân was an Arab of the tribe of Khozâa; and that Merwân Ebn Al Hakem, whose mother, Amena Bint Alkama, was of the house of Safwân, was the first of the Khalifs who made his way to the Mossem throne by the assistance of the sword P.

ABOUT fix months after the death of Yezid, in the month of They af-Ramadân, Al Mokhtar Ebn Abu Obeidah came to Cufa, and semble a brought along with him Ibrahim Ebn Mohammed Ebn Telha, in body of order to collect the tribute of that city for Abd' allah Ebn Zebeir, 4000 who had been elected Khalif by the Arabs. This man, pretend-men; ing to act under the direction of Mohammed Ebn Hanifiyah, one of Ali's fons, was at first not a little caressed by the followers of that Imam. But Al Mokhtar afterwards depreciated the merits and capacity of Soliman Ebn Sorad Al Khzoai, and Ibrabim having declared in very warm terms against the sentiments contained in a speech of Abd'allah Ebn Yezid, then governor of Cufa, which seemed to favour the sectaries, or malecontents, they were both for some time treated with less respect by the Shiites, as well as by Abd'allah Ebn Yezid. Nay, Ibrahim, by his conduct, so incensed them, that Mosabbib threatened him with an affaffination; tho' afterwards finding means to pacify the governor, both he and Al Mokhtar recovered their former esteem; and Soliman, at the head of the Shiites, soon after appeared in arms. The troops he affembled on this occasion, according to Abu'l-Faraj, amounted to about 4000 men 9.

At this time, the Motazalites, or Separatists, who had as fulled Abd' allah Ebn Zobeir in the defence of Mecca, aban-creases to doned him, and retired to Basra. Obeid' allah Ebn Ziyad, one of the governor of that city, who was always their most impla-16,000. cable enemy, had formerly done his utmost to extirpate them; so that they found themselves obliged, in order to avoid the sate he intended them, to sly to Mecca, and put themselves there under the protection of Abd' allah Ebn Zobeir. As he then stood in great need of their assistance, he gave them a savourable reception, without making any inquiry into the principles they maintained; as they, on their side, being then in very distressed circumstances, did not think it proper, or expedient, to ask him any questions either about his religious or political sentiments. However, some time after, before they engaged themselves thoroughly in his service, they recollected, that both he and his father Zobeir had persecuted them on account of Othman's death; and therefore resolved to take an occasion from hence to discover his present disposition towards them. Coming to him accordingly in a body, they defired to know his opinion of that event; but having at that time very few of his friends about him, and clearly perceiving their view in proposing such a question to him, he told them, that, if they would return in the evening, he would give them a fatisfactory answer. In the mean time, he posted a proper party of the guards in double ranks about his house; which hinder'd the Motazalites, when they returned, from proceeding to acts of violence. However, one of the most eloquent of them made a speech, wherein he enumerated the dispensation's of providence towards them, as well as all the Khalifs that had prefided over the Moslems fince the death of Mohammed. . reflected severely upon Othman's administration, and, in fine, endeavoured to justify the murder of that Imam. Abd allah replied, that, with regard to Mohammed, on whom too great encomiums could not be passed, as well as Abu Becr and Omar, he perfectly agreed with him in what he had advanced ; but that, as no man living was better acquainted with Othman than himself, he must beg leave to declare, that he believed that Khalif to have been wrongfully murdered; that he never wrote the letter laid to his charge; and that he should always support Othmân's friends, and oppose his enemies, to the utmost of his power. To this they answered, GoD is clear of thee, thou enemy of GoD! Which he instantly ecchoed again, and they immediately took their leave of Mecca. Some of them went to Yamama, and others to Bafra. The latter animated one another to some bold attempt in favour of religion; and, having been joined by feveral stragglers upon the road, before they reached Basra, formed a body of 300 They enter'd the town, when every thing was in confusion, on account of Obeid'allah's precipitate retreat, or rather flight, into Syria; which gave them an opportunity of opening the public prisons, and constraining the malefactors they took from thence to be incorporated amongst them. However, both the Motazalites and their companions, after the commotion was appealed, were foon dispersed, and obliged to abandon Bafra. As for the forces affembled by Soliman, if we will believe Abu Jaafar Al Tabari, they soon increased from 4000 to 16000 men. But before we can oblige our readers with the particulars of this expedition, and the fate he met with in the conclusion of it, in a satisfactory manner, it will be proper to premise a short and concise account of the famous Mokhtar, or Al Mokhtar, as he is called by the Arab historians, the scourge of the enemies of the house of Ali,

THE followers of Ali had not entertained the most favour- An acable fentiments of Al Mokhtar Ebn Abu Obeidah, fince the time count of he was supposed to have been too remiss in the service of Ha. Al Mokhson. But he recovered his esteem with that party, when he tar. not only entertained in his house Moslem, who had been sent to Cafa by Hosein, to take the suffrages of the Cafans, in a very hospitable manner, but likewise made use of all his interest privately to serve him; tho' he still thought fit to appear amongst Obeid'allab's friends, in order to prevent suspicion. But Obeid'allah, having secret intelligence of his conduct, upbraided him with it, and gave him such a blow with his stick upon the face, that he beat out one of his eyes. Not. content with this, he fent him immediately to prison, and detained him there till the death of Holein; when, finding means to make a proper application to Yezid, he was fet at liberty by the express command of the Khalif. Obeid'allab. as his interest required, was very desirous of continuing his detention, but durst not disobey the Khalif; and therefore released him, but ordered him to quit the territories of Cafa within the space of three days. Al Mokhtar then made the best of his way to Hejaz, where meeting with one of his friends, who asked him how he came to lose his eye, he said, "The "fon of a whore has beat it out; but GoD kill me if I do not " fome time or other cut him to pieces." Al Mokhtar afterwards being told by the Arab with whom he was conversing, that Abd'allah Ebn Zabeir had made Mecca his residence, he delivered himself in the following terms: "His affairs will " never be in a flourishing situation, till you see Al Makhtar at "the head of his forces, with orders to revenge the death of " Hosein. I will then destroy as many, by way of vengeance " for the murder of that Imam, as there perished on account " of the blood of John the fon of Zacharias, on whom be " peace." For the illustration of which passage, it must be observed, that the Moslems hold in a very high veneration the memory of St. John the Baptist, on account of the honourable mention made of him in the third chapter of the Korân. Nor does the commentary on this passage, drawn up by Hofein Waez, a French version of which has been published, give a less advantageous character of that faint. As a farther proof of his fanctity, and the iniquity of his murderers, the Mobammedans have also a tradition, which contains an account of the vengeance taken upon the Yews for the perpetration of that horrid fact, and is to the following effect: "The general either of Bakhtnafr, Nebuchadnezzar, or Gu-" darz, Antiochus Epiphanes, in an expedition against Jeru-66 falem, entering the temple, faw blood bubbling upon the " great altar there; and asking the reason of it, the Jews told him it was the blood of a facrifice which had not been accepted of God: to which he replied, that they had not told him the truth, and ordered a thousand of them to be see flain on the altar; but the blood not ceasing, he told them, that, if they would not confess the truth, he would not spare one of them; whereupon they acknowledged it was the blood of John: and the general faid, Thus hath your LORD " taken vengeance on you; and then cried out, O John! my " LORD and thy LORD knoweth what bath befallen thy people." for thy fake; wherefore let thy blood stop, by Gon's permifse fion, lest I leave not one of them alive: upon which the 66 blood immediately stopped." To this tradition Mokhtar apparently alluded, in his discourse with the Arab of Hejaz; after his departure from whom he went to Mecca, in order to offer his fervice to Abd'allah Ebn Zobeir, and arrived there foon after his inauguration. But not meeting with proper encouragement there, he retired to Tayef; and, in about a year's time, returned to Mecca. Soon after his arrival there, Abd'allah, by the affiftance of Abbas Ebn Sahel, engaged him in his service. However, Mokhtar could not be prevailed upon to take the oath of allegiance to Abd'allah, before the latter had promised to make use of him in all his most weighty affairs, and grant him free access to him on all occasions, even before any other person. After this, he behaved with great bravery during the fiege of Mecca, which was raifed upon the news of Yezid's death; and continued above five months with Abd'allah after that event. But not being advanced to any confiderable post, and being informed that the sectaries at Cufa only wanted a proper general, in order to carry all before them, he immediately set out for that city. Every mosque on the road he visited, performed his devotions in them all, and harangued the people he found therein, affuring them of victory, and a speedy deliverance from all the grievances they laboured under. He had no fooner entered Cufa, than he convoked the leaders of the sectaries there; telling them, that he came from Mohammed Ebn Hanifiyah, the mine of excellency, the Imâm that directed the right way, and representing to them the incapacity of Soliman for the undertaking in which he was foon to imbark. These two points he repeated to them so often, that at last he made an impression upon the minds of many of the Shiites in his favour; though the fu-Dig tized by GOOGLE perior perior interest, age, and authority, of Soliman rendered it impossible for him to wrest the command out of his hands. However, he comforted himself with the hopes of being vested with the supreme authority, and consequently with the command of all the Shite forces, in case Soliman should miscarry in the projected expedition. Nevertheless, for fome time, his interest declined to such a degree, that, upon sufpicion of his having formed a defign of feizing upon the province, he was surprized by a detachment of Soliman's troops, conducted to prison, and for a certain term kept there closely confined. We must not forget to remark, that Theophanes calls the person, of whom we have here been giving our readers an account, Mouchar, or Muchar, and Mouktar, not Mochtar, as has been afferted by Mr. Ockley. He also tells us, that this Muchar, tho' an impostor, pretended to act the prophet, made himself master of Persia, and occasioned amongst the Arabs many commotions. From whence, in conjunction with many more instances of the like kind that occur, some of which have already been taken notice of in this work, we may infer, that a most confused, indistinct, and imperfect relation of the Arab affairs has been handed down to us by the later Greek and Latin historians s.

I commend to thee my family and my child. OGOD! preserve me in them! and the latter, by way of answer to his daughter, when the asked him how he could abandon her, Child, thy father flies from his fin to his God. Upon the arrival of these volunteers, Solimân took a review of the troops under his command, and found them to amount to above 4000 effective men; though the Cûfans had promifed to supply him with at least four times that number. Two thousand of these who had engaged to attend Soliman, had been drawn off by Moktur; who, tho' a pretended friend to the cause he espoused, entertained very indifferent fentiments of the military capacity of that general; and the other 10,000 chose rather to violate their oaths, and abandon the engagements they had entered · into, than to run the risk of being cut to pieces by a superior enemy. However, Solimân did not neglect to animate his men, by affuring them, that they were to fight for another world, and not for this; and that therefore, whatever should be the fate of the present expedition, they might depend upon a future state of eternal and uninterrupted felicity. council of war being held, two plans of operations were proposed to the general; according to the first of which, the troops were to return to Cufa, and put to the sword all those who had deferted Hosein in that city; but the latter required them immediately to march into Syria, and take wengeance of Obeid'allab there, who had been the principal cause, if not the absolute author, of the destruction of that Imâm. for several weighty reasons and considerations, meeting with Solimân's approbation, he made the necessary dispositions for putting it in immediate execution; tho' Ibrabim Ebn Mehammed Ebn Telha, Abd'allah Ebn Zobeir's collector of the tribute at Cûfa, and Abd'allah Ebn Yezid, the governor of that city, who were both in the interest of the house of Hashem, did their utmost to prevail upon him to suspend his march. They represented to Soliman, that they should soon be able to affist him both with money and troops; and that as Obeid'allah, by reason of his enormous cruelty, was mortally hated in that province, it would be better to wait for him there, where the people would most certainly declare against him, and where he would foon arrive, than to attack a powerful enemy in his own country with so inconsiderable a force. But Soliman proving deaf to fo falutary an admonition, Ibrahim endeavoured to persuade him to remain in his camp at least till he could furnish him with the tribute of the provinces; which would not fail of animating his men, and enabling him to Digitized by GOOGLE push

THE first place to which Soliman advanced, after his de- And adparture from Nakhailah, was Ekfas upon the Euphrates; vances to where, upon a general muster, he found that by desertion he Mashhad had lost 1000 men. Nor was he joined there by the Separa-Hosein. tiffs of Basra and Al Madayen, tho' they had promised him a reinforcement; which proved a great discouragement to his troops, especially as they had received certain advice, that Obeid allah was upon his march against them. However, Soliman put a good face upon the matter, faying to his men, "The LORD doth not approve of their going out, and there-" fore he hath withdrawn them for our advantage; wherefore praise ye the LORD." Soliman having resumed his march, and continued it all night, he arrived the next morning at Mashhad Hosein, or the sepulchre of the martyr Hosein, where the army staid a day and a night, in order to pray for Hosein, to beg his pardon for deserting him, and to perform upon that holy, pure, and fublime spot their devotions. When they first approached the tomb, they all cried out with one voice, and shed tears in the most copious manner, wishing that they had all died with him; infomuch that a more melancholy and moving scene never appeared. Nay, their grief was so intense on this occasion, their repentance for abandoning Hosein so sincere, and so fervent their devotion, that, when Soliman commanded them to march, not a man of them would thir till he had first stood upon Hosein's tomb, and asked his pardon for what had happened. Which conduct seemed so extraordinary even to the more rational Mohammedans themselves, that one of them then present swore that he never saw fuch crouding about the black stone in the temple of Mecca itfelf. In order to fet which remark in a clear light, we must heg leave to remind our readers, that the black flone here mentioned is a stone set in filver, and fixed in the fouth east corner of the Caaba, being that which looks towards Bafra, about two inches and one-third, or, which is the fame thing, feven spans from the ground, held in the utmost veneration by the Mohammedans, and kissed by all who perform the pilgrimage to Mecca; being called by some of them the right hand of God on earth. But for a farther account of this stone, as well as of every thing else relating to the temple of Mecca,

FROM Mashbad Hosein the Shiite army marched to Hesasab. troops are and from thence to Al Ambar, or Anbar, a city of Irak, near the confluence of the Tigris and the Euphrates, in the territory of Bagbdad, and the imperial feat of Al Saffab, the first Khalif of the house of Abbas. From Anbar Soliman advanced to Sodûd; and from thence to Kayyarah, where he ordered his troops to pitch their tents. They had not been long here before Solimân received a friendly letter from Abd allah Ebn Yezid, the governor of Cufa; wherein he pressed him to return home, and represented to him, in the strongest terms, the folly and temerity of engaging so powerful an army as would be fent against him with a handful of men. Abd'allah concluded his letter with these remarkable words: "Do not set at nought my advice, nor contradict my command. Come as foon as my letter is read to you. God turn your faces towards "his obedience, and your backs to a rebellion against him." But Solimân imagining that Abd'allah recalled them only in order to support Abd'allah Ebn Zobeir, persisted in his intention of penetrating into Syria; telling his troops, that they would never be nearer the two Hoseins, meaning Hosein and his brother Hasan, to whom the Shiites gave that name, than they were at present; and that if they, at this juncture, should meet with death, they would die in a state of repentance, and consequently obtain a remission of their sins. From Kayyarab the Shiite general moved to Hait, or Haditza, another town of Irak, situated on the opposite bank of the Euphrates, from whence he wrote an answer to Abd'allah Ebn Yezid; wherein he thanked him for his kind letter, but faid that he could not accept of his invitation. To which he added, that his men confidered themselves as true penitents, and therefore refolved to continue their march, and leave to God the fuccess of the expedition. From Haditza Soliman advanced to Kurkisia, a city of Mesopotamia, the Cercusium of the later Greek and Roman writers, whose walls were furrounded by the Chabora, or Abora, and the Euphrates; and from thence to Ainwerda, or Ainwerdah, where the Separatifts gave out, that their design was to depose both the Khalifs, and fix upon the Mostem throne one of the family of the prophet. But here a stop was put to their career, they meeting with the just reward of their temerity and presumption. For, Obeid aliah Ebn Ziyad came up with them at Ain-

Soon after this decifive action, the governor of Cufa released Merwan Mokhtar, whom he had before ordered to be confined, at dies. the request of AlAbd allah EbnOmar, who had married AlMokh-This happened a little before the death of Merwâr, who departed this life in the month of Ramadân. It must here be remember'd, that, after Moawiyah's decease, Merwan was elected Khalif, on condition that Khaled, the fon of Yezid, should mount the Moslem throne after him, and his own children be excluded from the succession; Khaled at that time refusing to take the government upon him, on account of his tender age. To shew the purity and sincerity of his intentions in this affair, Merwan married Yezia's widow. who was Khâled's mother, and declared that he would never be guilty of an infraction of the treaty concluded with Khāled, in the minutest particular. However, afterwards altering his mind, he caused his eldest son Abd'almâlec to be proclaimed his lawful fuccessor; which so disgusted Khâled, who always hated him, that he one day reviled him for it, before a great number of the nobility, in a very reproachful manner. This fo incenfed Merwan, that he called him bastard; which his mother being informed of by the child, she vowed to be revenged of him for fo grievous an affront. In confequence of which resolution, the soon after poisoned him, as we find afferted by some of the Arab historians, or, as others will have it, smothered him, by laying a pillow on his face, when he was asleep, and sitting upon it till he was dead. However, Abu Jaafar Al Tabari seems to intimate, that Merwan died of the plague; and not a word is faid of his wife's being even in any manner accessory to his death by Abu'l-Faraj. Some authors make him to have been fixty three, and others, with more probability, seventy-one years of age, at the time of his death. His wife, say those who believe that she destroyed him, gave out that he died suddenly. He reigned 298 days, or, as others affirm, eleven months, if we compute from the renewal of his inauguration. We find it intimated by Theophanes, that the Arabs elected Abd'allah Ebn Zobeir Khalif at Yathreb, or Medina, which he denominates Ethrib, and the Syrians Merwan, called by him Maruam, at Damafeus; where, according to this writer, he reigned about nine months. Dionysius Telmarensis makes Yezid, Merwan, and Abd'almalec, to have reigned in continual succession, and consequently takes no notice of Abd'allah Ebn Zobeir and Moawiyah II. 'Tis no wonder, therefore, that he should have kept Merwan a year upon the Moslem throne. For this may be easily accounted for, if we suppose his Khalifat to have commenced at the death of Yezid. It ought to be remarked here, that M. D'Herbelot is guilty of a mistake, when he affirms, that Merwân's authority was recognized by all the provinces of the Moslem empire, after the defeat of Dahak Ebn Kais; and that he left his son Abd'almâlec, after his death, in full possession of the sovereignty of all those provinces. For, that Abd'allah Ebn Zobeir was invested with the supreme authority in Arabia, when Abd' almâlec ascended the Syrian throne, and not intirely feduced till the 73d year of the Hejra, is attested by the best Arabic writers, and even by M. D'Herbelot himself; and will, as we fully persuade ourselves, in the sequel of this history, most clearly appear x.

And is buried at Damascus.

As to his person, Merwan was tall and of a thin habit of body. He had blue or grey eyes, and red or yellowish hair. He was surnamed Ebn Tarid, or the son of the expelled; his father Al Hakem having been banished by Mohammed to Al Tâyef, or Waj, for divulging a secret that had been imparted to him. He continued in exile during the reigns of Abu Becr and Omar, but was recalled by Othman; to whom this was afterwards objected as one of his greatest crimes. His secretary was Sofian Ebn Abrad, or, according to others, Abd allah Ebn Aws; his Kâdi, or judge, Ebn Idris Al Holwâni; the captain of his guards, Yahya Ebn Kais; his chamberlain, Abu Sabl, his servant, who was a black, or negro, and his mother's freed-man. Eutychius fixes the duration of his Khalifat precisely at nine months, and Abu'l Faraj at seven and a few days; in which he differs from all other authors. died, and was buried, at Damascus, and his son Abd'almâleç performed the funeral-service over him. He expired, as has been already observed, in the month of Ramadân, or, as Eutychius will have it, in the former Rabi, and the 65th year of the Heira, corresponding with the year of our LORD 685 y.

A BD'ALMALEC, the son of Merwan, who succeeded him, Abd's-was surnamed Abu'l-Walid, or, as others affirm, Abu Mar-malac sucmin, and, according to Abulfeda, was inaugurated on the 3d day ceeds bie of the month of Ramadan, being the very day on which his fa- father ther died. His mother was Ayesba, the daughter of Alûm Ebn Merwan Arah Ebn Abu'l As, or, according to others, of Madwiyah Ebn in the Mogheirab Ebn Abu'l As Ebn Ommeya Ebn Abd Shems. Some Khalifat. authors relate, that, at the time of his inauguration, he had the Meshaf, or the Kerán, in his lap; which folding up, he said, probably to the person taking the oath of allegiance to him. "Let this divide, or determine, between me and thee." But this circumstance is related by Abulfeda in a different manner. He informs us, that when the news of his father's death was brought to Abd'almâlec, the messengers found him with the Koran in the aforesaid position; and that bereupon solding it up, he said, "I must take my leave of thee now." But this relation, the' followed by Mr. Ockley, ought to be confidered, on many accounts, as much more improbable than the other 2.

ABD'ALLAH EBN ZOBEIR, who had been elected Khalif The Syriby the Arabs, still holding his residence at Mecca, Abd'almelea ans perwould not permit his subjects to vasit the temple there; and, form their for that reason, ordered the temple at Jerusalem to be so en-pilgrimage larged as to take the stone, or rather the steps, on which Omar to the temhad formerly prayed, and on which the Maslems had before ple at Jeerected a mosque, into the body of the church. being, therefore, thus in a manner converted into a mosque, the Syrians performed their pilgrimage thither, as the Araba under Abd'allab's jurisdiction did still to the Caaba. Not content with this, Ald'almalec defired the Christians of Damascus to deliver into his hands one of their churches adjoining to the cathedral there. Upon which, they shewed him the instrument drawn up and figned by Khâled Ebn Al Walid, when the city was taken in the Khalifat of Omar; by which the possession of that and the other Christian churches was for ever fecured to them. Abd' almâlec then offered them a large sum of money, and gave them leave to build another church in lieu of it, in what part of the town they pleased. But not being hereby induced to part with it, he left it in their possession; not judging it proper or expedient at this juncture, when he had a

THE following year, Al Mokhtar, who had found mean Al Mokhduring his imprisonment, to keep up a correspondence wit bimself in the sectaries, being informed of Soliman's fate, which, from the moment of that general's departure, he had expected, be gan to put himself in motion. As Abd'allab Ebn Zobeir Sti supported himself in Arabia against the new Syrian Khalif he thought this a proper time to put his delign in execu tion; and therefore having received a commission from A Mohdi, the fon of Mohammed, the fon of Ali, the great Imam or head of the fect in a lineal fuccession, constituting him general of all his forces, he took the command of the Sbiit army upon him. This was for some time opposed by Ibrabim Ebn Astar, a man of considerable interest amongst the sectaries; but, upon Al Mokhtar's producing his commission, he acquiesced in the measures that had been taken, and Al Mokbtar was universally acknowleged generalishmo of the forces affembled to demand the blood of Hosein, or, in other words, to take vengeance of the murderers of that Imam. Nay, according to Abulfeda, he was formally inaugurated Khalif upon the following terms; that he should govern according to the contents of the BOOK OF GOD, and the traditions of his apostle, and destroy all the murderers of Hosein. In consequence of which agreement, he killed Shamer, Kawla, who carried Hosein's head to Obeid'allab, and Amer, who commanded the army that defeated the troops of that Imâm. The head of Amer, together with that of his son, he sent to Mohammed Ebn Hanifiyab; and put Adi Ebn Hathem, whom he had taken prisoner, into the hands of the Shittes, who stripped him and shot him with arrows, in the same manner as he had served the son of Ali. We must not forget to obferve, that, according to Ebn Jaljal Al Andalusi, an Arab author of Spain, one Masarjowyah, a Jewish physician of Basra, flourished in the Khalifat of Merwan. He translated the medical pandects of Aaron the presbyter into the Arabic tongue, A remarkable story has been told of him by one Ayub Ebn Al Hakem; for the particulars of which we must beg leave to refer our curious readers to Abu'l-Faraj b.

attack him on that fide, whilft Mys'ab Ebn Zobeir, Abd'allah's d'allah brother, advanced against him with a strong detachment from Ebn Zo-Infra; he wrote a deceitful letter to Abd'allah, wherein he of beir and to march to his affistance, at the head of all his forces. Ab- the fel-Cellab, in answer to that letter, assured him, that, as soon as he lowers of had fatisfied him of the fincerity of his allegiance, by receiving Ali. fuffrages of his men for him, he should look upon him as his and not fend any forces into his country. To which he added, that, for the present, he could not give him a more con-Vincing proof of the fincerity of his intentions, than by fending a body of troops, with all possible expedition, to watch the motions of the Khalif Abd almalec's army, that was then posted at Dilkora. As soon as this answer came to hand, Al Mokhtar dispatched Serjabil Ebn Wars, one of his officers, with a body of 3000 men, confishing chiefly of slaves, there being but 700 Arabs amongst them, to Medina; commanding him, upon his arrival there, to write to him from thence for farther orders. His defign herein was to fend an Emir immediately to Medina to command those troops, whilst Serjabil, at the head of another body of the Shiite forces, should form the siege of Mecca, at that time the residence of Abd allah Ebn Zobeir. But Aballab, not having received from Al Mokhtar thefic curity he required, was refolved to be upon his guard; and therefore fent Abbas Ebn Sahel to Medina, with a detachment of 2000 men; ordering him to treat Al Mokhtar's troops as friends, if he found them really in his interest; but, if otherwise, to use his utmost endeavours to destroy them. Abbas, upon his arrival at Medina, not being able to persuade Serjabil to march with him to Dilkôra, very justly entertained a suspicion of him. However, he diffembled this, till he found an opportunity of distributing a few sheep amongst Al Mokhtar's troops, reduced almost to the last extremity for want of provisions; which excited them to disperse themselves over the adjacent territory, in order to supply the camp with what necessaries they could colket. This being observed by Abbas, he advanced at the head of his troops, to the enemy's tents, foon made himself master of them, killed Serjabil himself, with seventy of his men, and spared all the rest, who accepted of the quarter offered them, except about 300, who were afterwards put to the fword. Al Mokhtar fearing this disaster might intimidate Mobammed Ebn Hanifiyah, at the same time that he acquainted him with it, offered to support him with a powerful army. But Mohammed refused such affistance; telling him in the anfwer he wrote, that his intention was to have recourse only to pacific measures; and before the messenger, which he sent to Al Mokhtar, departed, he said, "Desire him to fear God, and " abstain from all effusion of blood." Ebn Hanifiyah, and all the rest of Ali's family, behaved at Merca in a very inoffentive manner, and were to far from exciting any commotions there, that they did their utmost to preferve the public tranquillity and repose; yet Abd'allah Ebn Zobeir not thinking himself safe as long as they resuled a reengriltion of his authority, imprisoned them, together with seventeen of the principal Cufans, set a guard over them; and threatened to put them to death, and reduce their bodies afterwards to afhes, if, within a limited time, they did not take the oath of allegiance to him. Al Mokhtar, being informed of the diffressed situation they were in, sent a body of 750 horse, under the command of Abu Abd'allah Al Jodali, to Mecca, to release them. Al Jodali not only executed his orders with great bravery, but likewise took Abd'allab himself prisoner. and would have cut him to pieces on the spot, had not Mohammed prevented such an act of violence, and composed all differences to the mutual satisfaction of both parties, by his Abu Abd'allab Al Jodali, or rather Motimely interpolition. hammed himself, distributed a sum of money he brought with him amongst 4000 of Ali's friends, in order to make them fome amends for the losses they had sustained. When Mohammed Ebn Hanifiyah was delivered from the prison near the well Zemzem, in which he had been confined, the time allowed him to make his submission to Abd'allab was within two days of being expired; and a sufficient quantity of wood, and other combustible materials, was prepared for burning both him and his companions, if they had not been fet at liberty by the Shite horse. One of the persons confined with Mohammed Ebn Hanifiyah was Abd'allah Ebn Ayad, a man highly esteemed by the followers of Ati. Notwithstanding the late pacification, Mohammd Ebn Hanifiyah, after a distribution of Al Mokhtar Ebn Abu Obeidah's money amongst those that attended him had been made, for his farther fecurity, took post on a mountain near Mecea with a body of 4000 men c.

But Merwan dying before Obeid'allab could execute his orders, an end was put, at least for the present, to the intended expedition. murder of Hosein, which still was the pretext for all the hofile proceedings of the sectaries; they assembled a body of troops, in their turn, to act offensively against Obeid'allah, and even the Syrian Khalif himself, if he should think fit to There was one thing very remarkable in the preparations made for this expedition. Al Mokhtar caused a portable throne to be made, in which he pretended there was fomething mysterious; telling the people, that "it would be of the fame use to them that the ark was to the children of " Ifrael." Wherefore he ordered it to be carried on a mule with the forces that were to march against Obeid'allah, and a prayer to be faid before it, conceived in the following terms: OGOD! grant that we may live long in thy obediences " help us, and do not forget us, but protect us." To which the people answered, Amen, Amen. By this stratagem, than which nothing could have been devised more proper to animate a body of ignorant hot-headed enthusiasts, the Cufan troops were inspired with such fortitude and resolution, that Ibrahim Ebn Ashtar, Al Mokhtar's general, found it no difficult matter to lead them against the enemy. In fine, being determined to act offensively, he attacked Obeid'allah's camp; and, after a sharp engagement, forced it, put that general and many of his men to the fword, and drove a greater number of them into a neighbouring river, where they all immediately perished. Ibrahim cut off Obeid'allah's head, which, with some others, he sent to Al Mokhtar, and afterwards reduced his body to ashes. This victory the Cufans ascribed intirely to the ark, or throne, and confequently almost idolized it for a long time after. We are told by some Arab authors, that the army commanded by Obeid'allah Ebn Ziyad confisted of 70,000 men, of whom 10,300 were killed in the action; and that the loss sustained by Ibrahim scarce amounted to 370 men. Be that as it will, the victory was complete; infomuch that Nisibin, or Nisibis, Sinjar, and Dara, or Daras, without the least opposition, surrendered to the victors. This great success tendered the sectaries so formidable, that they began to entertain thoughts in earnest of fixing either Mohammed Ebn Hanifiyah, or some other of Ali's family, upon the Moslem throne d.

THE same year the late battle was sought, that is, the Al Mokh-67th of the Hejra, Abd'allah Ebn Zobeir sent his brother tar de-Mus'ab to govern Basra. the pu'pit, and made a speech to the people. His predecessor Al Hâreth sat one step below him. In his speech, amongst other things, he reflected upon Abd'almâlee, and that part of the Moslem empire which submitted to him, and extolled the conduct of the Arabs who obeyed the orders of his brother Ab-Then he told the Bafrans, that as they usually gave names, or rather furnames, to their Emirs, he would take the liberty to assume that of Hejáz. Soon after which, one Shebet came to Basta, upon a crop-eared bob-tailed mule, from Cûfa, with his cloaths rent, crying out, Ya gautha, Ya gautha, Help! Help! He was attended by many of the principal Cufans, who complained bitterly of Al Mokhtar's cruel and tyrannical administration; and begged Mus'ab to march with an army against him. This petition Mustab very readily complied with, and wrote immediately to Al Mohalleb. his lieutenant in Persia, to come and join him with the Perfian forces; which at last, tho' with some reluctance, he did. After this junction, Mus'ab and Al Moballeb advanced at the head of their troops into the territory of Cufa, forced Al Mokhtar to a general action, overthrew him with great flaughter, and obliged him to shut himself up in the castle of Cafa. Thither Mus'ab pursued him, and laid siege to the place. Al Mokhtar for some time made a brave defence; but being at last killed, his men furrendered at discretion. They amounted to about 7000 in all, and were, on account of the outrages they had committed, every one of them put by Mus'ab to the sword .

A farther This blow, which for the present at least put an end to all account of their towering projects, was given the Motazalites in the the great month of Ramadân, and the 67th year of the Hejra. The captain Alimmediate consequence of which was the submission of Casa, Mokhtar, and its district, to Mus'ab; after which, Ibrahim Ebn Astar took the oath of fidelity to Atd'allah Ebn Zobeir. This he did at the invitation of Mus'ab, who, being now master of Irâk, had him absolutely in his power. After this important conquest, Mus'ab appointed Mohalleh Eln Ahu Safra to preside over Mawsel upon the Tigris, together with the provinces of Armenia, Mesopotamia, and Aderbijan. As for Al Mokhtar, he was killed in the fixty seventh year of his age, after he had worsted, in several engagements, the generals of Yezid, Merwân, and Abd'almâlec, and made himself master of the Babylonian Irâk, of which Cisa was the capital. He never pardoned any one who had declared himself an enemy to the house of Hâshem, or who had been in any manner concerned in the murder of Hosein. He was furnamed Al Thakifi, as being originally of the tribe of Thakif, and boasted that he had destroyed 50,000 of the adherents of the house of Ommiyah, exclusive of those that were flain in the battles which he fought. He left several children behind him, some of whom so signalized themselves by their glorious actions, that a book was afterwards written by an oriental author, intitled, Anwar alathar fi fadhl banu Al Mokhtar; which contained an accurate account of all the illustrious atchievements of Al Mokhtar and his descendents. We must beg leave here to observe, that M. D' Herbelot is guilty of a great mistake, when he tells us, that Al Mokhtar was found under an elephant's feet at the battle, or in the war, of Khaibar, and that this war happened in the Khalifat of Omar. For the expedition against Khaibar was undertaken by the prophet himfelf, in the feventh year of the Hejra; and confequently our hero Al Mokhtar could not then have been above seven years

THE next year, the Azarakites, so denominated from Nafe The Azai Ebn Al Azarak, the author of their fect, affembled a confider- rakites able force in Persia, and made an irruption into Irâk. They overadvanced almost to the gates of Cufa, and penetrated to Al thrown by Madayen. As they acknowledged no established government, Omar either temporal or spiritual, and were sworn enemies to the Ebn Abhouse of Ommiyah, they committed terrible ravages in the d'allah Al province of Abwaz, and in every other part of the Moslem Temimi. territories through which they moved. They carried their excelles so far as to murder all the people they met with, to rip open women with child, and to exercise every species of cruelty upon the Moslems of all denominations, without distinction of fex or age. One of them being defirous of sparing a lady of transcendent piety, as well as beauty, another said to him, "What! thou enemy of God, thou art " captivated with her beauty, and hast denied the faith!" and instantly killed her. The governor of Mawfel and Mesopotamia, being informed of these unparalleled outrages, marched against them with a body of select troops, came up with them at a place called Sawlak, and carried on a brilk war against them, for the space of eight months, without intermission; during which interval many tharp engagements happened. In some part of this term, their leader Nafe Ebn Al Azarak died, and was succeeded by Katri Ebn Al Foját; under whose conduct they continued their depredations. Mus'ab being not pleased with his lieutenant Mahleb, or Al Mohalleb, Abusafra's management of the war, recalled him, and substituted in his room Omar Ebn Abd'allah Al Temimi, who gave the Azarakites a great overthrow at Naisabûr in Kherasan, put many of them to the sword, and pursued the rest as far as Ispaban and the province of Kerman. Here having received a reinforcement, they returned into the province of Abwaz, and did incredible damage to the country through which they passed. But Omar advancing a second time against them, they retired at his approach to Al Madayen, and plundered the diffrict belonging to that city in a dreadful manner. However, Omar pursuing them hither also, they fled first into Kerman, and afterwards into Khorafan, where they gradually dispersed themselves. This year there was a grievous famine in Syria, which hindered all military operations. Abd'aln.ales, however, incamped near Botnan, near the district of Kinnistin. tho' he was not a little incommoded by the heavy rains that fell there; and, in the spring returned to Damascus, where he foon finished his preparations for the ensuing campaign *.

Abd'almâlec reduces Ameu.

In the 69th year of the Hejra, Abd'almalec left Damascus, in order to march against Mus'ab Ebn Zobeir, who was grown very formidable fince the defeat of the Azarakites, and appointed Amru Ebn Sa'id governor of that city. But Amru feizing upon it for himself, the Khalif was obliged to return thither, and lay aside for the present the intended expedition. Upon Abd'almâlec's arrival at Damascus, several skirmishes happened between detachments of his troops and fome of Amru's men; but, by the intervention of the women, a treaty was at last concluded between the contending parties, and the public tranquillity intirely restored. However, the Khalif not forgetting his competitor's attempt, three or four days after fent for him, ordered him to be difarmed of his fword, and fetter'd, and beat out two of his fore-teeth. Then he went to the evening-prayers, and left the execution of Amru to his brother Abd'alaziz; who being so nearly related to him, and commiserating his unbappy fituation, threw away his fword, and resolved not to be the instrument of his death. Khalif returning from the performance of his devotions, to his great surprize, found Amru alive; whereupon he ordered him to be laid upon his back, and immediately killed him. This action, however, so affected Abd'almâlec, that he was feized with a tremor, which, for some time after, quite difabled him; infomuch that his fervants were obliged to take him up, and lay him upon his couch. The people observing, that Amru did not attend the Khalif to prayers, acquainted his brother Yabya with the affair; who instantly armed 1000 of Amru's flaves, and attacked Abd'almalec's palace. warm dispute, they forced open the gates, killed several of the guards, and were upon the point of entering the palace, when the people within threw Amru's head amongst them. This so cooled their ardour, that they desisted from the attempt; and some money having been soon after distributed amongst them by Abd alaziz, they retired to their respective habitations. But so great was Abd'almâlec's avarice, that, as we are told by an Arab author of good repute, when the commotion was appealed, he recalled the money bestowed upon them, and ordered it all to be again deposited in the public treasury. As for Yahya, who was the ringleader in the late riot, he was sentenced to die; but Abd'alaziz prevailed upon the Khalif to convert that punishment, on account of his being a member of the Ommiyan family, into a month's imprisonment, and then to banish him to Mus'ab Ebn Zobeir. The quarrel between Amru and Abd'almâlec, which proved so fatal to the former, is faid to have been occasioned by an emulation excited between them by an old woman, whom they frequently visited, in their infancy, and which continued to subsist till the very day of Amru's tragical death. Marwan being fufficiently apprized of this, and fearing it might produce fatal effects after his death, obliged the Syrians to take the oath of fidelity to Abd almâlec as his successor, in his life-time, and to swear likewise to elevate to the Moslem throne, if that Khalif died without iffue, his younger fon Abd'alaziz. We find it intimated by one of the Arab historians, that Abd'almâlec could not make himself master of Damascus, after it had been seized by Amru, or, as he calls him, Omar Ebn Saad Ebn Abi Wakkâs, without laying a formal siege to that city b.

In the 70th year of the Hejra, the Greeks made an incur-The Khafion into Syria. Abd'almâlec having then occasion for all his sife conforces, in order to reduce to his obedience Abd'allah Ebn Zo. cludes a beir, in Arabia, and Mus'ab, his brother, in Irâk, was not treaty able to march against them; and therefore agreed to pay the with the Greek emperor 1000 dinârs every week for a certain term, to Greek induce that prince to withdraw his troops out of the Moslem emferor, territories. This year Mus'ab went to Mecca, with all the wealth, cattle, and rich furniture, he had amassed; which he distributed amongst the Arabs. Abd'allah Ebn Zobeir himself also performed the pilgrimage to Mecca about the same time.

We must here beg leave to observe, that, according to Theephanes and Cedrenus, Abd'almalee concluded a treaty with the emperor, in the third or fourth year of his reign, by which he engaged himself to pay that prince annually 365,000 pieces of money, or dinars, and to fend him every year 365 flaves, as well as the same number of horses, of a generous breed; and the Christian potentate, on his part, promised to repress the course of the Maronites, who committed great disorders in the Khalif's dominions. About two years before this event, a pestilence, of a very malignant kind, made dreadful havock in Syria. In the aforesaid treaty, it was also stipulated, that the revenues of Cyprus, Armenia, and Iberia, should be equally divided between the contracting powers. Theophanes adds, that, in the same year, Abd' almalec sent Ziyand the brother of Mauia, Obeid'allah the son of Ziyad, the brother of Moawiyab I. he must mean, against the tyrant and impostor Mouchar, or Mouktar, into Persia; and that Ziyand, or rather Obeid'allah Ebn Ziyad, was slain by Mouchar. He likewise farther relates, that as foon as the news of this blow reached the Khalif, he fet out for Mesopotamia; but was obliged to return to Damascus by the rebellion of Sa'id, that is, Amru Ebn Sa'id, whom he left behind him there. Which rebellion, however, according to him, Abd'almâlec soon extinguished; and, in violation of his promife, put Sa'id to death. All which particulars, huddled together in so abrupt a manner, tho' in some points agreeing with the Arab historians, may be confidered as an additional proof of the confused and indistinct accounts this chronographer has handed down to us of the Mostem affairs i.

ABD'ALMALEC, being resolved to undertake an expedition into Irâk against Mus'ab Ebn Zobeir, put to death the principal accomplices of Amru Ebn Sa'id, and dispatched Khâled Ebn Asid privately to Basra, to form a party for him there. Mus'ab having received intelligence of Ebn Asid's arrival, attempted to surprize him; but without effect: which he imputed to the care the Basrans had taken to conceal him; and therefore reproached the chief of them in very sharp terms for their conduct on this occasion. Some of them he upbraided with their mean extraction, others with infamous actions committed either by them or their relations; and, in fine, all of them with something that incensed them greatly against him. In the mean time, Abd'almâlec had sent letters to the leading men sull of large promises; and, amongst the rest, one to Ibra-

bim Ebn Al Ashtar, who delivered it to Mus'ab sealed up as That letter contained a promise to Ibrahim of the lieutenancy of Irak, if he would declare in favour of the Khalif. Ibrahim then assured Mus'ab, that he should persist in his fidelity to him; and advised him, as Abd'almalec had undoubtedly written to the other principal persons in Basra, whom he thought he could confide in, to the same effect, to behead all those whom he had reason to suspect were in that prince's interest. But Mus'ab not approving of this expedient, as he imagined it would create in the people of Irak an aversion to him; Ibrahim pressed him to put them under arrest, till his fate was determined: so that, if he should be defeated by Abd'almálec, their heads might be cut off, upon the first arrival of the bad news at Basra; but, if he obtained the victory, he might make a compliment of them to their tribes. As for Abd'almálec, his subjects did their utmost to prevail upon him to reduce Irâk by his generals, and not expose his person to the hazards of war; fearing lest their affairs should be imbroiled, if any disaster should happen to him, as their government was not yet fettled upon a folid foundation. But the Syrian Khalif believing himself perfectly qualified to command his troops in this expedition, both by his abilities in war, and his personal courage, and that he was a better match for Mus'ab than any of his generals, would not be persuaded to stay at home, whilst his forces were in the field. Having, therefore, finished his military preparations, he began his march for Irâk, and at last arrived at Masken, where Mus'ab had drawn up his army in order of battle. Masken, which we find called Sakan by Abu'l Faraj, is a small town in the desarts either of Al Sham or Al Jazira. between Tadmor and the town of Tayba, near the Euphrates. upon the frontiers of Mesopotamia. It derived its name from a fountain or fpring of hot water, in Arabic denominated Sukhn, furrounded with palm-trees, at a small distance from it. This place is the Sukana of the maps, and the Sakhna, or Sukhna, of the oriental geographers k.

AFTER several movements, the two armies came in sight The hattle of each other, and made the necessary dispositions for an en- of Masgagement. The troops of Irâk, according to custom, were ken. resolved to desert Mus'ab, and not expose their country, on his account, to the ravages of a Syrian army. Ibrahim Ebn Al Ashtar began the battle, by charging Mohammed Eye Harûn with such sury, that he forced him to retire; the', being sustained by a fresh body of troops, headed by the Khakf himself, he soon returned to the charge, repulsed Ibrabim in his turn, and killed him upon the fpot. Mus'ab's general of the horse, either intimidated by the death and deseat of Ibrahim, or through treachery, soon after this, betook himself to flight; and many of the other Irakian officers, who did not abandon their posts, refused to fight. Neither Omar Eln Abd'allab, nor Al Mohalleb, nor Ibad Ebn Hossem, appeared in this engagement; of which Abd'almalee being informed, he took occasion from thence to presage a certain victory to his troops. Mus'ab, being pressed on all sides, endeavoured to prevail upon his fon I/a to make his escape to Mecca, and acquaint his uncle Abd'allah with the perfidy of the people of Irák; but he could not by any means be induced to desert his father at that perilous conjuncture; declaring he would not survive him. On the contrary, he advised him to retreat first to Bajra, and afterwards to Mecca, himself; but Mus'ab would not hear of such infamous conduct. Nay, he would not accept of quarter, when tendered him by the Khalif, but persisted in his resolution of dying upon the field of battle. His fon, therefore, who was determined not to forfake him, and he rushing into the midst of the enemy, fought like men animated by despair, destroyed several of the Syrians, and were at last both laid dead upon the spot. Mus'ab was first grievously wounded with arrows, then stabled in several places, and had finally his head cut off by a man who carried it immediately to the Khalif Abd'almâlec offered the bearer 1000 dinârs; which he would not take; faying, that as he had flain Mus'ab purely to gratify his own private refentment, he had no manner of title to it. We are told by Abulfeda, that Abd'almâlec and Mus'ab, in the Khalifat of Merwan, had contracted an intimate friendship; but that the latter afterwards marrying Sekina, the daughter of Hosein, and Ayesba, the daughter of Telha, became allied to two families that bore an implacable hatred to the house of Ommiyah. Theophanes relates, that about this time, whilst the Arabs were engaged in a civil war, the imperial forces, under the conduct of Leontius, drove them out of Armenia, Iberia, Media, and Bulcacia, with great flaughter, and re-annexed those provinces to the empire. He also informs us, that Abd' almâlec, whom he calls Abimelec, after Mus'ab had cut of Mouktar, killed and defeated that conqueror, and reduced Persia, or rather Irak, under his dominion; which agrees tolerably well with what we find advanced in this point by the Arab historians. For, according to them, after the battle of Malken, Cufa opened its gates to the Syrian Khalif, and both the Persian and Babylomian Irâk submitted to him. The people of those provinces came in crouds, and, amongst the rest, Yabya, the brother of Amru, whom he had killed, to take the oath of allegiance to him. After the conclusion of that ceremony, he ordered wast sums of money to be distributed amongst them, and gave a splendid entertainment to his new subjects, to which even the meanest of them were admitted. Neither the Arab nor the Greek writers have preserved many particulars of the battle of Malken, nor transmitted down to us an account of the number of Moslems killed and wounded on either side in that memorable action 1.

DURING the banquet prepared for the Cufans, Abbd' almálec The Khatook great notice of Amru Ebn Al Hareth, an antient Makh- lif takes zumite, whom he placed by him on his Sofa. Amongst other great noquestions, he asked him what fort of food pleased him best? tice of an To which the old Makbzumite answered, "An ass's head old Makh-" feasoned high and well roasted." "That is but an ordinary zumite. "dish," replied the Khalif; "what say you to a leg or a " shoulder of a sucking lamb, well roasted and covered with " butter and milk?" From whence we may infer, that the Arabs, in the Khalifat of Ald'almâlec Ebn Merwan, had at least some dishes similar to those made use of by their progenitors in Abraham's time. For, that Abraham entertained his divine guests with butter, milk, and a calf which he had dressed, is attested by the author of the Pentateuch; and that he was at no great distance from the borders of Arabia, when he gave that entertainment, we are certainly informed by the fame facred historian. When the supper was over, the Makhzumite diverted the Khalif with a particular account of the antiquities of the castle; after which, Mus'ab's head, that had been just brought in, was exhibited to his view. One of the company seeing it, said to Abd'almalec, " I saw Hosein's " head in this same castle presented to Obeid'allah, Obeid'al-" lah's to Al Mokhtar, Al Mokhtar's to Mus'ab, and now at " last Mus'ab's to yourself." This observation greatly asfected the Khalif, who, in order to avert the ill omen, commanded the castle to be immediately demolished. Lallah Ebn Zobeir, having received the melancholy news of his brother's death, affembled the people in the mosque at Mecca, and made a speech to them from the pulpit suitable to the occasion. He also did his utmost to put his capital in a posture of defence, and render it capable of sustaining a siege; expecting a speedy visit from his formidable competitor, who now gave law to Irâk, Syria, and Egypt, without controul m.

tazalites apprize defeat at Masken.

THE Separatists, or Azarakites, in the neighbourhood of Mawsel, received advice of the defeat at Masken, and of Musab's death, which happened in the 71st year of the Hejra, before Al AlMohal- Mohalleb, the governor of that city, and its dependencies, with leb of the whom they were then at war, was apprized of those fatal events. Whereupon some of them asked certain of his men what they thought of Mus'ab? They replied, "He is a lawful Imâm." "He is then," said the sectaries, "your friend both in this world and that which is to come; and you are his friends 66 both alive and dead." To which the others answered in the affirmative. " And what," demanded the Separatists, " is your opinion of Abd'almâlec, the fon of Merwan?" "He is," faid they, "the fon of the accurled; we acknow-66 ledge him not, but hold it more lawful for us to shed his " blood than yours?" "And you are," continued the Separatists, "his enemies both alive and dead?" "Yes," replied the others. "Very well," faid the Azarakites, "Ab-" d'almâlec has killed Mus'ab, your Imâm; and you will ee make him your Imam to-morrow, though you wash your " hands of him to-day, and curse his father." To which the others answered, "You lie, you enemies of God." However, being certainly informed the next day of what had happened, they changed their note, and took the oath of allegiance to Abd' almâlec without hesitation. For which being reproached by the Azarakites in very severe terms, they de. fended themselves, by saying, "We were pleased with the other as long as he prefided over us; and now we approve " of this, as we did before of him." "You are," replied the Azarakites, brethren of the devils, companions of the wicked, and flaves to the present world." With regard to Mus'ab, he was, if we will believe an Arab author of good note, an officer of diftinguished bravery, great generofity, and of a very comely agreeable person. Tho' he had a son that fell with him in the battle of Masken, as has been already observed, he was not above fix-and-thirty years of age when he met with his untimely fate a.

The Aza-Separatists, defeat Abd'alaziz,

Soon after Abd'almâlec's arrival at Damascus, he conferred rakites, or upon his brother, Bashar Ebn Merwan, the government of Cúfa, and upon Khâled Ebn Abd'allah that of Basra. latter of these had no sooner taken possession of his post, than he appointed Al Moballeb supervisor of the tribute of Bafra; which was a very indifcrete and impolitic step, as Al Mohalleb was one of the most consummate generals of his age. To this imprudent measure was probably owing the disaster that immediately followed. The Azarakites, being apprized of Al Moballeb's dismission from the command of the army destined to act against them, and that he was succeeded by Abd'alaziz in that important post, advanced against the latter with great alacrity, intirely defeated him, and took his wife prisoner. A debate arising amongst the victors about the value of that lady, which some fixed at 100,000 dinars, one of them, in order to put an end to it, immediately struck off her head. Khâled, after the blow he had received, wrote a letter to the Khalif, acquainting him with the loss the army had fustained, and defiring to know what step he was next to take. Abd'almâlec, in the answer he sent him, condemned Kbâled's conduct, ordered him to remove Abd'alaziz from the command of the forces affigned him, to substitute Al Mohalleb, whom he called the fon and the grandson of war, in his room, to advance into the province of Abwaz with all the troops he could affemble, and, in fine, to do nothing without the privity and advice of Al Moballeb. This answer by no means pleased Khâled, tho' the Khalîf also promised him in it a speedy reinforcement; and, in consequence of that promife, fent a body of 5000 Cufans, under the command of his brother Balbar, soon after to join him. Balbar, before his arrival, dispatched a courier to Al Mohalleb, to give him notice of his approach; the good of the Khalif's service at that time rendering it necessary to treat a person of that general's merit with great marks of distinction o.

THE Khalif's generals receiving advice, that the Azara-The Azakites, or Separatists, were in motion, advanced at the head rakites are of the army as far as Ahwaz, the metropolis of the province overof the same name, and pitched their tents in the neighbour-thrown by hood of that city. Soon after their arrival here, Al Mohalleb Khâled advised Khâled to seize some ships that then appeared in the and Al river on which Abwaz was situated; but they were burnt, be- Mohalleb. fore that defign could be put in execution, by a party of the enemy's horse. Al Mohalleb taking upon him one day to view all the posts of the camp, observed that an officer had not taken the precaution to intrench himself; who being asked by that general the reason of this, replied, that he valued the Azarakites no more than a camel's fart: but Al Mohalleb told him, that he ought not to despise them, since they were the lions of the Arabs. In consequence of this notion, that commander ordered a line to be drawn round the camp; and the troops remained in their intrenchments about twenty days.

After the expiration of which term, Khâled and Al Moballeb fell upon the enemy with such fury, that, after a most sharp and bloody engagement, they overthrew them, and took possession of their camp. Upon which, Khâled detached David, one of his officers, to purfue the fugitives with a body of horse, and dispatched an express to the Khalif with a particular account of the victory they had gained. Abd'almâlec hereupon sent an order to Balbar to reinforce David's detachment with another body of 4000 horse, that he might be there by enabled to push the Azarakites to the very centre of Persia. This was accordingly done, and those detachments of cavalry, after a long and fatiguing pursuit, in which most of their horses perished, returned in a very shatter'd condition to Ab-That city, denominated likewife by some of the eastern writers Ebwaz, seems to have been called in early times by the Persians the city of Hormuz, or Hormuzd, which answered to the Diospolis of the Greeks; Hormuz, Hormuzd, or Ormuzd, denoting Jupiter amongst the Persians, as we learn from Plutarch. The name of Abwaz is sometimes applied to the whole region of Khûzestân, or Khûzistân, of which the province of Abwaz is the best and most considerable part. The old metropolis of this province at present lies in ruins; so that very few traces, or remains, of that antient city are now to be feen P.

ABDA'LMALEC having thus defeated and dispersed the Azarakites, in the 72d year of the Hejra, had no enemy left to contend with but Abd'allah Ebn Zobeir, who still was considered as Khalif by the Arabs, and held his residence at Mecca. He, therefore, made great preparations for an invalion of Hejâz, and appointed Al Hejâj Ebn Yufef Al Thakîfi, one of the most warlike and eloquent captains of the age, to command the troops to be employed in this expedition. Al Hejâj having imagined in a dream that he had overcome Abd'allah Ebn Zobeir, taken him prisoner, and flayed him, the Syrian Khalîf considered this as a good omen; and therefore resolved to commit the management of the war to be carried on against the Khalif of Mecca to his care. Before he put his army in march for Mecca, he offered his protection to all the Arabs there that would accept of it, and take an oath of fidelity to him. Abd'allah being informed of Al Hejaj's approach, fent out feveral parties of horse to reconnoitre the enemy, and give him intelligence of their motions. Betwixt these and some of Al Hejáj's advanced guards several skirmishes happened, in which Abd'altah's men had generally the worst. This encouraged

Al Hejáj to fend to his master for a farther reinforcement, his army, confifting of only 2000 men, not being strong enough to form the flege of Mecca; assuring him, that Abd'allah's fierceness was very much abated, and that his men deserted him daily. Upon which, Abd'almâlec ordered Tbârik Ebn Amer to march to his affistance with a body of 5000 men. In the mean time, Al Hejâj advanced to Al Tâyef, a town about 60 miles east of Mecca, in the month of Shaaban, and was joined by Tbarik with the forces under his command the new moon of the following Dhu'lbajja; after which junction, he continued his rout to Mecca, and immediately invested that place. We find it intimated by Abu'l-Faraj, that Theodocus and Theodunus, two very eminent phylicians, were great favourites of this Al Hejaj; that Theodunus composed a large physical treatile, for the instruction of his son; and that some of Theodocus's scholars and followers flourished till the Khalifs of the house of Al Abbas mounted the Moslem throne 9.

In the 73d year of the Hejra, Abd'almâlec offered the Abd'al-whole public revenues of Khorasan for seven years to Abd'al-malec lab Ebn Hazim, if he would make his submission to him; overcomes which so incensed that commander, that he forced the Kha- Abd'allah Af's messenger to eat the letter he brought, and would have Ebn Hacut him to pieces upon the spot, had he not foreseen that zim. fuch an action would have created a disturbance between two of the Arab tribes. Abd almalec, therefore, in order to chaftize him for his infolence, as well as his refufal to recognize his authority, fent one of his generals with a body of troops against him; who first defeated and dispersed his forces, and afterwards put him to death. Others say, that Abd'almalet made no overtures to Abd'allah Ebn Hazim till after the reduction of Hejáz; and that he sent Abd'allab Ebn Zobeir's head to Ebn Hazim, imagining that the fight of this would have intimidated him into a submission. But, according to them, it produced a quite contrary effect. That general, continue they, swore, as soon as he saw it, that he would never obey Abd'almalec's orders as long as he lived, washed the head in a bason, embalmed it, wrapped it up in linen, prayed over it, and then fent it to Abd'allah Ebn Zobeir's relations at Mecca. They also relate, that he obliged the messenger to eat the letterhe brought, and told him, that if he had not been a messenger, he would instantly have ordered his head to have been struck off. But this relation, however it may be countenanced. by Mr. Ockley, we are by no means disposed to admit; fince Norwithtsanding the reinforcement Al Hejaj had received, for some time he made very little progress in the fiere Al Hejaj. of Mecca. Whilst he battered the temple there with his mi-Keary engines, it thundered and lightened fo dreadfully, that the Sprians were struck with terror, and refused to play them any longer upon that edifice. Upon which, Al Hejáj stuck the corner of his vest into his girdle, and putting one of the stones that was to be discharged out of his catapults into it, slang it upon the town; and this occasioned the recommencement of the operations. The next morning, the Syrians were annoved by feveral successive storms, that killed twelve of their men, and quite dispirited them. Al Hejâj seeing them in such a consternation, said, "O Syrians! let not this terrify you. I am a son of Tehâma. This, therefore, is the storm of Te-Victory is at hand. Rejolce at the news of it. " especially since the rebels suffer as much as you." The day following, some of Abd'allah's men were killed by another florm, that was extremely violent, which gave Al Hejaj a farther opportunity of animating his troops. At last, Abd'allah. having been deserted by most of his friends, 10,000 of the inhabitants of Mecca, and even his two fons Hamza and Khobeib, defired to know his mother's fentiments as to the course he was to take. He represented to her, that he was almost intirely abandoned by his subjects-and relations; that the few who: perfisted in their fidelity to him could scarce enable him to defend the city any longer; and that the Syrian Kbalif would grant him any terms he should think fit to demand. She, being a woman of inflexible refolution, and not able to bear the thoughts of feeing her fon reduced to the condition of a private person, having herself been the grand-daughter, or rather, as has been already observed, the daughter, of Abu Beer, the first Khalif, advised him by no means to survive the fovereignty of which he was upon the point of being deprived. This perfectly agreeing with his own fentiments, he resolved to die in the desence of the place; so that, to the great. furprize of the besiegers, he maintained himself there ten days longer, tho' destitute of arms, troops, and fortifications. At last, having taken a final leave of his mother, and being animated by despair, he made a fally upon the enemy, destroyed a great number of them with his own hands, and was at length himself killed, fighting valiantly, upon the spot, We are told, that his mother obliged him to put off a coat of mail he had on when he made her his last visit, and which he wore that he might be the better able to defend her; preffing thim, after the conference was over, to rush into the midst of the enemy, and die a martyr for the cause of truth. It is also faid, that when he told her he was not fo much afraid of dying, as of being exposed after death, she courageously replied, When a sheep is once killed, it is not sensible of the pain of excoriation; and that, in order to inspire him with a greater degree of fortitude in the article of death, the gave him a draught into which a pound of musk had been infused. The enemy, not daring to approach him, pelted him with stones, and wounded him in feveral places, before they gave him the satal stroke. When he felt the blood run down his face and beard, he repeated an Arabic verse, importing, that the blood of our wounds does not fall down upon our heels, but upon our feet. By which he implied, that he did not turn his back upon his enemies, however terrible they might appear. After his death, Al Hejûj ordered his head to be cut off, and his body to be affixed to a cross in the city. Which body, being perfumed with the musk Abd'allah had drank, emitted a grateful odour for several days; and was afterwards interred in the burying place of the Jews at Meding. As to the duration of the fiege of Mecca, authors are not perfectly agreed; some making it to amount to seven months and a few days, and others to eight months and seventeen nights. According to the writers followed by Al Makin, Abd'allah's mother furvived him only five days. The reduction of Mecea put Abd'almâlec in possession of the peninsula of the Arabs, and consequently sendered him fole and absolute master of the Moslem empire s.

the object of them; of which they supply us with the following remarkable instance. When he was once at prayer, a pigeon lighted upon his head, and fat there a considerable time, without his being in the least sensible of it. And yet notwithstanding these amiable qualities, he is said to have been covetous to such a degree, that his avarice became a proverb amongst the Arabs. Abulfeda relates, that he wore a fuit of cloaths forty years without ever putting them off his back; which is absolutely incredible. He was about seventytwo years of age at the time of his death, and of a family not very acute, according to some of the Moslem historians. His fecretary's name was Deyl Ebn Omar, and his chamberlain's In the beginning of the fiege of Mecca, he refided for the most part in the Caaba; but after Al Hejâj had beat down one part of that place by the stones he discharged upon it, and fet fire to the other by some burning balls of pitch, which, by the affiftance of his engines, he found means to communicate to it, he found himself obliged to retire to his own house. In fine, Abd'allah was killed, and Mecca taken, on the 18th day of the former Jonada, in the 73d year of the Hejra, or of CHRIST 692. About this time, Abd'almâlec ordered the poll-tax, or capitation, called Taadil, to be levied upon the Christians of Syria. The same year, Mohammed Ebn Merwan gained a victory over the Greeks, which was attended with the furrender of Affafiyah; and Othman Ebn Walid made an irruption into Armenia with a body of 4000 Arabs, and defeated likewise an army of the same nation that amounted to 60,000 men. The Greek writers only in general observe, that all civil wars ceasing at this time amongst the Moslems, they became reunited under one prince; and that Abd'almalec being now firmly feated upon his throne, discovered an inclination to keep up a good understanding with all the neighbouring powers t.

In the 74th year of the Hejra, Al Hejaj demolished the temple Hejaj of Mecca, after it had been repaired by Abd allah Ebn Zobeir, crueky. rebuilt it, and reftored it to the form it was in before Mohams med's time, wherein it still remains. Having been appointed the governor of Medina, he exercised unheard-of cruekies upon the inhabitants of that city. He frequently quarrelled with them without any manner of provocation, and punished them where there was not the least appearance of any crime. It has been observed by some Arab writers, that there happened a very remarkable solar eclipse this year, on Monday, towards the close of the former Jonada; in one part of the duration of which the stars very clearly appeared w.

THE following year, Abd almâlek made Al Hejâj his lieutenant Hejâj ap of Irâk; of which post that general took possession at Cufa, pointed goescorted by a body of 12,000 horse. The day after his arrival at Cûfa, he upbraided, in very sharp terms, the inhabitants of that city; fwearing to them from the pulpit, that his punishments, in rigour and severity, should exceed those of the most cruel of his predecessors, and be a pattern for his fuccessors to the remotest periods of time. The Azarakites, at this time, were probably posted at no great distance from Basra, as the revolt, that happened there at this juncture, proved no fmall encouragement to those rebels, and animated them to attack the forces fent against them by Al Hejâj. However, they reaped no great advantage from that event; Al Mohalleb foon afterwards putting them to flight, and driving them before him, as it should seem, into some of the remoter parts of Persia. We have already given our readers a description of the province and city of Abwaz, and shall therefore take no farther notice of it here x.

Saleh and In the 76th year of the Hejra, Saleh Ebn Marj, a hotShebib re-headed sectary, and Shebib Ebn Zeid, a Khârejite, took up bel against arms against the Khalif. They had both been on pilgrimage the Kha- at Mecca the preceding year, when Abd almâlet was there, and so formed a conspiracy against him. The Khalif, being apprized of this, ordered Al Hejâj to seize them; but they eluded all his vigilance, and found means to make their escape. Saleh remained very secure a month at Cûsa, and concerted the most proper measures with his friends there to carry his design into execution. That branch of the Khârejites, that followed him, went under the name of Safrians, and appeared now for the first time in arms. He was a man much given to devotion, and had many followers in Mawsel and Mesopotamia, to whom he frequently read and expounded the Kerân. He once delivered a discourse, which so pleased all his hearers, that they begged he would favour them with a copy of it. He granted their request; and by this means that discourse has been preserved to the present age; but as it is little better than enthusiastic cant, or rather a collection of crude exhortatory observations, adapted to the taste of those hot-headed illiterate enthusiasts, to whom it was directed, and intirely calculated to excite them to a rebellion; as it throws not the least light upon that part of the Arab history, in which we are now engaged, and consequently contains nothing that can render it in any degree either instructive or entertaining; an omission of it here will by no means prove unacceptable to our sagacious and intelligent readers.

WHILST Saleb was haranguing his followers, in order to And are inspire them with sentiments of abhorrence both of the Khalif driven to. and Al Hejáj, he received a letter from Shebib; wherein that Mawsel. incendiary reproved him for being so tardy in his motions. Saleb, in his answer, by way of recrimination, told him, that, had he himself not been so dilatory, hostilities would have commenced before that time against the wicked Imam; that his delay had raised in them a suspicion of him; and that they waited only for his arrival, in order to enter upon action. This roufing Shebib, he immediately joined Saleh at Dara'ljazira, that is, Dara, or Daras, in Mesopotamia, of which Mohammed Ebn Merwan was at that time governor, with a small body of infantry, and saluted him emperor of the faithful there. After this junction, they seized some of Mehammed's horses in a neighbouring village, upon which they mounted their foot. The governor foon received intelligence of their motions; but despising their number, the whole force commanded by these enthusiasts not exceeding 120 men, he only ordered Adi to march against them with a detachment of 500 men. But Adi informing him, that this force was infufficient to reduce them, he reinforced him with 500 more; upon which, he advanced to Daras, near which place the Safrians, or Kharejites, had posted themselves. Adi, having no mind to fight, notwithstanding his vast superiority in point of numbers, gave Saleh to understand, that, if he would quit Mesopotamia, and invade some other province, he would not oppose him; but this Saleh refused to do, except Adi would declare himself to be of the same religious and political sentiments with the Safrians, who acknowleded him for their chief. This proposal not being relished by Adi, nothing could then be concluded upon. Adi, soon after this first effort to prevail upon

Baleh to depart out of Mesopotamia by amicable means proved ineffectual, not being sufficiently upon his guard, was surprized by the enemy; who attacked him whilst he was saying the noon-prayers, put him to the rout, and made themselves masters of his camp. Mohammed, receiving advice of this defeat, ordered Khâled Ebn Al. Jora and Al Hâreth, each at the head of 1500 men, to advance against the Separatiffs = who coming up with them near Amed, or Amida, a fierce conflict ensued. The rebels behaved with great bravery on this occasion, and repulsed in such a manner the Kbalif's horse, that they were obliged to dismount, and fight on foot: after which, they warmly attacked the enemy. However, the Safrians defended themselves with unparalleled intrepidity, till the approach of the night put an end to the action; tho' finding themselves not able to cope with the Khalif's forces, they foon after decamped, and retired with great precipitation to Mawfel. From thence they continued their route to Dascara, where they pitched their tents. We must not forget to obferve, that, tho' the dispute near Amida was on both sides so obstinate, neither the Khalif's troops, nor the Safrians, sustained any confiderable loss; the former not having had many above 70, and the latter only 30 men killed in the action 2. the command of Saleh and Shebib, had taken post at Dascara, fent Al Hareth Al Hamadani to drive them from thence with a forces, and body of 5000 men. Whilst Al Hareth was upon his march, he received advice, that Saleh had abandoned Dascara, and seemed to be moving towards Jalouta and Katikin; upon which, he purfued him with great expedition, endeavouring, by forced marches, to come up with him. At last, the two armies faced each other at Modbaj, a little town or village upon the Tigris, between Mawsel and Jukhi, and, after some previous motions, engaged. Saleh's forces were composed only of three companies, confifting of thirty men each; which, not being able to make head against Al Hareth's troops, were foon thrown into confusion, and Saleh himself killed upon the spot. Shebib was also beaten off his horse, obliged for fome time to fight on foot, and at last made his retreat in excellent order to a neighbouring castle. From thence, tho' surrounded by Al Hâreth's numerous forces, with his little army. or rather troop, he made a fally upon the enemy, penetrated about midnight to the very centre of their camp, cut many of them to pieces, wounded the general himself, who was with great difficulty carried off, and dispersed the most considerable part of the army he commanded. By this victory, Shebib

Nay, taking advantage of that general's absence, when at Basra, without any confiderable opposition, he made himself master of Cufa. About this time, Al Moballeb Ebn Abusafra, whom Al Hejâj had continued his lieutenant of Khorafan, departed this life. He was a person of an extraordinary character, both for his surprizing abilities, and his uncommon generofity of temper. When he was at the point of death, he gave his fons a bundle of arrows to break; which none of them being able to do, he asked them whether they could break those arrows fingly? To which they answered in the affirmative. "Then," said he, 46 suppose yourselves to be like that bundle of arrows here ex-" hibited to your view, and not to be represented by the dis-" united arrows;" intimating hereby, that as their union would render them invincible, so, the moment discord entered amongst them, they would begin to advance towards deftruction a.

Shebib's wife Gazála, who had attended him in his first march to Cufa, his brother, and a considerable number of his men, were killed in the action; and the rest pursued some parasangs by a body of the Syrian troops, who put to the fword only thirty of the Safrians, tho' they loft themselves above 100 men. This disafter obliged Shebib to abandon Cufa, in order to provide for his own safety. Having therefore passed the Tigris, he advanced to Jukbi; from whence, repaffing the same river at the place where Waset was afterwards built, he retired with great precipitation to Ahwaz, and from thence into Kerman, where he halted, and refreshed his men. In the mean time, Al Hejáj ordered Gazála's head to be washed, and interred; and detached Sofian Ebn Al Abrad, whom Abd'almalec had fent to his affiftance out of Syria, with a body of troops to march against Shebib, who had advanced a second time to Ab-Sofiân came up with the enemy at a bridge called Dojail Al Abwaz, where a sharp dispute ensued; in which, notwithstanding the inequality of numbers, Shebib feveral times repulsed the Khalif's forces, but was at last himself put to flight. His horse, leaping upon a mare before him, loosened the stones of the bridge, whilst he was passing it, and forced his foot upon the edge of a boat; which threw him into the river, or arm of the sea, as we find intimated by Al Makin, that a little farther discharges itself into the bay of Basra. Notwithstanding which, M. D'Herbelot, who seems to have followed chiefly the Perfian historians, says, that Shebib was drowned in the Sarfar, a river of Syria. The first time he emerged, he said, When God decrees a thing, it is done; and the second, This is the decree of the ALMIGHTY, the ALL-WISE GOD: upon which, the Safrians, being struck with terror, immediately cried out, The emperor of the faithful is drowned. His body being drawn up with a net, the head was cut off, and sent to Al Hejaj, who was not a little pleased at the fight of it. When the body was opened, the heart was taken out of it, and found to be prodigiously firm and hard, like a stone. His mother is faid to have been a Christian, carried off as a prisoner, and consequently a slave, by Yezid Ebn Naim, after a victory obtained by the Mollems over the Greeks. in the Khalifat of Othman, and the 25th year of the Heira. Proving with child of Shebib by her mafter, the grew extremely fond of him; and, in order to please him, embraced Mehammedism. Shebib was born on the tenth of Dbu'lbajja, the day on which the victims at Mecca are killed. Before his birth, his mother is reported to have feen in a dream a flame proceeding from her, that diffused itself over the face of the heavens, and extended to every quarter; after which, a coal dropt into a large water, and was quenched. From whence, continues our author, she inferred, that her son was to be a man of blood, elevated to an exalted station, and at last to perish in the water. Hence it came to pass, that, being once informed of his having been killed, the gave no credit to the rumour; but that being told he was drowned, she immediately believed it, faying it was impossible for him to come to any other end. After Shebib's death, the Azarakites, or Safrians, quarrelled amongst themselves; the greatest part of them deserting their leader, Katri Ebn Fojat. This gave the Khalif's troops an opportunity of attacking them to great advantage, putting 4000 of them to the fword, and driving the . rest, with Katri, into Taberistan. Upon their arrival here, they were kindly received by Ashid, the king of Taberistân, who affigned them a part of his territories for their habitations. They had not long been fettled here, before they infifted upon Albid's either embracing Islamism, or paying them an annual tribute; which he refusing to do, they drove him to Ray, or Raya, a populous city of Al Jebâl, in the Persian Irâk, where he implored the Khalif's protection. He afterwards conducted a body of the

the Moslem troops into Taberistan, where they fell upon the rebels with fuch fury, that they killed Katri Ebn Fojat himself upon the spot, cut a great number of his men in pieces, and took all the rest of them prisoners. All which operations an Arab author, followed by Mr. Ockley, places in the 77th year of the Hejra; as do also Khondemir and another Perfian writer; tho' the historians epitomized by Al Makin affert them to have happened in the preceding year. And this feems to us the most probable opinion, as those historians affirm, that Al Mohalleb Ebn Abusafra, who died in the 76th year of the aforesaid æra, commanded the Moslem forces in the last expedition. We must not forget to observe, that Taberislan, the scene of this expedition, is a mountainous tract, full of woods, limited in part by the region called Deylam, and the districts of Ghilan and Cazbin, said by Golius pretty nearly to answer to the Hyrcania of the antients. But, for a more particular account of that remote country, we must beg leave to refer our curious readers to the copious description of it extracted by the last-mentioned author out of the oriental geographers b.

THE same year, that is, the 76th of the Hejra, in the The Arabe Khalîfat of Abd'almâlec, according to Al Makîn, or rather the begin to authors he followed, dinars and dirhems were first struck coin mowith Arabic inscriptions upon them. Before this time, the "9. dinars, or gold coins, had Greek, and the dirhêms, or filver ones, Persic characters upon them. This giving the emperor great offence, he desired the Khalif to alter that manner of writing; threatening otherwise to send some coins that should mention their prophet in terms not very agreeable to him. This incenfed Abd almâlec, who thereupon said, A curse be upon their coins! and, from that time, proposed setting up a mint in his own dominions. The first Arabic money seems to have been some dirhêms stamped by Al Hejaj, with this inscription, Say, there is one God, or, according to Al Makin, Allah Samad, God is eternal; which not a little displeased the Moslems, as they imagined that the facred name of GoD would be thereby exposed to the touch of unclean persons of both sexes. Somyor, a Jew, regulated their coinage, which was very rude at first, but received afterwards several improvements in the times of Omar Ebn Habira, the governor of Irak, Khâled Al Karshi, Yusef Ebn Omar, the Khalifs Haran Al Rashid, his son Al Mamun, and Al Wathek. In the days of Khaled Al Karshi, there were three forts of dirhêms, a species of silver coin amongst the Arabs that we have already given our readers some account of in the life of Mohammed; the weight of every one of which has been handed down to us by Al Makin. The metal at first was not very good, but received afterwards, farther degrees of perfection in the aforefaid reigns. All the earliest coins struck by the Khalifs feem to have had only legends and inscriptions upon them; however, those of a later date were sometimes adorned with the heads of the princes who struck them, or the figures of animals. Of the first fort we have one preserved in the Bodleian library at Oxford, which is perhaps the oldest Arabic coin extant; it having been struck at Waset upon the Tigris, in the Khalifat of Al Walid Ebn Abd'almâlec, and the 88th year of the Hejra, or of CHRIST 707. The inscription on one side of this coin, as it has been translated by the reverend and learned Dr. Hunt, professor of the Hebrew and Arabic languages in the university of Oxford, is, There is only one God, who has no companion; and round it the following words, In the name of God, this dirhêm was struck at Waset in the year of the Hejra 88. On the reverse is a passage taken out of the 112th fûra of the Korân, to the following effect: God is one. eternal, neither begetting nor begotten, nor is there any being like bim; and, round it, another taken from the fixty-first fura of the same book, couched in the following terms, MOHAM-MED is the apostle of GOD, who sent him with a direction and the religion of truth, that he might render this religion more confpicuous than any other; the it be opposed by the Associators. The character here is the Cufic, of which enough has been faid in our antient history of the Arabs, and the coin is so well preserved, that it may seem to some not to be genuine. It confifts of pretty good filver, and weighs one peny-weight and twenty grains. Another of these dirhêms is to be seen in the very valuable collection of antient coins, bequeathed by the late archbishop Wake to Christ-Church college in Oxford; and another in the small cabinet of the writer of this hiftory; ofboth which our readers will meet with an explication in a proper place. Notwithstanding what has been advanced to the contrary by Al Makin, we are told by Theophanes and Cedrenus, who, in this point, seem to deserve some regard, that Abd'almâlec had begun to coin money of a new form, such as had Digitized by Google had never before been feen, in the fixth year of the emperor Justinian Il's reign, coincident with the year of CHRIST 690, or 691; and that then the emperor refused to receive the tribute sent him by the Khalif, because it consisted intirely of the new Arabic money. Which if we admit, it must be allowed, that Abd almalec began to strike dinars and dirhems at least five or fix years earlier than the time that has been fixed for the commencement of coinage amongst the Moslems by the Arab historians. To what has been here observed, Theophanes seems to add, that the emperor made the Khalif's offer of his tribute in Arabic money one of his pretexts for coming to a rupture with that prince. Be that as it will, Ab-Ealmâlec, if we will believe this writer, understanding that Justinian was determined to break the treaty lately concluded with the Arabs, raised a powerful army, and gave the command of it to one of his generals, named Mohammed; who, causing the articles of the late treaty to be carried before his men on the point of a spear, met the emperor in the neighbourhood of Sebastopolis, and engaged his army with unparalleled bravery. But notwithstanding this, Mobammed was obliged to give ground, and even retire to his camp; where he must have perished with hunger, or submitted to the emperor, had he not in the mean time gained over 20,000 Sclavi, with their commander, in the emperor's service; whose unexpected desertion caused such a consternation in the Greek army, that they immediately betook themselves to a precipitate flight, being pursued with great slaughter by the Araba. After which, Mohammed haraffed the imperial provinces in a most cruel manner, and made himself absolute master of Armenia; which, however, returned again to the emperor in a very short time. The same author also relates, that Mohammed bribed the general of the Sclavi to defert the emperor, by fending him, in the heat of the action, a quiver full of dinars, and promifing him a much larger fum. Some commotions likewise, according to him, happened about this time on the fide of Khorasan, in which a great number of the Arabs loft their lives c.

The Arabs reduce Africa Propria.

THE following year, that is, the 78th of the Hejra, or of CHRIST 697, the Moslems invaded Africa with a very considerable force, made themselves masters of Cartbage, and overran the whole country that, in the earlier ages, properly appertained to that city. But they were foon driven out by John the patrician, a man of great valour and experience in war, whom the emperor had sent against them. The Arabs, to repair the great losses they had sustained, equipped another fleet, and returning to Africa, obliged John to fly to the seacoast, where he imbarked with the troops under his command for Constantinople. Thus was Africa, or rather Africa Propria, in a manner without opposition, abandoned once more to the Moslems .

Abd'al-`rahmân rebels against the Khalîf.

In the 79th year of the Hejra, or of Christ 698, Apfimar, or Tiberius, who had been raised to the empire, sent his brother Heraclius into Cappadocia, to watch the motions of the Arabs, This year, according to Theophanes and Cedrenus, one Abd'alrahman, an Arab governor, or commander, rebelled against the Khalif in Persia, and drove the Khakhaz out of that country. We must here beg leave to observe, that Khâkhân was a general title made use of by all those princes who reigned in the Transoxanian provinces; amongst which we may reckon the Kbans of the Turks, Tartars, and Moguls. The old church at Edessa was thrown down this year by an earthquake, which did confiderable damage in the neighbouring parts of Mesopotamia f.

His father's name, or rather furname, according to the Arab poet Al Hamiri, one of his admirers, was Seth; after whose death, Kawla, his mother, and Setb's widow, was married to Ali; so that he was not, properly speaking, the son of that Imam, nor descended from Mohammed, as Hasan and Hosein were. He feveral times refused the Khalifat, and was surnamed Eba Hanifiyah, that, by this appellation, he might be distinguished from the two last-mentioned Imams, who were truly and properly Ali's fons, by Fâtema, the daughter of the prophet. Which if, with M. D'Herbelet, we admit, Mr. Ockley must have been guilty of a mistake (as indeed the surname Eba Hanifiyah itself seems clearly enough to evince) when he makes this Mohammed to have been the real fon of Ali. We are told by the Greek writers, that the Arabs made an irruption this year into the imperial territories, and laid fiege to Antaradus in Syria; but not being able to master that place, they returned to Mopfuestia in Cilicia, and left a garison there. The text of Theophanes, in the passage referred to, exhibiting Tarantum for Antaradus, may be emended by that of Cedrenus, which has preserved the true reading Antaradus here. One Abd'allab, according to those authors, commanded the Moslem forces this campaign b.

This Al Hejaj did in order to destroy him; of which being fecretly informed, he took care to acquaint the troops under his command with the motive to this expedition. The foldiers finding that they were to be facrificed to Al Hejáj's malice against their general, resolved to be revenged of the governor for his barbarity; and therefore unanimously took an oath to support Abd alrabmán Ebn Mohammed. Abd alrabmán hereupon concluded a peace with the Turk, returned into Irak, and marched directly against Al Hejáj; who, having received advice of what had happened, had fent to the Khalif for a reinforcement of the Syrian troops. After the arrival of these succours, Al Hejáj attacked Abd alrahmán Ebn Mohammed Ebn Asbab Al Kendi; but, being overthrown, Abd'alrabman carried his victorious arms to Bafra, and was joined by a great number of the inhabitants of that place, who took the oath of allegiance to him. Then intrenching himself on one side of the city, he found an opportunity of attacking, to great advantage, Al Hejâj, in his turn, and gained a second victory over him. From the scene of action he moved to Cufa, and was received with open arms by the people of that city. In the mean time, Al Hejaj affembled all the forces he was able, and led them against Abd alrahmân; whose army, by the accession of the Basraus, who had conceived an invincible aversion to Al Hejaj, on account of his enormous cruelty, amounted to 300,000 men. Al Hejáj incamped at a place called Dairkorrab, and Abd'alrahman at another denominated Dairaljamajim. at a small distance from the enemy; and, in the space of an hundred days, these two commanders are said to have sought eighty-one battles. At last, Al Hejâj put Abd' alrabmân to flight, and cut off 4000 of his men; after which, the latter retreated to Saban, where he was seized by Al Hejaj's lieutenant, and rescued by Zentil, the Turk, his friend and ally. Al Hejáj, receiving intelligence of this, fent Yezid Ebn Al Moballeb against Zentil, in order to force him to deliver up Abd'alrabman into his hands. Zentil made the proper dispositions for his defence, and engaged Yezid with an army of 60,000 men; but he was foon overthrown, had many of his men killed, and a great number of them taken prisoners; amongst whom was Abd alrahmân himself. The Greek writers relate, that Baanes, surnamed Heptademon, from the seven devils with which he was supposed to have been possessed, betrayed this year likewise Armenia to the Arabs, for which he doubtless received a very confiderable reward i.

THE following year, being the 83d of the Hejra, and of Al Hejaj CHRIST 702, Al Hejôj built a city upon the Tigris, which he builds called Waset. That name signifies the middle in the Arabic Waset language, because this city stood in the mid-way between whom the Bajra and Cufa. The eastern authors, however, a little differ Tigris. about the year of its foundation; Ebn Shobnah making this to have been the 83d, and Khondemir the 84th, of the Moflem æra. The Arabs call the circumjacent tract Al Abar, the wells, as it abounds with wells; and near the city there is a place bearing the name of Al Abar Al Arab, the wells of the Arabs. Waset, according to the Arab tables, is situated in Chaldaa, or Babylonian Irak, in long. 81° 30', and lat. 32° 20' N. The Persian geographer says, that it is seated upon the Tigris, at an equal distance from Bagbdad, Cufa, Basra, and Abwaz; that is, about fifty paralangs from every one of those cities. This year the nobility of Armenia drove the Arabs out of their country, and sent to Apsimar, or Tiberius, for affistance. But, in the mean time, Mobammed, one of the Khalif's generals, entering Armenia with a powerful army, recovered that province; and, having got the authors of the revolt into his hands, burnt them all alive. Encouraged with this success, the Moslems invaded Cilicia once more under the conduct of Azar; but were, to the number of 10,000, either cut in pieces by Heraclius, or taken prifoners, and fent in chains to Constantinople. That Waset was founded this year, as Ebn Shohnah affirms, notwithstanding what has been advanced to the contrary by Rhondemir, may be inferred from Abu'l-Farai .

The Arabs defeated by Heraclius.

In the 84th year of the Hejra, or of the Christian æra 703, according to Theophanes and Cedrenus, the Khalif sent Azib, or Azid, one of the Moslem commanders, with an army into Cilicia, in order to make himself master of that country. Meeting with no enemy at first to oppose him, he laid siege to Sissum, took it, and levelled it with the ground. But Heraclius, the imperial general, foon after appearing at the head of the Christian forces, brought him to a general action; in which he cut off 12,000 of the Arabs, and probably defeated Azib; tho' this has not been expresly afferted by any of the Greek historians. As we hear no more of Azib after this action, we may naturally suppose, that he soon abandoned Cilicia, and retired with the shatter'd remains of his army into the Khalif's dominions 1.

Writers differ about the year of Abd'almâlec'; death.

CHRIST 704, if we will believe Theophanes, the Khalif Abd'almâlec Ebn Merwan departed this life. Some other Christian writers affirm, that he died the preceding year. none of them, in this point, are to be depended upon, as running counter to the express testimony of the best and most authentic Moslem historians. The Arabs seem to have enjoyed this year an uninterrupted repose, as no account of any atchievements, or military operations, performed by them in it has been handed down to us by any of the Greek or Moslem writers m.

He governed Egypt above twenty years, having been constituted lieutenant of that country by his father Merwan. Being infected with the leprofy, the physicians advised him to retire to Holwan, as the most proper place for him to refide in. Here he made a large fishpond, or refervoir, which he took care to supply constantly with water from the springs, or fountains, on mount Al Mokattam, by means of certain arches, or vaults, which he caused to be built, that kept open a communication between them; upon which, according to Eutychius, he erected a throne of glass. Upon these and other works at Holwan, where he first planted dates, he is said to have laid out 1,000,000 dinârs. He rode every Thursday from Holwan to Al Fostat ; and the next day, after the morning-prayer was over, returned to the former place. He likewise built a Mikeas, or measuring pillar, in order to form an estimate of the increase of the

His two chamberlains were Christians of the Melchite sect, whom he gave leave to erect the church of St. John at Holwan, for those of their own communion. He likewise obliged the Egyptians to pay part of their tribute every Friday, that he might be the better enabled to supply the exigencies of the state, till the death of Abd'allah Ebn Zobeir, and the perfect settlement of his brother upon the Moslem throne. He constructed a bridge upon the Khalij Amir Al Mumenin, or the river of the emperor of the faithful, the Amnis Trajanus of the antients, and the Khalis of the moderns; and had an intention to remove the bridge at Al Fostat to Holwan, a pleasant village about two parasange distant from that city, on the eastern bank of the Nile. He likewise designed to transfer the port, the merchants, and the exchange, from Al Foflat to Holwan; but did not live long enough to put this defign in execution. One Athanasius, a Christian of the Jacobite persuasion, was his secretary, whom he permitted to build the church of St. George in Kafril Shamaa, and that of Abukir in the citadel near Ashabol Rabiat. We are told by some of the Christian writers, that he was the first who fixed upon the Egyptian monks a capitation, obliging every one of them to pay annually a dinâr. An author cited by Al Makîn relates, that Abd'alaziz, entering into a monastery at Holwan the day before his death, faw there an image of the virgin Mary with CHRIST in her arms, which he spat upon; and that the night following our Saviour appeared to him in a dream, commanding him to be killed; upon which, he imagined himself to be immediately run through with a lance. This struck him with such terror, that he instantly awaked, and expired the same night. His son, according to the same author, furvived him only forty days. After Abd'alaziz's death, the Khalif conferred the government of Egypt upon his fon Abd'allah, who rendered himself more disagreeable to the Egyptians than any of his predecessors. In this post he continued till his father Abd'almâlec's death, which happened about the middle of the month Shawal, in the 86th year of the Hejra. The disease he died of seems to have been a dropfy, fince the physicians had absolutely prohibited him the use of all kinds of liquors. Notwithstanding which, being tortured with extreme thirst, he commanded his son A Walid to give him fome water to drink; which he refusing to do, he ordered his daughter Fâtema to bring some to him. But Al Walid, defirous of keeping his father alive as long as possible, would not fuffer her to approach him; which so exasperated the Khalif, that he threatened to disinherit him. therefore, gave him water, which he greedily drank, and foon after expired. He was always apprehensive that the month

month. Ramadân would prove fatal to him; as he was born. weaned, learned the Koran by heart, and was faluted Khalif in that month. He sat upon the Moslem throne above twenty-one years; and was either fixty or fixty-two, or, as others say, fifty-seven years old, at the time of his death. He was buried at Damascus, without the little gate, and his son Al Walid said the funeral service at the time of his interment. As to his person, Abd'almâlec was of a middle stature, and a fair, or, as others will have it, a swarthy complexion; having a large gaping mouth, a long beard, and a prominent belly. With regard to his disposition, he was so extremely covetous, that some of his subjects, by way of derision, called him the fweat of a stone. However, according to Abulfeda, as well as the authors followed by Al Makin, he was a man of a very good capacity, being exceeded by few of his subjects in judgment and penetration. He was also courageous, learned, and wise; but did not make so amiable a figure after his elevation to the Khalifat as before. He had fuch stinking breath, that the flies lighting on his lips were almost instantly struck dead with it; for which reason he received from some the appellation of father of flies. He one night dreamed, that he made water in the most facred part of the temple of Mecca; and this dream was repeated four times successively: which greatly affecting him, he consulted Sa'id Ebn Mosabbib, a person very expert in the interpretation of dreams, about the fignification of so ominous a vision. Sa'id told him, that he had no reason to look upon it in so disagreeable a light, as it undoubtedly portended the exaltation of four of his fons, all of whom should be advanced to the Khalifat after their father's death, Which nocturnal prediction was exactly verified, Al Walid, Soliman, Yezid, and Hefbam, four of his fons, afterwards actually ascending the Moslem throne. He left sixteen fons behind him, the eldest of which was Al Wolid, who succeeded him. His first secretary was Rub Ebn Riba', and his fecond Kabida Ebn Dawib; his principal Kadi, or judge, Ebn Idris Al Holwani, who was succeeded by Abd allah Ebn Kais; his chamberlain Tulef, who was likewise fucceeded by several others of his servants, one of whom was Abu'l Rogairaga; the first captain of his guards Yezid Ebn Abu Habsa Al Saksaki, and the second Abd'allab Ebn Yezid Al Hakemi. The inscription of his seal was, I believe in God our Saviour. He was much more powerful than any of his predecessors; having subdued Abd allah Ebn Zobeir, and annexed Arabia to his dominions; reduced to his obedience the fectaries of all denominations that appeared in arms against him; conquered India, or at least a considerable part of that vast region, in the east; and, in the west, penetrated with his victorious victorious troops as far as Spain. The first day of his reign was Wednesday, and the last Thursday. He was so implacable an enemy to the house of Ali, that he would not suffer the celebrated poet Ferozdak, in his works, to praise any of the descendents of that illustrious Imâm.

SECT. XII.

A L WALID, the fon of Abd'almalee, was proclaimed Khalif Al Walld the same day his father died. His mother was Walada, Ebn Abthe daughter of Abbas Ebn Harbi Ebn Hareth. He was sur-d'almalec named Abu'l Abbas, and continued all his father's lientenants proclaimed of provinces in their respective governments. At his inaugur Khalif. ration, his principal subjects took the usual oath of allegiance to him. Korrab Ebn Shebal, or, according to others, Korrab Ebn Sharik, of the house of Abbas, his governor of Egypt, at the Khalif's command, demolished the principal mosque at Mefr, and either built or beautified another, deaurating the tops or heads of its pillars; which rendered that governor extremely disagreeable to the Egyptians. Al Walid also is said to have adorned the temple at Jerusalem with some additional buildings, foon after his accession; and, after the example of his father Abd almalec, to have ordered his subjects to go on pilgrimage thither. His troops made a very successful irruption into the imperial territories, under the command of his brother Moslem Ebn Abd abnâlec, who carried off a very confiderable number of the emperor's fubjects prisoners. This Arab general feems to have been called by Theophanes Masalmas. That writer places the expedition here hinted at in the fourth year of Al Walid's reign. In the 88th year of the Hejra, or of CHRIST 707, money was coined in the new mint lately erected at Waset; as appears from a dirbem explained by the learned Dr. Hunt, and now preserved in the tabinet of medals belonging to the university of Oxford o.

Heextends' ABOUT the same time, or rather in the very same year, acthe Mos- cording to the author of Leb Tarikh and Khondemir, this Khalif rebuilt the temple of Medina, where Mobammed and the first Khalifs lay interred. This was a much more superb and magnificent structure than the former; and, in order to render it the more grand, Al Walid commanded Omar Ebn Abd'alaziz, his governor in Arabia, to demolish the houses set apart for the habitations of the prophet's wives. This gave great offence to the inhabitants of Medina; who reproached the Khalif with having deprived the Moslems, coming thither from different parts of the world, of the finest monument of Mobammed's modesty, in having affigned his wives, for their habitations, such low and small cottages as those, that then remained. About this time, Walid also ordered the construction of a most stately and famous mosque at Damascus; to which he joined the superb church of St. John Boptist, that had been inriched with many invaluable ornaments by the Greek emperors, for several ages. He would first have purchased this church of the Christians for a sum of money, with which they might have built them a church in some other part of the city, amounting to about 40,000 dinars. But they shewing him the instrument signed by Khâled Ebn Al Walid, confirming to them the possession of that church, and refusing to part with it at any rate, he took it from them by force. He employed 12,000 workmen in the erection of his mosque, but did not live to fee it finished; the last hand having not been put to it before the beginning of his brother Soliman's reign. This year Katiba Ebn Massem penetrated into the Transoxanian provinces; and having passed the Jibûn, or the Oxus, without any loss, defeated a numerous army that had kept him blocked up for four months together, and reduced him to very great straits. That army was composed of Turks and Tartars, of whom Katiba slew a very great numbers After this victory he laid siege to Bokhâra, the metropolis of Bukharia properly so called, and took it. From thence he marched to Samarkand, which in a short time surrendered to him. In fine, he reduced Sogd, or Sogdiana, Bagrafa, Shafb, Fargana, and the whole immense tract going under the name of Mawara'lnahr. After he had concluded a peace with, or rather conquered, the Khân of Khowarazm, he erected a mosque In his capital, where he officiated every Friday, and destroyed all the idols he met with in that city. Those idols were fixed to the places where they flood by golden nails, that weighed 50,000 Methkals, or Arabic drachms; all which Katiba carried off with him. The principal article of the treaty concluded with the Khan of Khowarazm was, that he should pay an annual tribute of 2,000,000 dinars to the Khalif. Mo-bammed Bbn Kafem At Thaktfi, another of At Walid's generalise at or near the same time, also invaded India, or Al Hind, and subjugated a considerable part of that country. He likewise made himself master of the kingdom of Sindia, or Al Sind, bounded by Kermân, or rather the region of Makran, the defart of Sijistân, and India, some parts of which vast continent it likewise comprehends; whose king Dahar he deseated. killed him in battle, and cut off his head. The Greek writers mention few particulars relating to the Moslem affairs; during the three first years of Al Walid's reign. However, Theophanes observes, that he mounted the Moslem throne the same year his father Abd'almâlec died; and that he deprived the Chriflians of their great church at Dumascus, in his second year. We are told by an eastern writer, that a dreadful pestilence raged about two years before this time in Mesopotamia, and made terrible havock in the territory of Sarug; no less than feventy-two persons dying in the monastery of St. Silas there ?.

THE following year, being the 89th of the Hejra, and of The build. The golden chains for the lamps there, in number 600, were so bright, says an Arab author, that they disturbed, or rather hindered, the devotions of the Moslems who came thither to pray. were afterwards blackened by the smoke of the lamps, and remained in that condition till they were removed into the public treasury by Omar Ebn Abd alaziz, who substituted iron chains in their room. One of the historians followed by Al Makin relates, that when the workmen were digging for the foundations of this mosque, they found a stone with an infeription upon it, importing, that the temple, or edifice, to which it belonged, was built by Mabab Al Khair, in the fourth year of Al Aftewana. This year, Theodorus was constituted patriarch of Jerusalem, and lived, after his promotion to that high dignity, thirty-five years 4.

tho' Eutychius, who, in this point, has probability on his into Cap- fide, seems to place that event three or four years higher, in the beginning of this Khalif's reign, as has been already obferved. Be that as it will, this Kerrah was most certainly a very impious and abandoned person; taking with him frequently a company of catamites, players, and buffoons, into the cathedral at Mefr, and placing them upon the feats belonging to the priefts, in time of divine service, there. At this time, Masalmas, Moslema, or Moslem, and Abbas, two Arab commanders, according to Theephanes, made an irruption into Cappadecia, and formed the fiege of Tyana. The emperor, being apprized of this, fent an army under the conduct of Theedorus Carteruca and Theophylactus Saliba, two of his generals, to force them to raise the siege. But this army, being made up of raw undisciplined troops, assembled in haste, was easily routed by the Arabs, who killed a great number of the Christians upon the spot, took most of the rest prisoners, and made themselves mafters of their camp. The belieged, being now destitute of all hopes of relief, and reduced to the last extremity, furrendered the place to the Mostems, who had been so straitened in their camp for want of provisions, before the late action, that they had entertained thoughts of abandoning the fiege, and took on in the Khalif's service. However, the Arabs are said to have violated their agreement with the Transans, by fending many of them into remote defarts, and making the greatefts part of the remainder flaves. A fynod was held in the monastery of St. Silas, at Sarug in Mesepetamia, over which the patriarch Julian, Thomas the bishop of Amida, and James the bishop of Edessa, presided, about the beginning of the second year of Al Walid's reign '.

With regard to the new mosque at Dumascus, the building of which went on this year, we must beg leave to observe, that Al Walid was the first who erected there those elevated towers, or steeples, called by the Arabs Menârats, and by the Turks Minârets, from whence the Muedbabins, or criers, give public notice of the times of prayer. The Persan geographer, to whom we are obliged for this article, also relates, in agreement with what we have already extracted from some of the Arab historians, that Al Walid adorned, with several additional buildings, the mosque erected at Jerusalem by the Khalif Omar.

In the 93d year of the Hejra, answering to the year of our Tarik LORD 712, Tarik Ebn Zarka made a descent in Spain with Ebn a body of the Moslem troops, defeated Roderic, the last king Zarka of the Goshs there, reduced the city of Toledo, and over-ran conquere a confiderable part of that kingdom. Tarik was sent to part of Spain by Mifa Ebn Okair, or Okail, who feems to have com-Spain, manded the Khalif's forces in the western parts of Africa, and to have been the person who projected this expedition. Musa. being informed of Farik's success, soon followed him with a body of auxiliary troops, composed of Arabs and Africans; and, after the junction of these two Moslem generals, the Arabs made themselves masters of a great number of fortreffes in Spain; subjugating in a manner the whole country, and obliging it to become tributary to the Khalif. The Moftems acquired spoils of immense value in these expeditions. and, amongst other things, an exceeding rich table, called by the Arab writers the table of Solomon, the son of David. Those writers pretend, that this table consisted intirely of filver and gold, and was adorned with three borders of pearls; but Roderick of Toledo represents it as consisting of one intire stone, of a green colour, and an immense fize, having no less than 365 feet. He also relates, that it was found in a certain village; or town, denominated from it the city of the table, near the mountain called in his days Jibel Soliman, mount Solomon, or the mountain of Solomon. Roderic is, however, inconsistent with himself, when he afferts, that Masa had first the possession of this famous table, and yet, almost in the same breath, is pleased immediately after to affirm, that Tarik made a prefent of it, with many other valuable effects, to Mûsa. It will, therefore, be more sase to adhere, in this point, to the testimony of the Arab historians; who relate, that Tarik either brought it, or took care to have it conveyed, to Al Walid himself. After Musa and Tarik had committed dreadful devastations in Spain, they were recalled from thence by the Khalif. However, Musa fent his fon Abd alaziz into that country, who fixed his residence at Seville, and afterwards married Egebo, or Egibon, king Roderic's widow; but, being persuaded by his wife to wear the diadem after the Gothic manner, he was affaffinated by the Arabs, who from thence concluded that he had become a convert to Chriflianity, whilst he was performing his devotions. Abd'alaziz, after a reign of three years, was succeeded by Ayub Ebn Halib, by whose advice his predecessor had been murdered, and who was looked upon by the Arabs as the most prudent Mostem in Spain. Ayub is faid to have built a city, called Calatayub, and to have transferred the royal feat from Seville to Corduba. Some authors relate, that the two fons of Vitiza, Roderic's predecessor, and count Julian, whose daughter Roderic had ravished, applied this year to Musa for a body of troops, which they offered to conduct into Spain, and put that kingdom into the hands of the Khalif. But Al Walid, fay they, fuspecting treachery in this affair, ordered Muja to send over first with Julian, and the two princes attending him, only a fmall detachment of his forces, and to form a notion of that count's fincerity from the reception those Arabs should meet with in Spain. Upon which, continue they, he affigned Julian only a body of 400 foot and 100 horse, under the command, as should seem, of Tarik, or, as he is called by the Spanish historians, Tarif, who passed the straits of Hercules, now known by the name of the straits of Gibraltar. was joined by a good number of Julian's friends, and ravaged the maritime coast of Batica and Lusitania. Soon after which, the Arabs returned loaded with spoil and plunder to Africa. him two fons, Zeid and Mobammed Abu Jaafar, who were highly effected by those of the Shite persuasion. This year' likewise Tarik, or Tarif, assembled a body of twelve thousand men, which he put privately on board fome merchant-men, collected for that purpose by count Julian, and transported them to the rock or mountain Calpe, denominated afterwards from this general Jibel Tarif, that is, the rock or mountain of Tarif; from whence the word Gibraltar, the name of a city erected at the foot of this rock fince that event, has been formed. Tarif, soon after his arrival in Spain, made himself master of an antient city, that stood at no great diflance, in a western direction, from the spot on which Gibreltar was afterwards built, and from him received the name of Tarifa, or Tariffa, by which it is also at present known. This town was undoubtedly the Julia Traducta of the old geographers, and neither the Mellaria nor the Carteia of the antients, as some of the Spanish historians pretend. After the reduction of this place, the Moslem general marched to Seville, which he easily possessed himself of, as it was not in a flate of defence. Many other towns of confiderable note likewise surrendered to him; which enabled him to plunder the whole province of Bætica, and a very confiderable part of Lustania. Roderic, receiving advice of these depredations, sent his cousin-german Eneco, Enecon, or Inach, called by some writers Sanctius, with a raw undisciplined rabble of an army, drawn together in haste, against the Arabs. But the Goths were foon put to flight, and left a great number of their men dead upon the field of battle. This so animated Tarif; that he resolved not to lay down his victorious arms till he had made an absolute conquest of Spain. Some of the Christian writers pretend, that Al Walid died this year; but this, as running counter to the concurrent testimony of all the best Arab historians, we must by no means admit. About the same time that Tarif made so rapid a progress in Spain, Abbas, another Moslem general, fell into Pisidia, with a powerful army, took the city of Antioch there, and, after he had ravaged the whole province, retired into the Khalif's territories with very inconfiderable loss w.

When he died, he was fifty-four years of age, and had prefided over Irâk about twenty years. He is said to have killed 120,000 men, and to have suffered 50,000 men, and, 30,000 women, to perish in prison. In order to excuse his extreme severity, or rather cruelty, he used frequently to say, that a severe, or even violent, government is better than a weak and too indulgent, or rather indolent, administration : hecause the former hurts only some particular persons, whereas the latter injures the whole body of the people. He did not fcruple to fay, that the obedience due to princes is more absolute than that which men owe even to God himself; since they are injoined by the Karan only to obey Gop as far as they are able, whereas that book requires of them an unconditional and unlimited obedience to all earthly rulers. Some. persons, once hearing him talk after this extravagant manner, told him, that nothing could equal either his envy or ambition, as he assumed to himself such a monstrous degree of authority. To which he replied, that man is fill more envious. and ambitious than me, who fays to God, Give me, O LORD, such a state of life as no person can enjoy after my death. are told by Abu'l-Faraj, that Al Hejaj destroyed 120,000 persons of rank and distinction, besides those that fell in war, through his means, and others of a lower degree; as also, that he was only fifty-three years old at the time of his death, and had then presided over Hejáz, as well as Irák, about twenty years x.

Don't you know me, then? faid Al Hejaj. No, replied the Arab. I am, faid the other, Al Hejaj, of whom you give so bad a character. Upon which, the Arab, without the least emotion or concern, demanded of Al Hejaj, in his turn, whether he knew him? No, answered the other. I am, said the Arab, a member of the family of Zobeir, whose posterity all become fools three days in the year, and this is one of them. Al Hejaj could not forbear laughing at, and admiring, so ingenious an evasion; so that, notwithstanding his natural fierceness, he pardoned the Arab, whom he esteemed for his wit and courage. As he was a man of fine parts and great eloquence, as well as a military genius, and not much advanced in years at his death, he was both a judge and an admirer of every thing that appeared forart and brilliant in others, even to the very last. It has been already observed, that Al Hejaj at last intirely Another. defeated Abd'alrahman, and killed 4000 of his men. To which we must here beg leave to add, that he took a great number of officers priforers in that decifive action; all which he refolved to put to the fword. One of them, going to the place of execution, said, he had a piece of justice to demand of Al Hojái; as he had reproved his general Abd alrahman for speaking with great acrimony against him. Al Hejāj asked him whether he could produce any one to attest this point of conduct? To which he replied, that one of his comrades, now condemned to die as well as himself, heard every thing that passed between him and Abd alrahman on this occasion. Al Hejaj, being satisfied with of the truth of the fact, asked the other why he did not behave in the same manner? This undaunted man answered him fiercely, I did not do it, because you are my enemy. Upon which, Al Hejáj gave both of them their lives; the one, in order to acknowledge the obligation he was under to him, and the other, for having confessed the truth with fo much frankness and courage. Hence it may feem to appear, that Al Hejaj was not quite void of generous fentiments, and that what fome of the Arabs termed in him enormous cruelties were, in reality, to be confidered only as wholfome feverities, adapted to the nature of the people he governed. This may possibly be farther evinced by an extemporary speech he once made to the Moslems under his inspection, after he had been taxed with barbarity by them; which was to the following effect: God, faid he, has at prefent given me the power over you; and, if I exercise it with some severity, don't imagine that you will find your selves in a better situation after my deceafe. You will always bereafter meet with at least as ill treatment from my fueceffors, as you have hitherto experienced from me. When I shall be dead, GoD will fend you another of his fervants, who may possibly execute his commands against you with greater severity than I have done. Would you have a printe fweet and moderate? Follow justice, and obey his orders. Your own conduct will be the principle and fource of the good or ill treatment you will receive at your governor's hands. The princes or his lieutenant, may justly be compared to a mirrour: all that you fee in the glafs is only the return of the objects you prefent to Nor can any piece be drawn more to the life than the portrait here given of the people of Irak by Al Hojaj, as fufficiently appears from the best Arab authors, who have already

THIS general, as he was hunting, being once separated from his retinue, found himself very thirsty in a solitary place, where an Arab was feeding his camels. As foon as Al Hejāj appeared, those animals were scared away; which made the Arab, then attentive to fomething else, lift up his head in a great passion, and say, Who is this with his fine cleaths that cemes here into the defart to fright my camels? the curse of Gon light upon him! Al Hejaj, without taking notice of what he had faid, made up to him, faluted him very civilly, and, after the Arab manner, wished him peace. But the other, instead of returning his falutation in proper terms, answered him roughly; telling him, that he neither wished him peace, nor any bleffing of God. Al Hejûj seemed not to understand him, and begged of him, with great humility, a little water to The Arab told him, that he might alight and help himself, for he was neither his companion nor his servant. Al Hejáj did as he bad him; and, after he had drunk, asked him whom he took to be the most noble and excellent of all men? The prophet sent by God, burst you! answered the Arab. And what think you of Ali? added Al Hejaj. His excellency cannot be sufficiently expressed by words, replied the other, Al Hejdi, continuing his discourse, then asked him what an opinion he entertained of Abd' almâlec? To which at first he made no answer; but, being pressed, he at last dropped some swords which seemed to imply, that he believed him to be a bad prince. Why so? answered Al Hejaj. Because, replied the Arab, be has fent us for a governor the most wicked man under the bequens. The words were scarce out of his mouth, when a bird flew over their heads, making at the same time a sort of noise, which the Arab had no sooner heard, than he looked stedfaftly upon Al Hejâj, and demanded of him who he was? Al Hejáj, not chusing to give him a direct answer, defired to know the reason of that question. Because, said the Arab, this bird assured me, that a company of people draws near, and that you probably are the chief of them. Al Hejaj's attendants then came up, and, by his order, carried the Arab along with him; who, the next day, was admitted to Al Hejaj's table, and commanded by him to eat. The Arab then faid his usual grace, God grant that the end of this meal may be as fortunate es the beginning. Whilst they were eating, Al Hejaj asked him if he remembered the discourse that had passed between them the day before. The Arab answered him immediately, Gon prosper you in every thing; but as for yesterday's secret, take care you do not divulge it to-day. That I most certainly shall, replied Al Hejaj; but you must chuse one of these two things, either to acknowledge me your master, and then I will retain you in my fervice; or elfe to be fent to the Khalif Abd'almalec Ebn Merwan, to whom I shall give an account of all that you have said of bim. The Arab, having heard Al Hejaj's proposal, answered him instantly, There is a third way you may take, which feems to me to be much better. What is that? faid Al Hejaj. Send me bome, replied the Arab, and let I and you never fee one another more. Upon which, Al Hejaj, not a little pleased to hear the poor man talk with fo much spirit and vivacity, made him a present of ten thousand dirhêms, and dismissed him, according to his defire. With regard to the language of birds, fuch as that mentioned here, the Arabs pretend, that several of their nation have all along understood this, even from Solomon's time. They affirm, that this science has been known amongst them eyer fince the reign of that prince, when Balkis, the queen of Sheba, or Saba, had a bird called Hudhud, that is, the hoop or lapwing, which the dispatched to Solemon on several occasions, and which was the messenger of their amours. We are told by Jallal'eddin, that Solomon, having notice of the embassy designed to be sent him by Bulkis, by means of the lapwing, even before the persons that composed it set out, ordered a large square to be inclosed with a wall built of gold and filver bricks, wherein he ranged his forces and attendants to receive them ?.

Kumeil, the son of Ziyâd, was a man of sine wit. He Rumeil lived in the time of Al Hejāja and did by no means approve of faved by his conduct. One day that governor ordered him to be brought bis with before him, and reproached him, because, in a certain garden, before some persons that he named, he had uttered several imprecations against him, some of which were to the following effect: The Lord blacken his face! that is, fill him with shame and consusion; and may his neck be cut off, and his blood shed! To which Kumeil, who had an exceeding ready wit, answered instantly, 'Tis true, I did speak these words in the garden you mention; but then I was under a vine-arbour, looking upon a bunch of grapes not yet ripe, and I wished that they would turn black soon, that they might be cut off, and made wine of. This ingenious explication so pleased Al Hejāj, that he sent Kumeil home, and re-established him in his savour b.

FRE former of those writers also relates, that this general Some far-was born shut up at the bottom; so that his parents sound it ther parnecessary to have him opened with surgeons instruments, lest ticulars a ftop should be put by this natural impediment to the exer-relating to cise of the animal functions. The latter of them informs us, bim. that he fell fick by eating dirt; which he afterwards abstained from, by the advice of Theodunus, an eminent physician, who was cotemporary with him. The same author adds, that he died of a phthisis, or confumption, which, for a confiderable time, deprived him of his natural rest. The dirt mentioned by this historian was a fort of medicinal clay, called by the Lutins Terra Lemnia, and by the Arabs Thin, and Thin Mekhtowm, Lutum, Lutum sigillatum, & Terra sigillata, being prescribed in several cases by the most eminent physicians. We are told by a writer of some note, that Al Hejaj was extremely magnificent in his entertainments; infomuch that he furnished, on some occasions, no less than a thousand tables. He also, acconding to the same author, sometimes made very valuable presents to his friends; it having been known, that certain of them received of him 1,000,000 dirhêms at once. Al Herái left behind him a fon, who erected a little principality, confifting of only seven small towns in Al Jebal, or the Persian Irâk; which gradually going to decay, a city was at last formed out of them all, called Kom. This town stands at almost an equal distance from Ispahan and Cazbin, and about twenty-one parafangs from Raya: Between this last place and Kom there is a frightful defart, in which there was formerly a very large and strong castle, called Gerdeshir; a particular description of which we meet with in Yakut. This city was raised out of the rains of the seven others, in the 203d year of the Hejra. Abd alrahmân, the son of Al Hejûj, having been defeated by his enemies, and his country ruined, the inhabitants of the feven original towns gradually deferted them, and their descendants built the city of Kom; which was divided into seven parts, that retained the names of those towns. The principal of these was called Kommedan, a name apparently formed of Kom. The city of Kom is at this day justly celebrated for its manufactures of filk, called in the Turkish and Persian languages Komash, in the same manner as velvet is denominated in the east Kat. sab, from the town of Katif, situated in the province of Babrein, on the Persian gulf, about two days journey from Abfa, where it is made. Abd'almogni Ali, a famous aftrologer, who left behind him an aftrological treatife, intituled, Ekthiarat, was a native of Kam, and from thence furnamed Al Komi, or Al Kommi. Abu Obeidah Mâmar Ebn Al Mothâni writ the life of Al Hejaj, under the title of Al Akbar Hejaj."

That author was a native of Bagbdad, and died in the 200th year of the Hejraf.

THE same year in which Al Hejs j died, that is, the 95th lems fill of the Hejra, Al Walid Ebn Abd'almalec banished Ali Ebn Abwillerious d'allab Ebn Al Abbas from Damascus to Henein, a valley which in Spain, lies about three miles from Mecca, towards Al Tâyef, where he begot twenty fons, The Khalif also ordered this Ali to receive seventy stripes, for meditating the murder of Salit. The Arabs gained this year a complete victory over the Goths in Spain, which paved the way to the absolute conquest of most of the provinces of that kingdom. Rederic, being informed, that the Moslems had landed a powerful army in Spain, and made terrible havock in several parts of his dominions, asfembled his whole force, and refolved to bring the enemy to a general action, that should determine his fate as well as that of his subjects. Coming up with them, therefore, at Ass. dona, he attacked them with fuch bravery, that, notwithstanding the Goths had been enervated by a long peace, the victory hung in suspence for eight whole days. The king himself, dressed in his royal robes, with a golden crown upon his head, in an ivory chariot, after the manner of the Gothic princes, appeared at the head of his army, and so animated his troops by his presence and valiant behaviour, that they really performed wonders; though at last the Arabs, being continually reinforced with fresh troops, forced them to give way, and even betake themselves to a precipitate slight. To this the fons of Vitize, according to some writers, not a little contributed. For, Roderie committing to their conduct the wings of the army, though they had already manifested their finister intentions towards him, they went over to the enemy in the heat of the action; upon which, a total rout immediately enfued. The Arabs purfued the flying Goths with so much ardour, that the greatest part of them were killed either in the battle or the pursuit. In this fatal engagement, which ended on Sunday the fifth day of July, according to some of the best Spanish historians, all the Gothie nobility were flain; so that all the Spaniards, except the Afturians and Cantabrians, who were the last that submitted to the Romans, were obliged, within a short time, gradually to receive the Moslem yoke. As for Rederic himself, it is not certainly known whether he was killed in the action, or survived the destruction of his army. Some affirm, that he fell in the battle; but others deny this. However, we are told for certain, that his horse Orelia, and ensigns of royalty, were found in a miry place, frequented by fwine and other filthy animals, tho' the enemy fought for his body in vain. With regard to count Julian, he is said to have soon met with the proper reward of his villainy; the Arabs, according to a proverb received amongst us, loving the treason, but hating the traitor. His wife they stoned to death, threw his son headlong from the top of the castle of Ceuta, and stript him of all his posfeffions. After which, according to some, he miserably expired in irons in a fort or citadel belonging to the territory of Osca; tho' others, it must be owned, are of a different opinion. Be this, however, as it will, the Arabs, who loft fixteen thousand men in the battle of Assidona, reduced the whole kingdom of Spain, except the provinces occupied by the Afturians and Cantabrians, as has been already observed, within the space of eight months, or, according to others, sourteen months, or, lastly, as others will have it, about two years. Nay, there are not wanting those who affert, that the Arabs spent five years in the conquest and intire reduction of the most considerable part of this region. Tarif, who now commanded in Spain, acquired an immense treasure, during this successful campaign; which not only inriched him, but likewise enabled him to reward all his officers, and even the troops themselves. for their bravery in this war. Nor did the Mostern commanders fail afterwards of amaffing prodigious riches, with which they were supplied by this most opulent country; tho' these, if we will believe a certain historian, soon occasioned such diffensions amongst them, and so incensed them one against another, that several of them came to violent deaths, infomuch that, within the space of twenty years, there were no less than fifteen Moslem princes, or governors, in Spain. The Arabs were this year likewise formidable in the eastern parts of the world. Majalmas, Moslema, or Moslem, an Arab general that we have formerly mentioned, made feveral incursions into the imperial territories, and ravaged the whole province of Galatia, carrying off with him many rich spoils, and a great number of prisoners, when he retired into the Khalif's dominions. The Greek emperor, being informed, that Al Walid was making vast preparations to attack him both by sea and land, sent some of his nobles, and, amongst the rest, Daniel Sinopensis, to treat of a peace with that prince. Amongst other instructions with which Daniel was charged, the emperor ordered him to procure as exact an account as possible of the force with which Al Walid proposed to invade the Greek empire. Upon his return from the Moslem court, that nobleman represented both the maval and military preparations of the Arabs against the Chri-Stians, flians, and particularly the capital city of the empire, as fo Augendous, that it would be next to impossible to oppose them. The emperor therefore finding, that the Khalif intended to lay siege to Constantinople, he caused a very large number of light thips to be built, the walls to be repaired, and, having filled the public granaries, ordered such of the citizens as had not laid up provisions for three years to depart the city. He likewife added fome new works to the place on the fea-fide. and disposed his military engines on the towers in such a manner as might enable him to give the enemy a proper reception, whenever they should think fit to appear. In the mean time, A Walid continued his warlike preparations with the utmost vigour, being determined to make himself master of Constantimple, if possible, in one campaign 8.

He was succeeded by Abd'almalic Ebn Rifa'a, who prefided over the Egyptians till the accession of Salimân Ebn Abd'almâlec Ebn Merwan to the Mossem throne. As for the Khalif Al Walid, he died this year, about the middle of the latter Jonada, and was buried at Danascus. He reigned about nine years and eight months; being at the time of his death, according to some, forty eight, or, as others will have at, forty-three, years of age. He was very tall, fwarthy, flatposed, and pitted with the small-pox. He had a large beard, with some grey hairs in it, was of a strong robust constitution, and a very choleric temper. He was subject to intemperate fallies of passion, being by no means capable of bridling his anger. According to Al Makin, he married fixty-three wives, the greatest part of whom he divorced; which, as that author fays, was attended with a very confiderable expence. He laid out large fums of money upon public buildings, fuch as the magmificent mosques at Damascus, Jerusalem, and Medina; all which were either erected or enlarged and beautified in his reign. This Khalif appointed Omar Ebn Abd alaziz his commandant of Medina, and was the first of the successors of Mahammed who founded an hospital for fick people, and a Carewansera, on public house of entertainment, for poor travellers and frangers. His fecretaries, who fucceeded one another in the order they are mentioned here, were Korrab Ebn Yezid, Kabida Ebn

The infeription of his seal was O. AL WALIB! you are to die, and to give an account of your actions. The first day of his Khalifat was Friday, and the last Saturday. He is said to have had some fkill in architecture, but to have been a very indifferent linguish. The accounts of the public treasury he ordered the clerks, or feoretaries, to write in Arabic, and not in Greek, as was the custom before his elevation to the Khalifat. Al Wai lid, as has been already observed, was more powerful than any of his predeceffors; having subjugated, according to the eaftern writers, Spain, Sardinia, Majorca, Minorca, part of Gallia Narbonensis, the vast province of Mawara Inahr, Little Bukhâria, or the kingdom of Kashgar, and Turkestan. He likewise, if we will believe those authors, rendered that part of India on this fide the Ganges tributary to him. The greatest part of the Moslem historians differ widely from those of Syris in their accounts of this prince. The latter represent him as the greatest Khalif of the house of Ommiyah; whereas the former have transmitted him down to posterity as naturally cruel and violent, of much the fame disposition with Pharash king of Egypt, called also Al Walid by some of the eastern writers. Khondemir, one of the principal of the Persian historians, tells us, that Katiba Ebn Mostem, Al Walid's governor of Khorefan, after he had passed the Jiban, advanced to Samarkand, where Magourek, the king, or Khan, of Mawara'lnahr, was that up, and laid fiege to that place; that, after having fuftained several very vigorous attacks, it surrendered to him by capitulation; the principal article of which was, that Magourek should pay the Khalif annually, by way of tribute, 2,000,000 dinars, and at the same time make him a present of 3000 slaves; and that, after he had possessed himself of the place, he ordered all the idols therein to be destroyed, and constructed in it one of the most superb mosques to be met with in all the Mostem empire .

He is fue- COLIMAN EBN ABD'ALMALEC, furnamed Abu Azub, fueceeded by ceeded his brother Al Walid, and was inaugurated the very bis brother day on which that Khalif died. His mother was Waladah. Solimân. the daughter of Al Abbâs Ebn Harbi Al Abbâsi. He was a prince of fine parts and furprizing eloquence, having been educated amongst his mother's relations in the defart. He redressed all grievances that had happened before his accession. put an end to all disorders, encouraged trade, and released all the prisoners in his extensive dominions, except such as had been incarcerated for capital crimes. In the 96th year of the Hejra, or the first of his reign, Katiba Ebn Mossem, the governor of Khorasan, rebelled against him; but the people of that country were fo far from joining with him in his defection, that they rushed upon him with one accord, cut him to pieces. and elected for their leader one Waki Ebn Abu Sawid, who presided over them till Soliman appointed Yezid Ebn Mohalleb Ebn Abu Safra his lieutenant of Khorasan. Yezid greatly extended the Moslem conquests on that side, reducing Taberistan and Jurjan, Georgiana, or Giurgiana, under the dominion of the Khalif. In this war he gained many glorious victories, ravaged the enemies territories, killed a vast number of the infidels, and imposed an annual tribute upon the rest. after, Solimân began to make the necessary dispositions for putting his troops in march against Constantinople, and appointed his brother Moslema to command in that expedition. Asamab Ebn Zeid Al Tannukhi collected the tribute at this time for Soliman in Egypt. Nothing very material passed this year in Spain. However, the Arabs, by the affistance of the Jews, surprized the city of Toledo on Palm-Sunday, which had re--turned from them to the enemy. Masa also, the presect of Africa, hearing of the great success of Tarif, and of the immense riches he had acquired, landed again with a large body of the Moslem troops in Spain, assumed to himself the spoils taken by that general from the Goths, and then in conjunction with him, notwithstanding the mutual hatred and animolities that subsisted between them, reduced Cafaraugusta, known at this time by the name of Saragofa, or Saragoffa, and several other towns. The inhabitants of those places the Arabs treated with cruelty enough; plundering and pillaging them all without distinction, and even putting many of them to the fword.

This Nilescope may possibly be still remaining, as that seen and described by the learned Dr. Shaw stands upon the point of an island that lies between Kairo and Geeza; which fituation exactly corresponds with that affigned Soliman's Nilometer by Eutychius and Al Makin. For a full and ample description of this column, we must beg leave to refer our curious readers to Dr. Shaw's observations in Egypt; where they will meet with the best and most entertaining account of it, that has hitherto been communicated to the world k.

THIS year, the Arabs rather lost than gained ground in Mossema Spain. Pelagius, or, as the Spaniards call him, Pelayo, the son begins bis of Fafila, or Favila, duke of Cantabria, was proclaimed king of march for the Afturians; and Garsias Ximenius, known amongst the Spa. Constanniards by the name of Garcia Ximenes, of Gothic extraction, tinople; founded a kingdom in the Pyrenean mountains, whither many of the Christians had fled from Saragosa and other towns of Arragon and Navarre, when they were taken by the Arabs. Nor could the Khalif's forces in Spain reduce these two new princes. The army fent against Pelayo returned, without having effected any thing, to Corduba; and that destined to act against Ximenes, who distinguished himself in several sharp actions with only a body of 600 horse, was not able to seize upon any part of his territories. On the contrary, the latter of these Christian monarchs advanced his frontiers into the enemy's country, and died after a reign of forty-two years. The first of them likewise reigned about nineteen years, as our readers will find more particularly related in the modern history of Spain. About this time, Moslema, who is called by Theophanes and Cedrenus Masalmas, began his march for Constantinople, with an army of 120,000 men, advanced first to Amorium in Phrygia, and afterwards to Pergamus in Mysia, which he surprized; and then took up his winter-quarters in the Leffer Asia. Theophanes seems to intimate, that either Soliman himself, or a general of the same name, commanded a body of the Moslem forces in this expedition; tho' not the least foundation for such a notion is to be met with in the ori-

Ebn Shohnah writes, that this prince was at Ramla, or Rama, when his brother died, from whence he went to Damascus as soon as he had received advice of that event, in order to take possession of the Khalifat; and that, after a short residence there, he commanded his troops to advance to Mari Dabek, near Aleppo, from whence his brother Moslema marched directly to Constantinople, that he might form the fiege of that important place. These are the most material transactions of the 97th year-of the Hejra, both according to the Christian and the Moslem historians 1.

THE next year, that is, the 98th of the Hejra, comfieges that mencing August 25th, 716, several remarkable events hap-capital. pened in those parts of the world, that were the theatres of the war between the Christians and the Moslems. The Chriflians of Spain, who submitted to pay an annual tribute to the Khalif, and chose to reside in the Moslem territories, were not disturbed either in the possession of their properties, or the free exercise of their religion. As they were intermixed, and in a manner incorporated, with the Arabs, they obtained on that account the name of Mozarabes; and the missal then in use amongst them, drawn up by St. Leander and St. Isidore, and which was followed by all the Christians of Spain till the time of Alphonsus VL was called the Mozarabic missal. This year. Mûsa and Tarif were recalled by Soliman, and not Al Walid. as we find afferted by some of the Spanish historians, to give an account of their conduct. Mula left his son Abd'alaziz behind him, to govern Spain in his absence, who married Egibon, Egilon, or Egilona, Roderic's wife, and fixed his residence at Seville, as has been already observed. As for Tarif, before his departure, he appointed Al Khaman, an excellent officer, to command the Moslem forces destined to act against Pelagius, whom he thought it a scandal to him not to have reduced. Al Khamân, before he proceeded directly to hostilities, sent Oppa, or Oppas, the archbishop of Seville, to prevail upon him, if possible, to take the oath of allegiance to the Khalif. This Oppa attempted, and had a conference with Pelagius, who had taken post with 1000 chosen men in a cave on mount Ausena, having disposed his other troops, on which he could not fo much depend, to the best advantage, upon the precipices of that mountain; but without effect, that prince being still determined to affert his independency against the Arabs. Al Khaman, therefore, finding pacific measures ineffectual, marched against him with a powerful army, but could not meet with an opportunity of attacking him before the following year. In the mean time, Moslema, having in vain waited for Leo's performance of certain engagements he had last year entered into with him, when he persuaded him to affume the purple, and promised to support him, left his winter quarters in the Leffer Asia, and refumed his march for Constantinople. Upon his arrival at Abydus, he made the neceffary dispositions for passing the Hellespont, and transporting his forces into Thrace; which having done, and fent orders to Soliman, the Kbalif's admiral, to appear with the fleet, he defeated the imperial army that covered Constantinople, made himself master of the enemy's camp, and caused the city to be invested on the 15th day of August. Moslema, or, as the Greek writers call him, Masalmas, having soon after opened the trenches in form before the city, and drawn a line of circumvallation round his camp, pushed on the siege with great vigour. On the 1st of September, Soliman, according to Theophanes, in pursuance of the orders he had received, appeared, with the Arab fleet, confisting of men of war of a monstrous fize, besides merchant-men and light vessels, amounting in all to about 1800 ships, before the town, in order to block it up by sea, and forward the operations of the land-forces. Twenty of the merchant-men, or transports, that, by reason of their heavy lading, failed flower than the rest, arriving a few days after the grand fleet, were set on fire by some fireships fent against them from the citadel, and reduced to ashes: which proved a very confiderable loss to the Arabs, as every one of them had 100 foldiers on board, armed with coats of mail; all which were either confumed by the flames, or swallowed up by the waves. This greatly animated the garison, and struck the enemy with terror and consternation. It likewise prevented an attack on the sea-side of the city. which the enemy proposed to have made with a great part of their forces the very day on which this action happened. The following winter was so severe in Thrace, that the ground was covered with the snow frozen upon it an hundred days; infomuch that almost all the enemy's horses, camels, and other beafts of burden, perished with the cold. They lost likewise a vast number of men by the inclemency of the season, and were reduced to great straits for want of provisions. They found themselves, therefore, incapable of making any considerable progress in the siege before the return of the spring; when two fleets, one of 800 ships, with a vast quantity of corn on board from Egypt, under the command of Sofian, and another of 360 merchant-men, or transports, laden with arms, baggage, and provisions, from Africa, under the conduct of Yezid, N 2 approached approached to their relief. But both those admirals having received intelligence of the fatal effects of the liquid or feafire, so called because it burnt under water, being the invention of one Callinicus, a native of Heliopolis in Egypt, that had destroyed the twenty transports above-mentioned, they were obliged for some time to stand off to sea. However, at last they ventured to draw nearer the city; but were soon, for the most part, confumed by the artificial fire discharged upon them from certain swift vessels and biremes, on board of which a proper quantity of it had been lodged for that purpofe. the land as well as the naval forces brought by those fleets, to reinforce the Moslem army incamped before Constantinople, and enable it to carry on the fiege of that capital with more vigour, were either drowned or reduced to ashes in this action; and the Greeks carried off with them all the enemy's baggage, money, and provisions, that had escaped the flames, triumphantly into the town. About the same time, a detachment of the imperial forces cut to pieces a body of the Arab troops, commanded by one Merdasan, that had ravaged the coast as far as Nicæa and Nicomedia; which cleared the opposite shore of the enemy's parties, and enabled the emperor's subjects to supply the belieged with necessaries from thence; the communication between Thrace and the neighbouring parts of Afia being now as open as before the commencement of the fiege. The fishing vessels likewise followed their occupation in the Bosporus and the Propontis, without any diffurbance from the Moslems; so that the city, at this juncture, enjoyed a plenty of every thing that was necessary for the support of human life. The Arabs, on the other hand, were so grievously distressed for want of provisions, that a famine ensued amongst them; which obliged them to feed upon horses, asses, and other unclean animals, that died of themselves; nay, upon human excrements, and even at last upon one another. This introduced the plague amongst them, which swept away an infinite number of men; and, to crown all their misfortunes, the Bulgarians attacked their camp, and put 22,000 of them to the fword. ever, the people of Constantinople, according to some of the Arab historians, were reduced to such straits, that they offered Mossema . large sum of money, if he would retire. They also intimate, that Leo outwitted Mostema, and deprived him, by one of not the most refined stratagems, both of his ships and provisions. Notwithstanding which, that general, expecting a reinforcement from Soliman, then at Mari Dabek, near Kinnifrin and Aleppo, obstinately persisted in his resolution to continue the siege m. SOME

SOME authors affirm, that Soliman began to build the city Soliman's of Ramla, or Rama, in the 98th year of the Hejra; but this son Ayub runs counter to what has been advanced by Ebn Shobnah, who dies. relates, that he was there at his brother's death, as we have already observed. It seems more probable, that he only fortified this city, in order to secure it from the infults of the Arabs of Irâk, who at this time made frequent incursions into Palestine. However, Solimân is faid by the Arab writers to have been the first who adorned Ramla with a fine palace, a stately mosque, a proper number of aqueducts, and other public buildings; which might not improbably have induced some to think, that . he was the founder of that city. This year died his fon Ayub, whom he had obliged the Moslems to acknowledge the, heir apparent to the crown; after which, he nominated Omar Ebn Abd'alaziz, a prince of exemplary piety, to succeed him. But this last event is more properly to be ranked amongst the transactions of the following year n..

THE 99th year of the Hejra, part of the 717th and 718th The Arabs of the Christian æra, proved very unsuccessful to the Mosems, meet with Al Khaman ascended mount Ausena at the head of a powerful bad success army, and attacked the cave on the summit of that mountain, in Spain. where Pelagius had posted himself with 1000 men, being the flower of his troops; but was repulsed with the loss of 20,000 men, according to some of the Spanish historians. This so animated the Christians under Pelagius, that they fallied out of the cave, fell upon the Arabs in their turn, and overthrew them with very great flaughter. Al Khaman himself was killed in the action, and Oppa taken prisoner; tho' it is not certainly known what afterwards became of him. As for the Arabs, who escaped the carnage on this occasion, they were either obliged to throw themselves down headlong from the precipices of the mountains, or fell into the hands of the Christians, who put them immediately to the sword. In the mean time, Tarif, arriving first at the Khalif's court, accused Mûsa of such enormous crimes, and supported with such convincing proofs his accufation, that the latter was not only ill received by Soliman, but likewise fined by him in a very large fum of money; which so affected him, that he soon after pined away with grief. One of the crimes laid to Músu's charge was, that he had secreted most of the riches acquired in Spain for his own use, and reserved but a small part of them for the Khalif; upon which, he was not only deprived of the honourable post to which he had been advanced. but likewise obliged him to pay down 2,000,000 dirbêms. And because Ayub, of whom we have spoken above, was related to Musa, the Khalif recalled him from Spain, and substituted Alabor, or Alabor, Ebn Atd'alrahman in his room. All which events are placed by the Spanish writers in the 97th year of the Heira; whereas, in truth and reality, they happened in the 90th of that æra; and consequently in the Khalifat of Soliman, and not of Al Walid, as those writers pretend. upon his arrival in Spain, being informed of the terrible havock made amongst the Arab troops by Pelagius, imputed this to the treachery of Julian, and the fons of Vitiza; whose effects he therefore confiscated, and afterwards put them all three to death. Others, however, affirm, that those traitors met with this fate before Musa's departure out of Spain. Be that as it will, the Moslem throne was occupied by Soliman, the brother of Al Walid, the 97th, 98th, and part of the 99th, years of the Hejra, as we certainly learn from the best of the Arab historians °.

THE Khalif's forces before Constantinople having been so weakened by fickness, desertion, the attack of the Bulgarians. the various affaults they had made, and the fallies of the garifon, that they despaired of taking the city either by storm or capitulation; Moslema, the Arab general, found himself andreturns at last obliged to raise the siege. The army, therefore, by his order, decamped, and returned into the Leffer Asia, in the 99th year of the Hejra, after having sustained an incredible loss. The foldiers, for a confiderable time, were forced to live upon hides, the roots and leaves of trees, the most noisome animals, their own excrements, and even some of their own dead bodies, as has been already observed, before they abandoned the enterprize in which they had been so long imbarked. Theophanes and Cedrenus relate, that the Arab fleet, with the shattered remains of the land-forces on board, set sail for the coast of Asia, on the 15th of August, the present year; and that, on this very day, that fleet was almost totally destroyed by a dreadful storm of thunder, lightning, and hail, and the artificial fire of the Greeks, ten ships only escaping the common destruction: in which, however, those writers are not supported by the concurrent testimony of any Moslem The calamities suffered by the inhabitants during the fiege, which continued, according to some, thirteen months, or, as others will have it, two years, or, lastly, if we will believe Abu'l-Faraj, two years and an half, are not to be described; 30,000 of them having perished with hunger, and the like number been swept away by the plague. As for the Arab troops, scarce any of them returned home, tho' the general himself seems to have arrived safe at the Moslem court; so that the Khalif must have lost near 120,000 men in this fatal expedition P.

THE same year, Solimân Ebn Abd'almâlec, emperor of the Solimân's faithful, on the 21st day of the month Safar, departed this death and life at Marj Dabek, in the district of Kinnisrin, to the inex-character, pressible regret of his subjects. He had so indeared himself to them, by releasing from their confinement all the prisoners in his dominions, and other acts of clemency, that they gave him the furname of Meftah Al Khair, or the key of goodness; by which it plainly appeared what a high regard they had for him. When he was on his death-bed, he fent for Raja, his Wazir, or Visir, and ordered him to write down on a piece of paper, that he had nominated Omar Ebn Abd'alaziz, his cousin-german, to succeed him, on condition, nevertheless, that Yezid Ebn Abd'almâlec, his brother, should, after that prince's decease, be called to the succession. This writing having been figned and sealed in form, Raja, by his command, affembled all the nobles and grandees of his court, and made them take an oath to recognize the authority of the per-The Moslem lords fon named Khal.f therein after his death. then, in pursuance of another order, came all to Soliman's bed's head, and confirmed in his presence, by word of mouth, what they had before obliged themselves by their own handwriting, as well as by oath, to perform. Omar Ebn Abd'alaziz, one of them, foon after meeting Raja, defired him to inform him who the Khalif designed for his successor; telling him he might safely do this, as he knew himself to be excluded from the succession, as he was perfectly easy in that matter, and as he should sincerely congratulate the new Khalif upon his nomination. But Raja, being a man of great prudence and discretion, begged to be excused from revealing that secret, reassembled the noblesse, as soon as the breath was out. of Soliman's body, and made them all, without exception, repeat the oath they had formerly taken: after the conclusion of which ceremony, he opened the paper wherein the successor's name was written, by Soliman's order, and immediately proclaimed Omar Ebn Abd alaziz emperor of the faithful. Solimân was forty-five, or, as others fay, thirty-nine, years old at the time of his death, and reigned two years and eight months, wanting only five days. As to his person, he was tall, of a fair complexion, had a black beard, and feemed to tread upon his heels. With regard to his disposition, he was mild and merciful, as appears from what has been already obferved of him, and a great lover of women. He died, according to some, of a pain in his side, or, as others will have it, of an indigestion. Nor is this to be wondered at, if what some of the Arab writers relate of him be true, viz. that he could eat three lambs roafted for breakfast, and afterwards dine'very heartily in public; or if, according to others, he used to devour no less than an hundred pounds weight of meat every day. However, an historian, followed by Al Makin, seems to intimate, that he lost his life by drinking a draught of milk, into which some poison had been infused, given him by an Arab, sent by his brother Yezid out of Palestine for that purpose. Which, if it be true, seems to imply, that this prince knew, or at least suspected, and was displeafed with, Soliman's manner of fettling the succession; as taking himself to have an incontestable right to the Khalifat, after his brother's decease. We are told by some of the eastern historians, that Jaafar Al Barmeki, one of Solimân's principal counsellors, advised him to coin money of a better allay, and a higher standard, than that struck in the reign of his father Abd'almâlec; so that the finer gold and filver money, ever current amongst the Moslems after this event, from this Jaafar received the name of Jaafarian. In confirmation of which article, it may be observed, that the writer of this history has a dirhêm, confisting of filver, sufficiently fine, struck at Cufa in the 134th year of the Hejra, being the 3d of Abu'l Abbas Al Saffab, the first Khalif of the house of Al Abbas, of which we shall give our readers hereafter a more particular account. That article will, however, perhaps, render fufpicious the antiquity of the dirhim above-mentioned, belonging to the university of Oxford, supposed to have been coined at Waset upon the Tigris about nine or ten years before the · elevation of Soliman to the Moslem throne (that also exhibits another mark of a later date) the filver of which is likewise sufficiently fine q.

THE Arab writers inform us, that Solimân had many Some other wives; and that one of these predicted his death not long be-particufore it happened. The first day of his Khâlisat was Sunday, and the last Friday. His successor, Omar Ebn Abd alaziz, said the suneral prayers over him, at the time of his interment. The inscription of his seal was, I believe in God our Saviour. Many particulars relating to him may be met with in the Persian writers, that have been wholly omitted by all the Arab historians.

SECT. XIV.

N obedience to Solimân's will, Omar Ebn Abd'alaziz was He is sueproclaimed Khalif the day on which his predecessor died, ceeded by that is, the 20th, or 21st, of the month Safar, in the 99th Omar year of the Hejra, answering to the month of February, in the Ebn Abyear of CHRIST 718. The Greek writers likewise make this d'alaziz. event to have happened about the fame time; fo that their authority, in the present case, supports the concurrent testimony of Al Makîn, Abu Jaafar Al Tabari, Abulfeda, Abul-Faraj, Ebn Arrabeb, Eutychius, and all the other best Arab historians. His mother Omm Asem was the daughter of As, the son of the Khalif Omar. He suppressed the solemn malediction pronounced by the Khalifs of the house of Ommiyah, after the conclusion of divine service, from the accession of Moâwiyah I. to the death of Soliman, against the name of Ali, and that of all his family; every member of which was curfed and excommunicated, during that interval, in all the mosques throughout the empire. Omar, according to Abu'l-Faraj, made a speech to the people from the pulpit, which he ascended immediately after his inauguration, on this occasion; wherein he endeayoured to inspire them with sentiments of piety and moderation; telling them, that he bore not the least ill-will to any Moslem; and that the wicked only had reason to be apprehenfive of meeting with any feverity from him. After which, he gave the robe he had on to the poor, and came down from the pulpit. But the abolition of this custom, however right in itself, by no means pleased many of his subjects; who, after the dismission of the assembly, cried out, The law is negletted! the law is negletted! He likewise caused fruits of various kinds to be distributed amongst his servants, being afraid of an affaffination. We are told by Kbendemir, that, as foon as Omar was faluted Khalif, the most beautiful and finest horses were brought him out of his predecessor's stables; all which he refused; and that, mounting the horse he usually rode upon, when a private person, he went directly to his own house; being unwilling to incommode, in any respect, the last Khalif's family, which then resided in the palace. Nor could he, according to that author, be prevailed upon to take possession of any of the apartments assigned him as Khalif, till Soliman's domestics and relations, shamed by his superior modesty, had withdrawn themselves from thence. However, notwithstanding his virtuous disposition, if we will believe the Greek historians, he persecuted the Christians this and the following year; putting to death those who persisted in the profession of their religion, and remitting the tribute of those who became converts to Mohammedism. He is also said to have written, about the same time, a letter to the emperor Lee, containing an exposition of his faith, in order to make a proselyte of that prince. About this time, that is, the 100th year of the Hejra, Alabor, or, as Roderic of Toledo calls him, Alabor, fent a body of troops to ravage Gallia Narbonensis, and the hither part of Spain, into which great numbers of the Christians had retired, where they committed dreadful devastations; and, according to the last-mentioned author, imposed an annual tribute upon those provinces, as well as some other parts of Spain that had not yet been plundered by the Arabs. Alabor also treated with extreme severity the Christians settled at Corduba, and even the Moslems themselves that first came into Spain; whom he oppressed with famine, imprisoned, and put to various kinds of tortures, to compel them to discover the treasures they were supposed to have concealed. Abd'alaziz, the son of Mûsa, who married Roderic's widow, and fixed his residence at Soville, is also said to have been affaffinated this year. It is likewise intimated by some of the Spanish historians, that, before the conclusion of it, there happened a very remarkable folar eclipfe, which continued three hours, and was visible all over Spain; during a confiderable part of which, the stars, as in the night, very clearly appeared .

THO' Omar did not distinguish himself in a military capa. Who discity, he discovered a most humane and benevolent disposition, covered on and a remarkable affection for the house of Ali, on several oc-several occasions. The suppression of the solemn malediction above-casions a mentioned was the first incontestable proof of this. The great afprincipal circumstances preparatory to, and attending, that fedien for unexpected event, have been related in the following manner the family by Khondemir, the Persian historian. Omar, having some of Ali. conversation with a Jew, said to him, amongst other things, Ask of me one day or other in public my daughter in marriage. This the Jew did, and was answered by the Khalif, How can such a thing be, since you and I are of different religions. To this the Jew replied, Did not Mohammed give bis daughter in marriage to Ali? The case there, said Omar, was quite different: for Ali was a Moslem, and has been the commander of the faithful. Why then, returned the Jew, do you curse him publickly in your mosques? Upon which, the Khalif, turning his face towards the principal of his courtiers then present, said to them, Answer this Jew. But finding them greatly embarraffed, and that they had no answer to make, he declared, that, for the future, that malediction should be suppressed; and that, in the room of it, there should be pronounced the following verse of the Korân: "Forgive us, LORD, our sins; " pardon likewise all our brethren, who make profession of 45 the same faith that we do ourselves." Ebn Shobnab relates, that the verse substituted in the room of the malediction was, "God commands us to observe justice, and do good." Which formula, however, according to that author, did not fully take place before the 100th year of the Hejra. That year likewise Omar constituted Ayub Ebn Serjabil governor of Egypt. This Khalif also, about the same time, as a mark of his regard for the race of Ali, ordered restitution to be made to his descendents of the territory of Fidak, given Ali by Mobammed, when he bestowed his daughter upon him in marriage; and appointed a particular receiver to collect the revenues of that district, and distribute them amongst those that deduced their origin from the children Ali had by Fâtema, from time to time, by equal portions. 'Tis no wonder, therefore, that many of the Moslems, at this juncture, should have declared openly, that the house of Al Abbas had more right to the Khalifat than that of Ommiyah; as being descended in a direct line from Abd almotalleb, the grandfather of Mohammed, as well as that of Ali himself, which had no other advantage over them, than that their great progenitor had espoused Fâtema, the daughter of the prophet. For, that the subjects of the Moslem em-

Omar Ebn Abd'alaziz's death. THE following year, being the 101st year of the Hejra, and commencing July 24th, 719, one Shûzib having revolted against Omar, under divers religious pretexts, the Khalif wrote to him, that, if his intention was only to reform religion and the state, whose interests he took to be inseparable, he might come to court, where they would concert together the most proper measures for settling all points according to his desire. Soon after Shazib received the Khalif's letter, he fent two deputies to represent to him, that he had no subject of complaint against his person, as he could not but acknowledge him to be a very just and equitable prince; but that since, by his own conduct, he had visibly condemned that of the Khalifs of his house and family, he ought to cause them to be cursed publickly in the mosques, as they had done to Ali and his posterity, during their respective reigns. The deputies having executed their master's orders, Omar answered them in the following terms: "As what you require of me relates to another world. and not to this, I should think myself guilty of a very er great fin, if I complied with your request. For, we do "not find, that God has commanded his prophet to curfe any one; nor are we authorized by his word to treat a perfon in that manner, on account of his wicked life; fince 66 Pharaoh himself, who, with so much impudence arrogated to himself divine honours, was never formally cursed for his 66 enormous crimes. Much less can I order a solemn malediction to be publickly pronounced against the house of Om-" miyab, my relations, who pray conftantly at the usual times, observe the stated fasts, and perform all the other religious duties of the Moslems." The deputies, not being able to make any reply to so obvious a truth, opened to him another of their griefs, and faid, "But, Sir, ought fo just and equitable a prince, as your majesty is, to leave his crown to an impious and abandoned fucceflor?" The Khalif told them, that fuch a case as this might possibly happen, and perhaps not; and that therefore they ought to leave to Providence the disposal of future events. To which they instantly replied, that "they knew Yezid Ebn Abd' almálec, who had been de-" clared his fuccessor, to be possessed of all the bad qualities that could be inherent in the most flagitious prince." At these words, Omar could not forbear shedding tears, and defired three days time to think of a proper answer to what on this occasion they had suggested to him. The members of the house of Ommiyab, having been apprized of the particulars of this conference between Omar and Shazib's deputies, were afraid left the Khalif should change the order of succesfion, and transfer the Khalifat to another family. For this reason, they resolved to dispatch him; and therefore bribed a flave to poison him; which villainous design was carried into execution this present year. He died the 25th of Rajeb, after a short reign of two years five months and fourteen days, being then either 33, 37, 39, or 40, years of age, and was interred in the monastery of St. Simeon, situated near the little town of Maharat, one of the dependencies of Hems; tho' his sepulchre was in the monastery of The Cow at Maarra Noomani, according to the common opinion. We must here beg leave to inform our readers, that Maarra Noomani, or Maarra Al Nooman, was a very large city of Syria, between Hamath and Aleppo, in the province of Hems, that derived its name from Al Nooman Ebn Bashir Al Sahabi, and had annexed to it a territory of a very confiderable extent. This district abounded with olives, figs, pistachos, and various other kinds of fruits. It stood near the river Kowaik, that washes the suburbs of Aleppo; and a little to the fouth of it there was formerly a fepulchre, in which fome of the Syrian Arabs ridiculously imagined the remains of Joshua, the son of Nun, to have been deposited; which might possibly have occasioned the vulgar error mentioned by Al Makin, relating to the fituation of the Khalif Omar Ebn Abd'alaziz's tomb. But, for a particular description of Maarra Al Nooman, or Marra Noomani, and its territory, we must refer our curious readers to the oriental geographers, who, in this point, will give them full and ample fatisfaction u.

THE Christians of Damascus being perfectly well acquainted A dispute with the mild and equitable disposition of this Khalif, com-between plained to him of the violence offered them by his predecessor the Chri-Al Walid, when he took from them by force the church of St. stians and John in that city; and at the same time shewed him the in-Moslems strument signed by Khâled Ebn Al Walid, when Damascus was at Dataken; by which the free exercise of their religion, and the masscus. possession of all their churches, was to be effectually secured to them and their posterity. They, therefore, humbly petitioned Omar Ebn Abdalazia, that the said church of St. John might, in consequence of that writing, be then restored to them. But the Khalif, apprehending that such a restitution might excite commotions amongst the Moslems, begged, that, in lieu of their church, they would accept of the fum of money that had been offered them by Al Walid on the fame occasion, namely, 40,000 dinars, and with it build a new church in some other part of the town. The Christians absolutely refuling this, they were told by Abu Edris Al Holwani, that. by virtue of the inftrument mentioned, they were, indeed, intituled to the possession of all their churches in that part of the city, which was taken by capitulation; but that all those in the other part, which was carried by florm, by right of conquest, belonged to the Moslems. In order, therefore, to settle this affair to the fatisfaction of both parties, he proposed, that the church of St. John, which the Khalif had ordered to be restored to them, upon their refusal of the money offered, should be ceded by the Christians to the Mosiems; and that, upon this condition, the former should remain in possession of all the churches in that part of the town, and the territory belonging to it, laid claim to by the latter. This, after much wrangling and altercation, was agreed to on both fides, and confirmed by Omar, who wrote out an instrument, or schedule, with his own hand, to prevent any future incroachments. But, notwithstanding the uprightness and integrity of the Khalif, this must be allowed to have been an iniquitous decision. For, as Khâled Ebn Al Walid, who took one part of Damascus sword in hand, granted by the aforesaid schedule, that he figned, and which was the result of the Kbalif's own particular decision, the possession of all the churches in that quarter to the Christians, and their posterity, through every future period of time; so the validity of this schedule ought not to have been denied, nor even called in question by any fucceeding Kbalif, or Moslem power, whatsoever w.

We are told by Mahammed Ebn Emir Khoandshah; that when the poison taken by Omar began to operate upon him, and he was very ill in bed, his friends represented to him, that he ought to make use of some remedy for the recovery of his health. But he told them, that he was so persectly resigned to the will of God, and so firmly persuaded of the satal and inevitable term of human life, that he would not so much as rub the tip of his ear with a little oil, in order to be cured of his present indisposition. The same author adds, that he was so extremely frugal, that he took no more than two dinars a day out of the royal treasury, for the subsistence of himself and his domestics; that he never wore any rich or sumptuous apparel; and that his Divan was generally held in a place but little illuminated, where he sat always upon the ground x.

As a farther instance of this Khalif's great humility, it has A further been observed by Abu'l Faraj, that when he was visited by instance of Moslema Ebn Abd almâlec, in his last sickness, he lay upon a bis great bed made of palm-tree leaves, supported by a pillow formed bumility of beafts skins, and covered with a common ordinary gar-and frument. His lips appeared flaccid and of a livid colour, and gality. he had on a dirty shirt. Moslema could not forbear blaming his fifter Fâtema, who was Omar's wife, for fuffering the emperor of the faithful to be exhibited to any person's view in so mean and fordid a condition. But, in order to justify her own conduct on this occasion, she assured Moslema, that the Khalif had never another shirt to put on; which, after thanks had been returned to God, for enduing fo great a prince with such a meek and humble disposition, drew tears from that general. This writer has farther remarked, that the daily expence of Omar Ebn Abd'alaziz did not amount to above two dirbêms 7.

ONE of the principal Moslem doctors, named Majūshūn, Majūfalling into a trance, and being looked upon as dead by all the shun's ofpeople about him, was accosted by an angel, that carried his fion. foul to the gate of the first heaven; which was immediately opened to them. From thence they continued their journey to the seventh heaven, where Mohammed is supposed to reside. Upon their entrance, the angel, that conducted Majushûn's foul thither, being asked who he had brought with him? anfwered, Maj#shûn. He is not, said another angel, to be admitted into this place, before the expiration of a certain period of time. The Moslem doctor, therefore, was reconducted to the planet from whence he came by his celestial guide. However, Majushûn informed his friends (for he himself, it feems, published this account of his pretended vision) that he had a transfient view of the inhabitants of the seventh heaven. and particularly of Mohammed, who had on each fide of him Abu Beer and Omar, and held Omar Ebn Abd'alaziz in his bosom, and between his arms. Majushûn, being surprized that the latter should have a more honourable situation assigned him in heaven than the former, asked the reason of this, and received for answer, that Abu Becr and Omar had been eminent for their justice and good works at a time when the Moslems were distinguished by their piety and zeal for the true religion; but that Omar Ebn Abd'alaziz surpassed them in this, that he possessed all their virtues in an age of injustice and

Omar's WITH regard to his person, Omar was swarthy, as most character. of the Arabs are, lean, had a handsome face, and in it the scar of a wound he had received from a wild beast in his younger years. Notwithstanding his youth, he had a considerable number of grey hairs, which probably made him appear fomething older than he really was. As to his disposition. he was extremely just, religious, and devout; and had fixed his mind, in a manner from his infancy, intirely upon the other world. He seems to have been the brightest ornament of the Moslems in that wicked and degenerate age. After his death, the house to which he used frequently to retire, being then shut up, was opened; the Arabs hoping to discover a confiderable treasure in it: but, upon examination, they found only there a close thick riding vest, that he sometimes wore, and a fort of rope or cord hung up, with which he now-andthen amused himself, after his spirits had been exhausted by long and fervent prayer. His fecretaries of state were Raja Ebn Yahya Al Kendi, Solimân's visir, and Ebn Abi Rakia; his judge, or Kâdi, Abd'allah Ebn Sa'id Al Ansali; the captain of his guards, Rawah Ebn Yezid Al Sakfaki; and his chamberlains, Hobaish and Raja, his servants. The inscription of his seal was, OMAR the son of ABD'ALAZIZ believes in The first day of his Khalifat was Saturday, and the last Friday. The reason why Soliman preserred him to his own children was, because they were too young to ascend the Moslem throne, as may be inferred from Abu'l-Faraj. The authors followed by Al Makin make his mother to have been the daughter of the fecond Khalif Omar; who, they fay, before his death, declared, that his daughter should bring forth a fon, who would fill the world with justice. Abu Sofian, and the furname usually applied to him Abu Khaled. Tis worthy observation, that the Arub historians have transmitted down to posterity the names of their emi erors mothers, in the same manner as some of the sacred writers have done those of the mothers of the kings of Judah and Israel. Nor is this to be wondered at; the customs of the Arubs, as well: as their phrases, proverbs, and manner of expression, having all along, in most particulars, agreed with those of the Hebrews, who slourished even in some of the earliest periods of the world.

As foon as Yezid Ebn Abd'almâlec came to the crown, he Mollema removed all the governors of provinces, who had been pro-reduces moted to their respective posts by his predecessor Omar; which the rebel undoubtedly excited several commotions in the empire. There, Yezid, however, were probably foon extinguished, as we fearce find and drives any mention made of them in history. But the rebellion of the Turks Yezid Ebn Al Mohalleb Ebn Abu Safra, which happened in the darking. year of the Hejra 101, created a good deal of trouble to the Khalif. Yeaid, knowing that this prince, by his ill qualities, had rendered himself extremely disagreeable to the Niestens, renounced his allegiance to him; and, having drawn together a strong body of troops at Bafra, advanced to Cufa, the capital of the Arabian Irak, where he met with a confiderable reinforcement. Yezid Ebn Abd'almâlec, being informed of Ebn 1 Moballeb's defection, fent his brother Moflema and Al Abids Ebn Al. Walid against him, at the head of a powerful army; who, coming up with the rebels, fell upon them with fuch fury, that they flew a great number of them upon the spot, and put the reft. to flight. Yezid Ebn Al Mohalleb himself having been killed. in the action, Moslema ordered his head to be cut off, and sent it immediately to the Khalf. However, Ebn Al Moballeb's fon Moawiyab, with some of his father's troops, made his escape to Hormuz, where the rebel Yexid had before built a fortress, that was deemed impregnable, in order to serve him for a retreat, in case any missortunes should happen to him. But his governor there refuling to open the gates to Modwiyah, he was purfued by the Khalif's generals, after several other successive deseats, as far as the Indus. The writers sollowed by Al Makin, however, give us a different account of Maitwis jab's motions. After his father had been overthrown, aecording to them, he fled with great precipitation to Wajet, where he found Adi Ebn Artah, the Khālif's governor of Basra, whom he ordered, with thirty-two of his men, to be put to the sword. From Wdset, if we will believe these authors, Moawiyab and his troops made the best of their way to Bafra, and afterwards endeavoured to reach Sindia; but, being overtaken by a body of the Khalif's forces, under the command of Halal Ebn Akbar Al Mazani, sent in pursuit of them by Moslema, they were all either cut to pieces or taken prisoners; and the latter being conducted to Damascus by the general's order, Yezid caused them all to be put to death. Moslema, for his eminent services, was appointed by the Khalif governor of Irak, and had the lieutenancy of Khorafan also conferred upon him : but, upon some disgust, as it should seem, he was soon deprived of both those posts, and succeeded in them by Omar Ebn Habira Al Fozari; tho', according to Aba'l-Faraj, Omar presided over Khorasan, as well as both the Persian and Ara-Dian Irûk, before the extinction of the late rebellion. Nor does it appear from that author, that Moslema had ever the dinection or management of affairs in any of those provinces. Omar, being fettled in his government, sent a body of the Mossem troops, under the conduct of Al Jarah Ebn Abd'allah, either to make an irruption into the Turkish territories, or to force the Turks to abandon the Mossem provinces. Al Jaran executed his orders with great bravery, made himself master of a fortress called Meltahar, or Meltahara, placed in Al Turk, or Turkestan, by Al Makin, and drove Ebn Haf, the Turkish Khân, or Khâkân, before him from place to place. But notwithstanding this, the Khan, having received a reinforcement, waited for Al Jarah at Ardebil, in the province of Aderbijan, engaged him there, and, after a vigorous action, intirely defeated him, putting both him and the greatest park of the troops he commanded to the fword. However, Mafkena, in a short time, advancing against Ebn Haf with another Arab army, at last came up with him, overthrew him in a pitched battle, and forced the enemy to abandon not only the province of Aderbijan, but every other part of the Khalif's dominions. About the same time, Yezid deprived Ayub Ebn Serjabil of the government of Egypt, to which honourable post he had been advanced by Omar Ebn Abd'alaziz, and sub-Aituted in his room Bafbar Ebn Safwan Al Calbi; who was afterwards fent to Africa, and succeeded by his brother, Handalah Ehn Safwan, in Egypt. But, upon his being deposed in the 104th year of the Hejra, Mohammed Ebn Abd almales Ebn Merwan, by the Khalif's appointment, assumed to himfelf the lieutenancy of that country. All which events, acsording to the eastern historians, were some of the transactions actions of the 101st, 102d, 103d, and 104th, years of the

WE find little faid of this Rhally by the Greek writers. Little faid Theophanes only observes, that Izid, the name he gives Yezid, of this succeeded Umar, or Omer, who reigned but two years and Khalis by four months; that this Inid, at the instigation of a Jew of the Greek Laudicea, who promifed him a reign of forty years, as a re-writers. ward for his implety, published an edice against images, injoining his fubjects to deftroy all those erected by the Christians in their churches throughout the Mostern empire; that he stew Izid, the fon of Mualab, that is, Yezid Ebn Al Mehalid, who had rebelled against him, and reduced the provinces he had seized upon to his obedience; and, lastly, that he died, after he had fat upon the Moslem throne about four years, before his infernal edict, relating to the destruction of images, could either be sufficiently promulged, or put in execution. Cedrenus speaks of him in much the same terms. Dismysus Tebnarensis relates, that this Khalif commanded his subjects to exterminate white dogs, white pigeons, white cocks, and, in fhort, all other animals of the fame colour; and that he issued the decree relating to this extermination in the year of our LORD 725. He also raised a persecution against the Chriflians, forbad a Christian to be admitted an evidence against a Moslem, and fixed the value or price of the latter at double that of the former, according to this author, the same year 4.

ABOUT the time of Yexid Ebn Moballeb's defection in Irât, Account of one Zama had the command of the Mossen forces in Spain, the Mossen introduced some innovations, relating to the disposition of sem afthe tribute exacted of the Christians in that country; which fairs in probably rendered him more unacceptable to many of the Arabs Spain duthere than even the worst of his predecessors. Zama. having ring this received orders to extend the Mossen conquests in those well Khalit's tern parts of the world, passed the Pyreness with a powerful reign army, took the city of Narbonne, the capital of Gallia Narbonness, and laid siege to Tolosa, at present known by the name of Tholosafe, or Toutouse. But here he was deserted by the good fortune that had hitherto attended him. Endo, called by some of the French writers count Eudes, general of the Franks, or the French, came to the relief of the belieged, attacked Zama in his camp, killed him and a great number of his men upon the spot, and forced the rest to abandon the siege. Not content. with this victory, he marched afterwards to Narbonne, retook that place, and of course obliged the enemy to retire out of the province to which it belonged. Yezid, having received advice of what had happened, sent Azam, or Adbam, Ebn Malec, with a body of troops, into Spain, to protect the Arab conquests there from the insults of the French, and enable the Mosems to repair the loss they had sustained. He reduced several fortified places in Spain, that had not before submitted to the Arabs, extended the tribute to be paid into the Kbalif's coffers, built the famous bridge at Corduba, in the 102d year of the Hejra, and was at last assassinated by his own people at Tortofa, Some of the Spanish writers make Zama and Azam to have been the same person; nor does such a notion appear to us at all improbable. Be that as it will, after the defeat and death of Zama, the Arabs chose one Abd'alrabman for their leader, who presided over them in Spain till the arrival of a new governor from the Moslem court. The Khalif, being informed of the murder of Azam, conflituted one Ambiza his lieutenant in Spain, about the year of the Hejra 103; who made several incursions upon the territories of the French; tho' he rather meditated, than was directly engaged in, a war against that people. Towards the conclufion of his government, he proposed to invade that part of the enemy's country bordering upon the frontiers of Spain: but foon after he had begun his march, in what manner we have not been told by any of the Spanish writers, a period was put to his days; and, before his death, he refigned to one Odra the command of the Moslem army destined to act against the French, which, after that unexpected event, immediately returned home. We must not forget to observe, that, during this interval, Pelagius wrested the city of Leon out of the hands of the Arabs, and gained several other very important advantages over them. This prince is faid to have been the first who took for his coat of arms a red lion in a white field, in which he was afterwards followed by his fuccessors in the kingdom of Leon. Some of the Spanish writers inform us, that, at this time, there were several Arab princes, or Emirs, in Spain; and that the chief of these, who was properly the Khalif's governor, or viceroy, had the title of the king of Corduba. But those writers have by no means given us, in their relations of what happened during the period immediately following the first settlement of the Arabs in Spain, a clear and distinct account either of their own or the Moslem

As Yezid Ebn Abd'almâlee was much addicted to pleasure, Yezid's even in the Khalifat of his brother Soliman, he then bought a death and finging girl, named Hababah, of whom he was passionately character. fond, for 4000 dinars; but Soliman, thinking this a disgrace to him, obliged him to part with her, and she was afterwards purchased by an Egyptian. Saada, Yezid's wife, being defirous of ingratiating herfelf in a more particular manner with her husband, once asked him, when he was Khalif, whether there was any thing in the world that he yet defired, after his elevation to the Moslem throne? He answered, Yes, Hababah. Upon which, Saada procured her for him; which wonderfully conciliated his affections to her. He had likewise another concubine, called Selamah, that he tenderly loved. Being in that part of Palestine, called Belad al Arden, or Belad al Ordonna, that is, the country, or plain, of Jordan, and diverting himself in a garden with Hababab, whom he loved to distraction, there; he was served at his collation with some of the most excellent fruits of that charming country. During this little repaft, he threw a grape at her, which she immediately took up, and put to her mouth, in order to eat it; but being too large, and passing across her throat, it stuck in the passage without a possibility of being removed; so that she lost her breath, and was suffocated in an instant. So we find this matter related by Khondemir. But the grape stuck some time in her gullet, and only occasioned a disorder that at last terminated in her death, according to Abu'l-Faraj. Be that as it will, this melancholy accident so affected Yezid, that he fell into an excess of grief, and was inconsolable for the loss of so amiable an object. Nay, the transport of his love and of his forrow carried him so far on this occasion, that he would not · fuffer the body of his deceased mistress to be interred for a week, according to Kbondemir, or three days, if we will believe Abu'l-Faraj. Nor would he have permitted it then to be inhumed, had it not been for the repeated instances of his domeffics, who could no longer bear the intolerable stink of the dead carcase. However, the sepulchre itself was not able to cure his frenzy. He ordered that to be opened, and the body to be exposed once more to his view. In fine, being incapable of moderating his grief, he survived his dear Hatalah only fifteen days; and, before he expired, he ordered his remains to be deposited in a grave near her tomb. This forrowful event happened in the 105th year of the Hejra, after he had reigned a little above four years. With regard to his person, he was a man of a fair complexion, had good features, and a round face. As for his character, he was extremely indolent, squandered away vast sums of money upon his wives, concubines, and diversions of various kinds, and was a flave to his paffions; as in some measure appears from what has been already observed, and might be farther confirmed by other stories related of him, were it in any manner necessary. His secretaries were successively Omar Ebn Habira. Ibrahim Ebn Habla, and Afama Ebn Zeid Al Selihi; his judges, or Kâdis, Abd alrehmân Al Haspabash and Saî'd Ebn Abu Wafad; the captain of his guards, Cuab Ebn Khâled Al Abafi; and his chamberlains, Sa'îd, his servant, and Khâled, his freed-He died, according to some of the eastern writers, in Palestine; or, as others will have it, at Harran in Mefopotamia, on the 23d day of the month Shaahan; being then about 29, 31, 33, or 37, (for so much do authors differ. amongst themselves) years of age. Nay, some historians write, that he died of a confumption, after he had declared his brother Hestam Ebn Abd almalec his successor, when he was about forty years of age. Yexid, a little before his death, sent one Yahya Ebn Saliman to take upon him the command of the Moslem forces in Spain. This Yabya was a person of great sagacity, discernment, and penetration; but had something of cruelty in his temper. However, he was a lover of justice. and obliged the Arubs to restore to the Christians all the effects of which they had unjustly deprived them in time of peace. It may not be improper to remark, that the name, or furname, Miramolin, or Amiramomen, frequently applied by the Spanish writers to the Khalifs, is only a corruption of the words Amire'l Mumenin, Amire'lmumenin, ox Emir ! Mume, nin, emperor of the believers. The most exact of the Mostern authors inform us, that the first day of Yexid's reign was Saturday, tho' in this they are not perfectly confishent with themselves, and the last Tuesday; and that the duration of his Khalifat was precisely four years and twenty-nine days f.

His uncle Yezid nominated Heshâm his successor a little before his death, on condition that his own fon Al Walid, after the demise of that prince, should be called to the succession. When Yezid died, Heshane was at Rusafa, a city in the neighbourhood of Rakka upon the Euphrates; but as foon as he received advice of his advancement to the Khalifat, he mounted his horse, and came directly to Damascus. Soon after his promotion, he appointed Kbaled Ebn Abd'allah Al Karli his lieutenant of Irak, and removed his brother, Mohammed Ebn Abd'abnôlec, from his gowernment of Egypt; substituting in his room his cousin, Hafan Ebn Yusef Ein Yahya, of the house of Ommiyah, who consinued in that post till the year of the Henra 108. Nothing very material happened in the Messen empire, an account of which has been handed down to us by the Arab historians. during the first year of Hesbam's reign &.

IT feems, however, to be intimated by Theophanes, that Hesham's Hesbam planted gardens and orchards, cultivated the fruitful arms not parts of his territories contiguous to the emperor's dominions, attended and built palaces in several of the provinces subjugated by the with sur-Arabs, in the 105th and the 106th years of the Heira. This cess writer likewise gives us to understand, that, about the same against the time, he undertook an expedition against the Greeks; but was Greeks. obliged to retire with shame, after he had lost a great number of men, into Syria. Cedranus is silent as to the Arab affairs, during the 106th year of the Mostern zera. Dionyshus Telmarenfis only observes, that Helham succeeded Yezid; and that the following year, or the 106th of the Hejra, Abib, bishop of Edessa, whose successor was named Constantine, departed this life. Nor does it appear, from the Spanish historians, that any thing remarkable, during the latter of those years, happened in Spain h.

Kehr, we must here beg leave to add, that the piece in view could not have been coined at Rufaka, or, as'tis called by Golius, Rafika; because that city was founded by Abu Jaafar Al Manfur, who did not mount the Mostern throne till the 136th year of the Hejra, and consequently did not exist 31 years before. Kehr must, therefore, have been mistaken, when he supposes, that the dirbam might have been struck at Rufaka, as well as Rusafa, in the year of the Heira 105; and that it is something difficult to determine to which of those cities it belongs. Russifa and Rusaka were both of them cities of Niesopotamia, seated at a small distance from Rakka, upon the eastern bank of the Euphrates. The former of them seems to be the Rhefeipha of Ptolemy ('Perxique) and is frequently mentioned by the Syriac writers h.

This affair is, however, differently related by Theophanes, who tells us, that the son of the Khakan invaded Armenia and Aderbijan with a powerful army, overthrew Garach, or Al Jarah, the Arab general, who pretended to oppose him, committed dreadful devastations in that province, and then returned home. But Dionysius Telmarensis, to whom we are indebted for the former relation, living at no great distance from the scene of action, not much above forty years after this campaign, and agreeing better with what we find recorded of the reign of Hesham by the Arab historians than the Greek writers, we shall not scruple to prefer his authority to that of Theophanes, whose inaccuracy with regard to the Mossem affairs has already been touched upon, in the point before us 1. Some of the French and Spanish authors maintain, that The Arabs Eudo, duke of Aquitain, called by the later French writers count Eudes, being about this time defeated and put to flight by Charles Martel, demanded affistance of the Arabs, who had possessed themselves of Spain, against that conqueror. The Moslems, continue the fame authors, accepting of this invitation, passed the Pyrenees, and advanced into Gascoign, to the number of 400,000 fouls, women, children, and slaves, included, under the command of one Abd'alrahman; imagining, that they should make themselves masters of that province without striking a stroke. They committed dreadful ravages in their march; pillaging every place, both facred and profane, without distinction, through which they moved. This expedition is, however, placed some years later by Roderic of Toledo, who seems to have reason on his side. also gives us to understand, that, about the year we are now upon, this prince's avarice occasioned commotions in several parts of the empire; which were not without great difficulty, and a very copious effusion of human blood, appealed m.

In the 110th year of the Hejra, beginning April 17th, defeated by 728, Mosema Ebn Abd' almalec advanced with a body of Arab troops to the coast of the Caspian sea, restored the fortifications of the aforefaid defile that had been destroyed by the Turks in their late irruption into Armenia, seized upon Derbent at the foot of mount Caucasus, together with the district belonging to it, and obliged the Turks to take an oath never to pals their own frontiers, in order to disturb the repose of the Moslem territories. But they soon violating that oath, and invading Armenia, he attacked them with fuch bravery, that he forced them to retire into their own dominions. After which, he appointed Merwan Ebn Mohammed governor of Armenia, and then returned into Syria. Theophanes, therefore, deserves little regard, when he intimates, that Moslema was worsted this year by the Turks in a general action, and, after having fustained a very great loss, obliged to fly into the Khalif's territories with the utmost precipitation. About this time, Abd'almâlec Ebn Refa'a succeeded Hafas Ebn Al Walid Al Hadrami in the government of Egypt. Some of the French and Spanish writers relate, that Eude, being vally terrified at the approach of such a multitude of Arabs, as that above-mentioned, who laid waste the country through which they marched, joined Gharles Martel with all his forces, and in conjunction with him, attacked the infidels this year near Tours with so much courage, that they were overthrown with incredible slaughter; no less than 375,000 of them, amongst whom were Abd'alrabman, the Arab general himself, and almost all the officers and persons of distinction that served under him, having been killed in the action. Of the Chriflians no more than 1500 are faid to have been missing, after the end of the engagement. This blow, however, was not given the Majlems, according to Roderic of Toledo, so early as the 110th year of the Hejra. this last particular without proper authority to support it, as not the least mention has been made of it by Eutychius, the author followed by him on this occasion; tho' he represents Cosmas as a maker of needles before his elevation to the patriarchate of Alexandria, and altogether illiterate; which feems to imply, that either a rich prefent, or a good round fum of money, was necessary to influence the Khalif in his favour. that as it will, the former author is most certainly mistaken, when he affirms this event to have happened in the third year of the Khalifat of Heshâm; since the latter, whom he pretends to have transcribed on this occasion, afferts, in express terms, that Colmas was advanced to the patriarchal dignity in the seventh year of that prince's reign. As this point of conduct in the Khalif, whatever was the motive to it, produced a fort of ecclesiastical revolution amongst the Christians in Egypt, we could not prevail upon ourselves to omit inserting an account of so remarkable a transaction, tho' not immediately relating to the history of the Arabs, here ..

ABOUT the same time, as we are told by an eastern writer, Hesbam ordered several towns and villages to be built on the wade Cap river Zaitun, which seems to have derived its name from Zaita, or Zeita, a town about fixty stadia, or furlongs, from Karkissa, or Kirkissa, the Cercusium, or Circessum, of the antients, in that part of Mesopotamia called by the Arabs Diyar Rab.a, or rather Diyar Modar, according to Golius. place has been taken notice of by Zosimus, the historian. Moslema Ebn Abd'almalec, the Khalif's brother, and general, is also said to have erected at this time some towns and castles on the river Beth-Calas; but with what view or defign the Arabs built any forts there, we are not told by any author. That general afterwards, with a body of the Moslem forces, made an irruption into Cappadocia, and reduced there a fortress of considerable strength. This year the Khalif's governor of Africa fent a new lieutenant, named Odoyfa, into Spain; who, being a person of great levity and inexperience, by no means proved acceptable to the Arabs there. Him, therefore, Heshâm thought fit soon to remove from that post, and to sub-Hitute Yaman Ebn Abinaza in his room. Yaman continued in his government about five months, and, after the expiration of that short term, was succeeded by one Autuman, or Othman, of whom we scarce find any thing said by the Arab historians; fo that nothing remarkable, through the whole course of this year, feems to have happened in Spain P.

THE next year, being the 112th year of the Hejra, the The Mosfirst day of which was March 26th, 730, Moslema, accord-lem afing to Theophanes, undertook an expedition against the Turks fairs in and penetrated to the coast of the Caspian sea; but, being in-Spain, timidated by the forces of the Khâkan, returned home, with-during the out effecting any thing. That this was really the case, we are year of the. more inclined to believe, from the silence of the Mossem writers Hejra in relation to any advantage gained by the Khalif's army this year in those parts, than from the authority of Theophanes, which, in fuch points as this, is frequently not to be depended upon. Autuman, or Othman, Hesham's lieutenant in Spain, was displaced, after he had remained at Corduba about four months, and fucceeded by Al Haytam Ebn Obeid. Against this new governor a conspiracy was soon formed; several of the principal Arabs. holding private cabals, in order to discover a proper method of deposing him. But they being seized, before they could carry their design into execution, he ordered some of them to be publickly whipt, and others to be beheaded. Amongst the former there was one Zath, or Zeid, an Arab of great eloquence and noble extraction; who, after he had been treated in a very ignominious manner, made his escape out of Spain. and took a journey to Damascus, where he and one Mahimen, another Moslem of distinction, gave the Khalif a full account of every thing that had happened. They also defired, that Al Haytam might be recalled, and Abd alrahman appointed king of Corduba, or governor of Spain, in his room; which Heshâm readily granted. Upon their arrival in Spain, Mahimen, who had been invested with full power and authority by the Khalif for that purpose, ordered Al Haytam to be publickly whipped, carried with his hands bound behind his back, and loaded with irons, upon an als, through the streets of Corduba, and then to be imprisoned for life. As for Abd alrabman, he not being then to be found, Mohammed Ebu Abdallah was constituted governor of Spain, and acted in that capacity about two months; at the end of which term, Abd'alrahmân himself appeared. The French annals, according to Joannes Vasaus, pretend, that, about this time, the Arabs, at the instigation of Hunold and Waifar, Eudo's sons, made another irruption into France, and penetrated as far as Burgundy with a numerous army, laying waste all the country through which they moved; but were driven again by Charles Martel into their own dominions, after they had loft a very considerable part of their troops. In the mean time, Pelagius still maintained himself in the possession of all the posts he had fo long occupied upon the Moslem frontiers; nor could he be dislodged from thence by all the efforts of the enemy q.

In the 113th year of the Hejra, Moslema marched at the troops gain head of a powerful army against the Kbakan, took several of that prince's towns, and carried off with him agreat number of his subjects into slavery, together with an immense quantity of plunder. Moawiyah, the Khalif's fon, also penetrated into Paphlagenia, took many of the Christians in that province prisoners, and returned home loaded with the spoils he acquired in this expedition. Soliman, another of Hesham's sons, advanced with a body of troops into another of the imperial provinces, reduced the castle of Palozanium, laid waste the neighbouring tract, defeated a Greek army that pretended to make head against him, and then returned home with inconsiderable loss. Some of the Arab writers affirm, that the Greek emperor himself, whom they call Constantine, was prefent in the action, and fell into the hands of Soliman; but, as Les Isaurus, or Isauricus, sat then upon the imperial throne, and was probably at Constantinople when that engagement happened, this last article merits not the least attention r.

His wife, who was count Eudo's daughter, and one of the most celebrated beauties of the age, fell into the hands of the victors, and was fent by Abd alrahman to Damascus, as a present to the Khalif. The death of Muniz, whose head was cut off, and brought to the governor, proved the total extinction of this rebellion; which, had Muniz been reinforced by a body of French troops, Eudo at first feeming to favour him, might have been attended with fatal consequences, both to Abd alrabman and all the Khal.f's other Subjects in Spain. It seems to be intinated by some of the Spanish writers, that the famous Pelagius, who had so signalized himself in his wars against the Arabs, died either this or the . following year s

That author affirms this glorious event to have happened in the 23d year of Leo's reign, about the 122d of the Hejra; but Dionysius Telmarensis seems to place it in or near the prefent year; and him we chuse to follow, for the reasons above affigued t.

This is the account of Abd'alrahman's fatal French expedition handed down to us by Roderic of Toledo; which, as our curious readers will at first fight perceive, differs not only in point of time, but likewise in feveral other particulars, from that already given. Some authors tell us, that the Moslem general took Avignon by surprize this campaign; and that it was afterwards retaken by the French. They also relate, that, the following year, Charles Martel overthrew the Arabs, marching, under the command of one of their generals, to the relief of Narbonne, then belieged by a body of the French forces, at Illiberis, with incredible flaughter; scarce any of them escaping into Spain. Which of these seemingly jarring relations approaches the nearest to truth, we shall not take upon us to determine, as a certain author, with very little judgment, has done; but leave it to our more fagacious and intelligent readers to chuse which of them they please w.

In the 116th year of the Hejra, Soliman Ebn Hesham ad-His arms vanced into the imperial Armenia, committed fome ravages successful there, and then returned into the Moslem territories. This against we learn from Theophanes, who gives us no account of any far-the Khather operations during the remainder of the campaign. How-kan. ever, there is some reason to believe, that, about this time, Affad Ebn Abd'allab, another of the Khalif's generals, gained feveral victories over the troops of the Kbakan, and killed that prince himself in single combat. We are told by an author often cited here, that Hesham sent one Abd'almalec, an Arab of noble extraction, in the 116th year of the Hejra, to preside over the Moslems in Spain; who, by his tyranny, rendered himself extremely disagreeable to them. He found himself incapable of protecting the country under his government from the infults of the French; and having once attempted to pass the Pyrenees, in order to take vengeance of that nation, he was driven back into the plains of Celtiberia with very great slaughter. Cedrenus feems to intimate, that Soliman Ebn Heshâm took many prisoners in his Armenian expedition, mentioned by Theophanes; but neither of those historians has handed down to us the particulars of that expedition y.

THE following year, Moâwiyah Ebn Heshâm made an ir-Moâwiruption into the imperial territories; but the Greeks soon as yah makes sembling a considerable force, he could not long maintain an inroad himself there. He, therefore, returned into Syria, without into the having effected any thing considerable; and, according to imperial Theophanes, in his march, was killed by a fall from his horse. Verrito-Nothing material happened this year in Spain, under Abd'alries. mâlec's oppressive administration there. We must not forget to observe, that Ali Ebn Abd'allah, the grandfather of Abu'l Abbâs Al Saffâh, the first Khalif of the house of Al Abbâs, died in the 117th year of the Hejra, in the 78th year of his age, and left two-and-twenty children behind him z.

After Hesham had dismissed Abd'almalec, to the great joy of the Arabs there, from the honourable post he had so unjustly enjoyed a confiderable time in Spain, he appointed one Ocha, or rather Ukba, to prefide over the Arabs of that province in his room. Okba, upon his arrival at Corduba, imprisoned his predecessor, loaded him with irons, and deprived of their offices all the judges and governors of cities, that owed to him their elevation. He meditated an expedition against the French, but was not able to carry his design into execution. Being arrived at Saragosa with his flect, he received advice from the coast of Africa, that the Moslems of Spain had an intention to depose him; upon which, he posted away with all possible celerity first to Corduba, and afterwards to the continent of Africa, where he affembled a body of troops, with which he returned to Spain, put the ringleaders of the projected revolt to death, and fettled himfelf once more in his former post. insirm, he resigned the government to his predecessor Abd'al-mâlec in the 124th year of the Hejra, with the unanimous approbation of all the Khalif's subjects in Spain, a little before he died. We must not forget to observe, that Abd'alrah-mân Ebn Khâled Ebn Mosassir Ebn Tabit Al Fahâmi was removed from the government of Egypt, after he had resided there about a year, and Handala Ebn Saswân Al Calbi substituted in his room b.

In the 120th year of the Hejra, Hesham removed Khâled Abnak. Al Karli from the lieutenancy of Irak, and appointed Yusef hayyal Ebn Omar Al Thakifi to preside over that province. It ap-constituted pears from some of the authors followed by Al Makin, that one patriarch Abnakhayyal was about this time constituted patriarch of Ale- of Alexandria, and afterwards persecuted by Abd'almalec Ebn Musa xandria. Ebn Nafr, originally a Jew, at that time governor of Egypt; who first imprisoned him, and then extorted from him a large fum of money, which he was obliged to beg of the Christians fettled in Egypt and some of the neighbouring provinces. But as the facts touched upon in this relation have not been mentioned by Eutychius, or Sa'id Ebn Batrik, who has written the fullest and most particular account of the affairs of the church of Alexandria, during this period, we will not take upon us to determine whether Al Makin, or rather the authors he followed, are absolutely to be depended upon in the point before us c.

THE following year, being the 121st of the Hejra, Zeid Zeid rebels Ebn Ali Ebn Hosein Ebn Ali Ebn Abu Tâleb assembled an against army of 14,000 men at Cûfa, and obliged the inhabitants of the Khathat city to take an oath of fidelity to him. But, upon the lif, and is approach of Yusef Ebn Omar, the governor of Basra, with a defeated body of troops to extinguish this rebellion, they asked him by Yusef what were his fentiments of Abu Becr and Omar? He re- Ebn plied, he had always entertained a good opinion of them. Omar, Upon which, they renounced their allegiance to him, rescinded their former oath, and immediately deserted him; so that he found himself obliged to stand an engagement with only fourteen men. He could not, therefore, forbear observing, that the Cûfans, by their infamous conduct on this occafion, had acted in character, and played over again the game of Hosein. In fine, Yusef easily defeated him, pierced his brain with an arrow, and consequently killed him upon the spot. Of the few Cufans that attended him, not one escaped.

After the end of the action, Yulef ordered his head to be cut off, and fent it to the Khalif; by whose command it was fixed upon one of the gates of Damascus. His body was deposited in a sepulchre the same night he died, out of which it was taken the next morning, and affixed to a cross or gibbet erected. for that purpose; but soon after reduced to ashes, by an express order of the Khalif. His son, in order to avoid meeting with the same sate, fled to Balkh, the metropolis of Khorasun, said to have been built by Loraspes, the father of Hydaspes, king of Persia, about the time that Nebuchadnezzar made himself master of Jerusalem. Some believe that it was built by Alexander the Great, and from him at first denominated Alexandria; but Golius, with a greater degree of probability, takes it to answer to the Bactra of the antients. that as it will, it is fituated in a very pleasant and fertile country, upon the Dehash, a fine river that passes by its suburbs, and, about twelve parasangs from the city, discharges itself. into the Oxus. Soon after the extinction of the preceding rebellion, Moslema Ebn Abd'almâlec, the Khalîf's brother, penetrated into the imperial territories, and made himself master of Catamana, a city of considerable note. Merwan Ebn Mohammed Ebn Merwán, surnamed Himar, subdued also this year Serir Al Dheheb, or rather Serir Al Theheb, that is, the throne of gold, a province situated between the Euxine and Caspian seas, in which the city of Derbent stands, called by the Turks Demir Capi, the iron gate; and imposed upon the Khân, or prince of that country, after he had plundered and pillaged the inhabitants of it, an annual tribute. Theophanes also seems to intimate, that Soliman Ebn Hesham conquered that tract this very year; which not a little supports what has been advanced on this head by the Arab historians d.

THE next year, being the 122d of the Hejra, Moslem Ebn Mosema Abd'almâlec Ebn Merwan, Heshâm's brother, departed this life. He was the greatest general of the age, and had distinguished himself on many occasions above the other Arab commanders, both by his courage and conduct. This year the Khalif ordered a bridge to be built over the Euphrates, the construction of which began on the Syrian bank of that river, opposite to the city of Callinicum in Mesopotamia e.

Which article, however, seems too repugnant to the civil and religious constitution of the Massems, as here before described, to be admitted as a certain and indubitable truth Either this or the following year, about the beginning of January, a remarkable comet, or blazing-star, is said to have appeared f.

THE next year, being the 124th year of the Hejra, Hesham A rebelsent Handala Ebn Safwan, the governor of Egypt, into Africa, lion in and appointed Hafas Ebn Al Walld to preside over the people of Africa. Egypt. In this post Hafas continued till the death of Heshâm; but was removed from it by Al Walid Ebn Yezid Ebn Abd'almâlec, the Khalîf's fuccessor, who substituted Isa Ebn Abi Atâ in his room. This year the bridge over the Tigris at Amida having received great damage from an inundation, Heshâm ordered it to be repaired, or rather rebuilt, and procured a confiderable number of architects, who met together at Amida for that purpose. The construction of this bridge was, however, a work of so much difficulty, that it was not finished before the Khalif's death. About the same time, according to Dionysius Telmarensis, most of the inhabitants of Edessa were destroyed by an inundation of the Defanes, which laid almost all the houses there under water; tho', if we will believe Theophanes, that inundation happened on the 28th day of the month Peritius, or February, in the preceding year. About the year we are now upon, if Roderic of Toledo may be attended to, there was a rebellion in the western part of Africa, which probably extended itself into Nigritia, or at least to the frontiers of that country, as the rebel army, according to him, confifted of Moors, some of whom, in their complexions and frizled hair, resembled the Negroes, or Blacks; and were men of such determined courage and resolution, that they defeated an army of 100,000 men fent against them by the Khalif. Nay, their general, flushed with this success, if that author may be credited, meditated the conquest of Spain; which excited even many of the Kbalif's subjects there to a revolt. However, : Abd'almâlec, Heshâm's governor of that province, proved superior to the rebels, drove a large body of them from Toledo, after they had belieged that city twenty-fix days, cut many of them to pieces, dispersed the rest, and obliged two other bodies of them to return to their duty. But, notwithstanding this, the rebel general, who had set up for himself in Africa, according to Roderic, still continued to affert his independency there. Nay, he not only bassed all the Khalif's efforts to seduce him, but likewise found himself in a condition to extend his frontiers. For, he sent an army, under the nommand of Abd'alrahmân, one of his generals, to invade Spain; which advanced to Corduba, reduced that place, took Abd'almâlec alive in it, and put him to a cruel death. Could this relation of Roderic be intirely depended upon, it would seem to imply, that, before the commencement of this rebellion, the Khalif's arms had penetrated into the interior part of Africa, and reduced at least a considerable part of the country of Gatalia, if not Nigritia, to the obedience of that powerful prince; tho' the time when that conquest was made has not been clearly pointed out to us by any of the Arab historians s.

Some of the Arab historians relate, that he was squint-eyed, and had a very ugly face; tho', according to others, that blemish, or defect, in him was not at all unbecoming. He tinged his beard with Al Henna and Al Catam, in the same manner as did the prophet himself, and his immediate successors. relation to his character, it has been observed by some of the eastern writers, that he governed without any prime minister; tho', being of a covetous and rapacious disposition, he greatly haraffed his subjects. He had many wardrobes, which cannot be faid of any of his predecessors, and therein an infinity of garments; tho', having fealed them all up, his successor Al Walid could not find a winding-sheet to wrap his body in after his decease, till a servant brought him one for that purpose. His secretaries of state were Sa'id Ebn Al Walid Al Abrash Al Calbi, his principal favourite, and Mohammed Ehn Abd'a!lah Ebn Harita; the captain of his guards Caab Ebn Hamed; his judge, or Kadi, Mohammed Ebn Safwan Al Jamjami; and his chamberlain Gâleb, his freed-man. ing divine fervice in the mosque, that he had no beast to carry him thither; the Khalif forbad him the use of either horse or camel for a whole year. One of his fubjects having been accused of drinking wine, as well as keeping finging girls, and playing on a lute, and brought before him with the instrument he was so much delighted with, the Khalif said, Beat that drum about the rascal's ears. Upon which, some of his domeftics beat the fellow with the lute, and he shed tears plentifully. Being then advised to take his punishment patiently, and not difgrace himself by weeping, he said, I weep not because I can treated in this manner, but because he so contemptusuffy calls my lute a drum. We are told by Theophanes, that Helbam permitted the Christians of Antioch to chuse for their patriarch, after they had been deprived of one forty years by the Arabs, Stephen, a mank of uncommon fanctity and aufterity of life, and one with whom he had contracted a particular intimacy; which they confidered as a bleffing derived to them immediately from heaven. This article, though passed over in silence by other Christian writers, has likewise been handed down to us by Cedrenus in almost the same terms. Hefbam has been represented by Kbondemir, who tells us, that he would not trust any person with the keys of his coffers in which his treasures were deposited, as one of the most avaricious princes that ever lived; which, indeed, perfectly agrees with the character given of him-by other historians. theless, he loved horses extremely, of which he kept at least 4000 in his stables. After his death, 700 coffers full of moveables, linen, and garments, or habits, of various kinds; amongst which 1000 breeches and 10,000 shirts were found, locked and fealed up with his proper feal. The diftemper of which he died was the quinley, according to Abu'l-Faraj. His body was interred at Rusafe, a city supposed to have been either founded or rebuilt by him; and, for that reason, in order to distinguish it from other places of the same name, some of the eastern writers stile it the Rusafa of Hesham. But, notwithstanding what may have been infinuated to the contrary by several of the Mostern authors, Rusafa could not have been founded by Hesham, as he resided there before he was Khalif, and consequently before he was capable of attempring such a foundation. However, he afterwards probably repaired and enlarged this city, which was the Rescipba ('Peraira) of Ptolemy, as has been remarked above, and is frequently mentioned by the Syriac writers. It has been already observed, that Constantine, surnamed Copronymus, Leo Isauricus's son, was attacked, defeated, and taken prisoner, according to the authors followed by Al Makin, by one of He-P 4

We must beg leave farther to remark, that Abu Abd'allah Mohammed Ebn Sirin, who wrote a treatise concerning the interpretation of dreams, upon the principles of the book composed by Abu Ishâk Al Kermâni, flourished in the reign of this prince; and that Hesham had two small lordships, called Al Haba and Al Mara, in the district of Rakka, that brought him in an annual revenue of 10,000 dirhêms h.

He was furnamed Abu'l Abbas, and proclaimed Khalif the very day that his uncle Hesham died; being then about forty years of age. His mother Omm Al Hejâj was the daughter of Mohammed Ebn Yusef Ebn Al Hakem Ebn Abu Okail Al Thakifi. He had been treated with great kindness, and even marks of distinction, by Hesham, till he had totally given himself up to a most dissolute course of life. But at last, by spending his time in drunkenness, and discovering an absolute difregard for all the religious observances and institutions of the Moslems, he incurred the displeasure of that prince; who, finding his nephew's life to be little better than one continued scene of debauchery, first reproved him for the enormities he was guilty of, and then, upon his remaining still incor-ceffes, and abandoned himself to all forts of debaucheries. Upon the arrival of the aforesaid courier, he immediately issued an order to those who presided over Hesham's treasures, which were immense, to secure every thing for his use: upon which, Ayyad, Al Walid's fecretary, being released out of the prison where he had been confined by Hesham, affixed the new Khalif's feal to all the doors of the treasuries, and would not fuffer any person to approach them before his master had taken upon himself the government. Hence, according to Abu'l-Faraj, it came to pass, that Gâleb, Heshâm's freed-man, was obliged to wrap up that prince's corple in a winding-sheet, nothing better being at that time to be found. Al Walid is said to have treated his predecessor's friends and domestics with extreme severity; telling them, that this was the very fame treatment he and his adherents had met with from their master. The lame and the blind of Damascus he cloathed and supplied with plenty of provisions, and distributed a vast quantity of perfumes and costly apparel amongst the women of that city, foon after his accession. In fine, he was prodigal to a surprizing degree; never resuling any favour to a person who put up a petition to him. Having increased with a tenth part the pay of all the troops within his vast and most extensive dominions, he wonderfully conciliated the affections of the foldiery to him; so that he easily prevailed upon them, and of course the whole body of his subjects, to agree to the fettlement of the fuccession upon his two fons Al Hakem and Othman, in such a manner that the survivor was destined, after the death of the other, to ascend the Moslem throne. It appears from the eastern writers, that Yahya Ebn Zeid Ebn Ali Ebn Hosein, who, after his father's death, had made his escape to Balkh, the metropolis of Khorasan, was defeated and put to the sword by a body of Al Walid's troops at Jurjan, Jurjana, or Georgiana, in the 125th year of the Hejra, not long after Hesham's death. The body of this Imâm (for so he is called by the followers of Ali) was first affixed to a gibbet, or cross, and afterwards reduced to ashes, which were thrown into the Euphrates, according to Abu'l-Faraj. But this last particular seems to be a mistake, as the city of Georgiana, the metropolis of a province of the same name, is said by some to belong to Khorssan, by others to Taberiflan, and by others to Khowarazm, not far from the coast of the Caspian sea, and consequently at a very considerable distance from the Euphrates. This year, that is, the 125th of the Hejra, the repose of the Arab dominions in Spain, according to Roderic of Toledo, was disturbed by civil diffensions. Al Walid sent one Abu'l Katar to take upon himself the government of that province; but he was oprofed by the Dig tizeg Arab DOG C

Arabs there, under the conduct of Ismael and Toban, two of their countrymen, who at last found an opportunity of cutting him off: after which event, Toban was unanimously declared the commander in chief of the Moslems in Spain. The fame year the Khalif's forces made an irruption into the imperial territories, where they committed dreadful depredations, and carried off with them an incredible number of Christians prisoners. About the same time, the emperor Constantine, Gurnamed Copronymus, Sent Andreas Spatharius his embassador to Damascus, to sollicit succours of Al Walid; and Artabasdus, his competitor, dispatched Gregorius Logotheta, as his minifter, on the same occasion, to the Khalif's court. It has been remarked by Theophanes, that Peter, the metropolitan of Damafeus, had his tongue cut out, for reflecting upon the Mohammedan tenets, by Al Walid's order, and was afterwards banished to Yaman; as also, that both he and another Chri-Itian of the same name, at Maiuma in Palestine, suffered martyrdom the same year i.

In order to which, they chose Yezid, the son of Al Wa-#d I. his cousin-german, for their leader, and inaugurated him Khalif. Yezid was no fooner placed on the throne, than he affembled a body of troops, and marched against Al Walid, who then refided in the territory of Boheira, at a small distance from Damascus. The mutineers easily dispersed the Khalif's forces, and befieged him in his palace. At their first appearance before the gates, he expostulated with them, and reproached them with ingratitude; telling them, that "he had eased them of their taxes, relieved their needy, and been more generous to them than any of his predecessors." After which, ten of the most resolute of them forcing their way into the palace, Waja Al Fanin, their leader, or, according to others, Abd'allah Ebn Abd'almalec, or, lastly, as others will have it, Wahmal Eln Al Walid, dispatched him with very great ease; he not attempting to make the least resistance. After his death, one of his hands and his head were cut off, carried in triumph thro' the streets of Damascus, and at last affixed to one of the gates of that city. The neral prayers were faid over him by Ibrabim Ebn Al-Walld, at the time of his interment, in the usual manner. His two fons, Al Hakem and Othman, surnamed the Rams, were immediately imprisoned, as soon as Yezid had communicated to the Moslems the news of his affaffination. With regard to his person, Al Walid was of a middle stature. had a handsome face, tho' his hair began to grow grey, and a fair complexion. He was of a very wicked disposition, being extremely addicted to gaming, drunkenness, and every species of fenfuality. He kept company only with the younger and more abandoned part of hissubjects. He ravished a girl in one of his drunken fits, and afterwards obliged her to repeat some prayers to the multitude, with a veil over her face. He is likewife faid to have carried wine and dogs with him to Mecca, being vastly fond of hunting, and to have ordered an iron tomb to be made for him, which he proposed to have placed in a certain part of the Caaba. Notwithstanding his life was one continued scene of debauchery, he had quick parts, and was a tolerable good poet; tho' he exercised his genius chiefly on the most obscene and lassivious subjects. A specimen of his poetical performances has been preserved by Al Makin; who informs us, that he ordered Ma'bad, a singer in favour with him, to repeat two or three verses, and then precipitated himself thrice into a fort of bason, or reservoir, formed of wine and water for that purpose; which proved a great diminution of his authority, and paved the way to his destruction. Eutychius represents him as a person of considerable eloquence, though this did not turn out of the least advantage either to himself or his subjects. To his other enormous crimes he added that of gluttony, according to Al Makin. He was affassinated towards the close of the latter Jomada, after he had reigned a year and three months, being then about forty-two years of age. He had thirteen children, some of which were boys, and others girls. His secretary of state was Al Abbas Ebn Mostema; his judge, or Kadi, Mohammed Mobammed Ebn Safwân Al Jamjami; the captain of his guards Abd'alrahmân Ebn Homaid Al Calbi; and his chamberlain Katri, his freed-man. The first day of his reign was Thursday; and the inscription of his seal was, O WALID, fear death! The untimely end of this Khalîs proved a mortal wound to the house of Omniyah, and of course not a little contributed to the advancement of the family of Al Abbâs to the Moslem throne. Al Walîd is farther said, by the Persian historians, to have been so impious a prince, that he tore to pieces, and trod under soot, several copies of the Korân k.

SECT. XVIII.

He is fue. TEZID, the fon of Al Walid I. who succeeded Al Walid II. I in the Khalifat, was, according to Abu'l-Faraj, a just and ceeded by Yezid, the virtuous prince. He was generally furnamed Abu Khâled, fon of Al and sometimes, by way of derision, Al Nakes, the diminisher, Walîd I. 🕟 and Ebn Al Nakes, the fon of the diminisher, or the son of the diminished, because he found himself obliged, by the emptiness of his coffers, to diminish the pay that had been allowed the foldiery by the Khalifs. His mother was Mah Afrid, or Shahferend, according to the Arab historians, the daughter of Firûz, the son of Yazdejerd. He became, therefore, sovereign of Persia by hereditary right; and was so far from thinking himself above claiming the title derived to him from 'his mother, even after he was Khalîf, that he constantly stiled himself the son of Khosrû, king of Persia, the descendant of the Khalif Merwan, and a prince amongst whose ancestors, of the mother's fide, were the Roman emperor and the Khâkân. Soon after his inauguration, he caused the Moslems to acknowledge his brother Ibrahim the heir apparent of the crown, and, after him, the succession legally to devolve upon Abd'alaziz Ebn Al Hejāj Ebn Abd'almâlec; and then obliged them to take the oath of allegiance, or fidelity, to those princes. Upon the divulgation of the news of Al Walid's violent death in the provinces, great commotions happened there. The people of Hems demanded the blood of the Khalif, or, in other words, infifted that vengeance should be taken of his murderers for the effusion of that blood. To extinguish this rebellion, Yezid fent an army against them; which they soon defeated, and put 300 of his men to the sword. Solimân Ebn Hesbâm, who had been loaded with irons, made an irruption into the district of Al Maarra Al Nooman, or Maarra Nomani, ravaged it, and then advanced to Damascus. The people of Palestine rose. against their governor, and killed him. During these troubles, Yezid removed Yusef Ebn Omar from the lieutenancy of Irâk, and substituted Manjur Ebn Jambur in his room. About the fame time, Merwan Ebn Mohammed, furnamed Himar, rebelled against Yezid in Armenia; giving out, that his design was to revenge the death of Al Walid. He affembled a very confiderable force, but was pacified by Yezid, who conferred upon him the government of Mesopotamia, Mawsel, Armenia, and Aderbijan, on condition that he should take the oath of allegiance to him. The Greek writers feem to intimate, that he was a friend to the family of Al Walid II. and defirous of taking the sons of that Khalif under his protection; which is likewise confirmed by some of the Arab historians. We are told by Theophanes and Cedrenus, that a comet appeared in the northern part of the hemisphere towards the close of the Khalifat of Al Walid; and that the people seated on the coast of the Caspian sea were greatly alarmed by several violent shocks of an earthquake about the same time. It cannot be inferred from Roderic of Toledo, that any thing remarkable happened, during the reign of Yezid Ebn Al Walid Ebn Abd'almâlec, in Spain 1.

Soon after the conclusion of the pacification between the Yezid Khalif and Merwan Ebn Mohammed, surnamed Himar, at dies of the E' in in Mesopotamia, the former died of the plague at Da-plague, mascus, on Wednesday the 18th of the month Dhu'lhajja, in the after he 126th year of the Hejra, after he had reigned five or six months, had reignand was, at the time of his death, forty, or, as others say, forty-ed six, years of age. His funeral service was said by Ibrahim Ebn months. Al Walid his brother, who succeeded him. As to his person, he was of a thin habit of body, a moderate stature, and a swarthy complexion. His mustaches, or whiskers, were not so thick and large as those of the Arabs generally are. With regard to his disposition, he is said to have been oftentatious, eloquent, and proud. He was, however, after his elevation to the Mossem throne, looked upon as an honest, just, and good-natured prince. Some, therefore, imagine, that they are denominated Kadarians, because they deny Al Kadr, or God's absolute decree; the' others, thinking it not so proper to affix a name to a sect from a doctrine which they combat, will have it to come from Kadr, or Kedrat, i. e. power, because they affert man's power to act freely. Some pretend, that the Kadarians are the Magians of the Moslems, as admitting a good principle, viz. God, and an evil one, viz man; and that the first author of this sect was Mâbad Ebn Khâled Al Johni, who was put to death by the famous Al Hejāj at Basra m.

WE are told by Al Makin, that the body of Yezid, which, ther partie as well as that of his predecessor A Walid, seems to have been culars re- buried at Damascus, was dug up, and affixed to a cross, or gibbet, by order of Merwan Ebn Mohammed, surnamed Himar, the last Khalif of the house of Ommiyah, after he had ascended the Moslem throne. Yezid's secretary of state was Tâbit Elm Solimân; his judge, or Kâdi, Othmân Ebn Omar Ebn Mûsa Al Timi; the captain of his guards, Yezid Ebn Al Shammakh Al Lakhmi; and his chamberlain, his servant, Fatan. The first day of his reign was Friday, and the last Wednesday. The inscription of his seal was, O YEZID, perfift in that which is right! The Greek writers inform us, that he was furnamed Leipsos, or diminished; which pretty nearly corresponds with the Arabic Nakes, or Al Nakes, a nickname sometimes given him by the Moslems. We must not forget to observe, that Ebn Arraheb and Abu'l Walid, as weil as Eutychius, or Ebn Batrik, and Abu'l-Faraj, affert Al Walid II. to have reigned precisely one year and three months. It appears from Dionysius Telmarensis, that Yezid, who succeeded him, his brothers Ibrahim and Abbas, together with Abd'alaziz Ebn Al Hejaj Ebn Abd'almâlec, contrived and effected the destruction of that Khalif; and that he was assassinated at the city of Core. Dionysius likewise relates, that Yezid fat fix whole months upon the Mosem throne. It may be inferred from Abu'l-Faraj, that the friends of the house of Al Abbas, at Merû in Khorasan, began to put themselves in motion this year h. SECT.

His reign was so short, that it has scarce been mentioned by Eutychius; nor have Dionysius Telmarensis and Theophanes taken any sarther notice of him, than barely to observe, that he succeeded his brother Yezid. Bashar and Masrur Ebn Al Walid, who then commanded the Khalif's forces at Kinnifrin, being apprized of Merwan's approach, advanced at the head of their troops to give him battle; but they were deferted by their men, who went over in a body to the enemy, and delivered up their generals into Merwan's. hands. Bashar and Masrûr were therefore thrown into prifon, and there for some time straitly confined; after which, Merwan advanced to Hems, the inhabitants of which city immediately took the oath of allegiance to him. Here he reinforced his army with fuch an additional number of troops, that he found it to confift of 80,000 effective men. With this force he marched against Solimán Ebn Heshâm, Ibrahim's general, who was in motion with an army of 120,000 men. As soon as the two armies came in fight, Merwan invited the Khalif's forces to join him, in order to take vengeance of the murderers of Al Walld II. But this they refusing to do, a fierce and bloody conflict enfued; in which Soliman was overthrown, Merwan took many prisoners likewise in this decisive action; all which he released, upon their taking the oath of fidelity to Al Hakem and Othman, Al Walid's fons, who had remained in a state of confinement ever fince their father had met with his tragical fate, at Damascus. But this, in reality, proved not of the least service to those unfortunate princes. For, Solimân being well affured of Merwan's intention to fix one of them upon the Moslem throne, he no sooner arrived at Damascus, than he and Ibrahim ordered both of them to be put to death; after which, he plundered the imperial treasury, and then, notwithstanding the measures concerted to intercept him, made his escape. However, Al Hakem and Othman, foreseeing what would happen to them, before their deaths, took care to transfer their right to Merwan, and declared to their fellow-prisoner Abu Mohammed Al Sheibani, that, in case they should be destroyed, Merwan ought to be considered by all the Moslems as lawful Khalif and Imam. Soon after Soliman's departure, the citizens of Damascus opened their gates to Merwan, who caused the bodies of the two young princes to be decently interred, and was faluted Khalif by Abu Mohammed Al Sheibani, now released from his confinement, in consequence of the declaration that to him had been formerly made. Ibrahim Ebn Al Walid, the deposed Khalif, and all the people of Syria, at the fame time recognized his authority; so that there was no person in the empire capable of disputing his title, or in any respect of standing in competition with him P.

As Ibrahim so readily acknowledged Merwan emperor of the Moslems, he survived this revolution, and lived to the year of the Hejra 132; when, as some say, he was assassinated by lution, and one Na an; or, according to others, was drowned; or, lastly, as others will have it, was murdered by Merwan's son, who is faid afterwards to have affixed his body to a gibbet, or cross; so that we have no certain account of the circumstances attending the death of this prince. With regard to his person. he had small whiskers, or mustaches, not unlike those of his predecessor Yezid, and two pretty remarkable locks of curled hair. He was, according to the authors followed by Al Makin, of a stupid and imprudent disposition. His secretary of state was Dukas Ebn Sarah Al Lakhmi; his judge Othman Ebn Omar Al Timi; and his chamberlain, Katri, Al Walid's fervant. The inscription of his seal was, I trust in the living God. He reigned, according to Al Makin and Abu'l-Faraj, only fixty-nine or seventy days; so that, by some writers, he is not ranked amongst the Khalis, or Mostern emperors, as has been already observed. The first day of his Khalisat was Thursday, and the last Tuesday. We are told by Ebn Shohnah, that this Ibrahim was surnamed Al Makhli, or the deposed. He has likewise been mentioned by Khondemir, as a person intirely reduced to a private station. Another of the Persian historians relates, that he was cut off about three months after he was driven from the throne; tho', in our opinion, a greater degree of credit is due to Abu Jaafar Al Tabari, who extends his life, as has been hinted above, to the 132d year of the Hejra q.

This Khalif was furnamed Abu Aba almalec, and denominated, from his undaunted courage, by some of his subjects, Himar Al Jezi-rah, i. e. the ass of Mesopotamia, or the warlike ass; the affes of that country being, in his days, remarkable for their unparalleled fortitude and intrepidity. The people of Hems rebel against

THE same year, that is, the 127th of the Hejra, the people of Hems rebelled against Merwan; who marched against them at the head of a powerful army. Upon his arrival before the town, he defired to know what could excite them to Merwan. such a defection, and summoned them to surrender. In answer to which, they assured him, that they were disposed to obey his orders; and, opening one of their gates, immediately admitted him, with 300 of his men, into the town. The troops that entered with him they inftantly cut to pieces; and the Khalif himself escaped, with great difficulty, out of the gate of Tadmor. However, he afterwards overthrew them in a pitched battle, put a great number of them to the fword, difmantled their city, and affixed to crosses, erected for that purpose, the bodies of about 600 of those who had been the most active in this rebellion s.

THE people of Damascus, following the example of the mascenes citizens of Hems, soon after declared against the Khalif, and deposed the governor he had left to preside over them. But, after the extinction of the former rebellion, Merwan moved with great celerity towards Damascus, entered the city by force, and brought to condign punishment the ringleaders who had excited the Damascenes to a revolt. This effectually appealed all commotions, and restored the capital of the Moslem empire to its former tranquillity t.

The Basrans aljo revolt.

Soon after the re-establishment of the public tranquillity at Damascus, in the 127th year of the Hejra, Soliman Ebn Heshâm set up for himself at Basra, where he was proclaimed Khalif by the people of that city. In order to support his pretensions to the imperial dignity, he raised an army at Basra, confisting of 10,000 effective men; with which he advanced to Kinnifrîn, where he was joined by a vast number of the Syrians, who flocked to him from all parts. Merwan, receiving advice of the rapid progress made by Soliman, marched against him with all the forces he could affemble at Damascus, and in the neighbourhood of that city; and, at last coming up with him, gave him battle, and intirely defeated him, with the lofs of 30,000 men. Solimân's affairs being in a manner ruined by so terrible an overthrow, he sled to Hems, and was joined there by a body of 900 men, who engaged themselves by eath to stand by him to the last drop of blood. With these troops he posted himself in ambuscade at Telmair, on mount Al Zaitûn, in the district of Al Maara Al Nooman, in order to surprize Merwan; who, he knew, must pass over that mountain in his way to Hems, to which place he took for granted the Khalif would purfue him without de-

But Solimân, after a very vigorous action, was again overthrown, had the greatest part of his men killed upon the spot, and found himself obliged to retire with precipitation to But, being closely pursued by the victors, he constituted his brother Sa'id Ebn Heshâm commandant of the place, leaving with him the shattered remains of his troops that furvived the late carnage, and fled to Tadmor. Soon after his departure, Merwan appeared before the town, invested it, and besieged it seven months; during which term, he battered it incessantly with above eighty catapults. The inhabitants, as well as the garison, being at last reduced to the last extremity, surrendered to the Khalif, and delivered up Sa'id Ebn Hoshâm into his hands. In confideration of which submission, Merwan pardoned the rebellious inhabitants of this city, and took them all under his protection u.

They were then introduced to Abd'allah, as their future fovereign, and had the honour to kifs his hands and his feet. As for Mohammed, he departed this life in the 125th year of the Heira, and was succeeded in the honourable post affigned him by his son Ibrahim; who, immediately after his father's death, dispatched Abu Hashem, a person he could intirely confide in, to Mera in Khorasan, then the residence of the principal friends of the house of Al Abbas, to notify to his adherents there that tragical event, and to animate them to a perseverance in their attachment to his person and family. Abu Hâshem succeeded in the execution of his commission, according to his defire, and received from the Moslems at Merit a large fum of money, collected there for his master's service. It appears, however, from Abu'l Faraj, that Abu Hâsbem was not the first embassador sent to the people of Khorasan in the interest of the house of Al Abbas; since, if any credit may be given to that author, Ziyad was dispatched in that capacity to Khorasan by Mohammed Ebn Ali himself, in the 109th year of the Hejra. To which he adds, that this Ziyad, upon his arrival at Merû, probably the Maruca of Ptolemy, a city of Khorafan, for a description of which we must refer our curious readers to the eaftern geographers, made great complaints of the diffolute lives and iniquity of the members of the house of Ommiyab; and that he was put to death by Asad, Hesham's governor of Khorasan, who had received a full and ample account of the whole affair, together with ten of the Cûfans, who were privy to his intrigues. The same author likewise relates, that, in the 118th year of the Hejra, Amman Ebn Yezid, a person of very loose and impious principles, came into Khorasan, and engaged great numbers of the people there to declare for Mohammed Ebn Ali Ebn Abd'allah Eln Abbas. must here be observed, that this Mobammed Ebn Ali was fixtythree, or, as others will have it, fixty-seven years of age at the time of his death; and that he left eleven fons, befides his fuccessor Ibrahim, behind him x.

In the 127th year of the Hejra, Ibrahim Ebn Mohammed And d. feat Ebn Ali nominated Abu Mostem, a youth about nineteen years the Khaof age, of the family of Isfandiyar, whole true name was lif's forces Abd alrahmân, to go as his representative into Khorasan. But sent Soliman Ebn Kothair, the chief of the friends of the house against of Al Abbas there, believing that Abu Moslem, on account them. of his youth, was by no means qualified for fo arduous a post, and fearing lest his rawne's and inexperience should prove the total ruin of their affairs, refused at first to receive him with fuch marks of distinction as were required by Ibrahim, and even to obey any of his orders. However, to set Ibrahim right in his notions, Soliman Ebn Kothair, Laher Ebn Korait, and Kahtaba, took a journey to Mecca, then the refidence of Ibrahim; and, having deposited in one of his fervant's hands a present, for his master's use, consisting of many valuable effects, besides 20,000 dinârs and 200,000 dirhêms in ready money, they had a conference with him; the refult of which was, that they should acknowledge Abu Moslem, Ibrahim's governor of Khorafan; which they accordingly did. In the mean time, Nafr Ebn Sayar, Merwan's lieutenant of Khorafan, having received advice of these commotions, assembled a body of horse, and sent them to disperse the rebels before they were joined by the reinforcements they expected from Syria and the peninsula of the Arabs. On the other hand, Abu Moslem having erected his standard, and raised a confiderable army, advanced at the head of his forces to attack Nafr Ebn Sayar; upon which, a fierce conflict ensued, in which Nafr was intirely defeated, lost the greatest part of his men, and was obliged to betake himself to a precipitate flight. This blow proved extremely prejudicial to the interests of the house of Ommiyah, and not a little contributed to the elevation of that of Al Abbas to the Moslem throne y.

It may not be improper to observe here, that some dirhêms Dirhêms were struck this year in the mint erected at Wâset; of which struck this one was sound on the coast of the Baltick, near a village called year at Stegen, at a small distance from Dantzick, in June 1722. After the late victory, they declared Merwan an usurper, and took the oath of allegiance to Ibrahim Ebn Mohammed, whom they afferted, by right of succession, to be lawful Khalif and Imam. Many of the Syrians likewise fecretly favoured the pretentions of the house of Al Abbas; having been disobliged by Merwan, who, after the defeat of his predecessor Ibrahim Ebn Al Walid, had transferred the imperial treasury from Damascus to Harran in Mesopotamia. of the Christian writers relate, that Merwan gained two victories over Ibrahim's forces the preceding year; having first overthrown, in a great battle, Nekaim Ebn Tebith, in the plains of Gara, and afterwards Soliman Ebn Hesham, upon a spot of ground at a small distance from the river Lita. this last defeat, Merwan, according to one of these writers. made himself master of Hems, affixed Yezid's body, which he ordered to be taken out of the tomb where it had been interred, to a gibbet or cross, and extorted from a wealthy Jew an immense sum of money, amounting to 400,000 dinârs. Merwan also, if we will believe Roderic of Toledo, sent one Thoaba, an Arab of distinction, this year to preside over the Moslems in Spain 2.

the Khalifat. Of the names shadow and cloud he affigned to the people of Khorasan this interpretation, viz. "That as the earth would never be uncovered by the clouds, nor quite void of shade; so the world would never henceforth be without a Khalif of the house of Al Abbâs." In fine, Abu Mossem brought this year such a formidable force into the field, that the Khalif's troops could not make head against him; so that he obliged all Merwân's commandants of fortresses in Khorasan either to take an oath of fidelity to Ibrahim, or within a limited time to quit that vast province a.

THE next year, being the 130th of the Hejra, one Dac-Merwan hac, or rather Dakhak, together with one Yacap, or Jacob, extin-Kaibari, and Sakasbi, according to Dionysius Telmarensis, re-guishes a belled against Merwan in Mesopotamia. These rebels assem-rebellion bled fuch a powerful army in the neighbourhood of mount that Izla, that they engaged the Khalif's forces sent against them breaks out at Telmasrita; but were overthrown with prodigious slaughter, potamia. the spot. Theophanes relates, that this Dakhak was prince of the Aruritæ, an Arab nation settled in Mesepotamia, who, in their wars, left their wives and children, and all their effects, behind them, that they might march with the greater expedition, and be the more at liberty to engage the enemy, as being then quite free from all impediments. And this, indeed, the name Arurita itself sufficiently points out to us; it having been undoubtedly deduced from the Syriac word Arurojuto, or rather Hirute, which denotes liberty or freedom in the Syriac language. Nor is it to be wondered at, that some Syriae terms should be used by the Arabs, who were now in possession. of Mesopotamia; since the language of that country was at this time a mixture of the Syriac and Arabic. Theophanes also writes, that one Thebit, or Ebn Tebith, had a great hand in exciting the Arabs of Mesopotamia to this revolt; and that both he and Dakbak, together with 12,000 of their men, were cut to pieces by the Khalif's troops in the territory of Hems. ther observes, that Merwan permitted the Christians of Antioch, upon their application to him for this favour, to elect for their patriarch Theophylact, a presbyter of Edessa, in the room of their former patriarch Stephen, who died this year. The Khalif also commanded his subjects to treat with all posfible marks of respect the new patriarch, if we will believe Cedrenus and this author. It likewise appears from Theophanes, that Merwan, about this time, ordered one of his exccutioners, an Ethiopian, to suffocate Aba, or Abas, a magician, who had destroyed many of the Christians, been accesfory to the murder of the Khalif Al Walid II. and committed dreadful depredations in several of the provinces, in a sack of unflaked lime; which act of justice he accordingly performed. It is also said, that Merwan ordered 120 Calbites, or Arabs of the tribe of Calb, called Chalbanians by Theophanes, probably on account of their attachment to the house of Al Abbas, to be hanged at Hems. We are told by Roderic of Toledo, that Thoaba died, and was succeeded by one Yusef, towards the conclusion of the last, or the beginning of the present year, in Spain b.

of the boule and seized upon the imperial palace there. He also obliged of Al Ab-all the troops posted in and about that city, as well as in other parts of Khorasan, to take an oath to support the interests of the a farther house of Hashem, without naming any particular person. Abu Moslem had found means to cut off almost all the officers who served under Nasr Ebn Sayar, and intirely ruined the troops he commanded in the general action, which proved so fatal to the partifans of the house of Ommiyah, Merwan's governor of Khorafan found it impossible to bring another army into the field against the rebels before the present year. Nasr having now assembled his forces, he advanced to Naifabour, in order to attack Kahtaba, who had taken upon himfelf the command of Ibrahim's troops. The vicinity of the two armies, as neither of them was disposed to continue long in a state of inaction, brought on several very sierce engagements, wherein Nasr was generally worsted, and lost 30,000 men, killed and taken prisoners; which still more and more animated the partisans of the house of Al Abbas. From Naisabour Khataba marched to Jurjan, Jurjana, or Georgiana, the capital of a province of the same name, attacked Banana Ebn Hanthala, who had posted himself with a body of troops near that city, overthrew him with great flaughter, made himself master of his camp, and took a very considerable quantity of plunder. As for Banana himself, he was killed in the action; which still farther embarrassed the Khalif's affairs. With regard to the province and city of Jurjan, or Jurjana, some of the eastern geographers make them to appertain to Taberistan, others to Khorasan, and others to Khowarazm; they being situated upon the frontiers of all those countries. in this particular, afferts them to be separated and distinct from every one of those regions; and is sollowed herein by most of the oriental geographers of a later date. For a farther description of the province of Jurjan, or Jurjana, and its capital, we must be gleave to refer our curious readers to Golius, who in this point, as well as many others of a similar nature, will give them full and ample satisfaction c.

It may not be improper to observe here, that, according to Constan-Theophanes, Dakhak's rebellion was extinguished in the fifth tine Coyear of Constantine Copronymus; tho', in this, he runs counter pronymus t) what has been advanced by Dionysius Telmarensis. The for-makes an mer of those authors has likewise, as well as Cedrenus, re-irruption marked, that the emperor Constantine Copronymus, encouraged into Syby the diffensions that then reigned amongst the Arabs, made ria, &c. an impression upon Syria and Dulichia, with a powerful army, the same year; though neither of those writers has handed down to us the particulars of that expedition. There happened several insurrections, if we will believe Roderic of Taledo, this year in Spain; many of the Arabs there being highly diffatisfied with the conduct of Yufef, who had succeeded Thaaba, a warlike and magnanimous commander, in the government of that fertile and opulent region. This, as the same writer observes, occasioned a vast effusion of human blood; tho' the differences that had for some time prevailed amongst the Moslems there were at last amicably composed, and the public tranquility in every part of that country perfectly reftored 4.

In the year of the Hejra 131, Nast Ebn Sayâr, in order Ibrahim to avoid falling into the hands of Abu Moslem, fled to Raya, seized, and a town, according to some of the eastern geographers, be-put to longing to Deylam, but, as others will have it, to Khorasan. death, by Soon after his arrival there, he fell sick, and was carried to Merwân. Sâwa, near Hamedan, or Hamadan, where he expired. About this time, Ibrahim Ebn Mohammed, attended by his brothers, Abu'l Abbâs and Abu Jaafar, his son, his uncle, and a confiderable number of servants, went on pilgrimage to Mecca. As he and his retinue rode on thirty camels richly caparisoned, appeared in splendid attire, attended by a more than ordinary quantity of baggage, and made a very considerable figure; this journey could not long be concealed from Merwân, then in the territory of Damaseus; the inhabitants of the desarts of Sham, as well as those of Mecca and Medina, giving the Khalf immediate intelligence of it. Besides, Ibrahim's intentions being already sufficiently made manifest by what had lately happened in Khorafan, it was impossible that his pilgrimage to Mecca, which was performed with so much pomp and parade, could long remain a fecret either to Merwan himself, or his governors in Syria and Irâk. This journey, therefore, being foon discovered, the commandant of Damafcus, by the Khalif's order, fent a detachment of horse to purfue him; which came up with him near Harran, feized him, carried him to that city, and confined him in prison loaded with, irons, where he foon after died. Authors, however, are not perfectly agreed with regard to the circumstances attending his death; fome of them afterting, that he was destroyed by drinking a poisonous draught, others by the fall of an old ruinous building, and, lastly, others by placing his head upon a poisoned pillow. But which soever of these accounts may be true, he had, some time before he was taken, ordered his brother Abu'l Abbas to retire to Cufa, and commanded all those that attended him to acknowledge him Khalif after his decease. Abbas, therefore, in consequence of this order, had made the best of his way, with his brother Abu Jaafar, his uncle, and several of his friends, to that place. There he, with his family, lay concealed till the troops, who had declared in favour of the house of Al Abbas, to whom Ibrahim had written, and recommended him in the strongest terms, advanced to his support. According to Dionfius Telmarensis, several violent shocks of an earthquake were felt this year in Syria; one of which overthrew St. Mary's church in the city of Mabug, or Manbij, and destroyed the bishop, and a great number of Chriflians, who were buried under the ruins of that church, whither they had retired for shelter. It seems to appear from Theophanes, that Merwan, either towards the beginning of this or the close of the preceding year, dismantled the city of Heliopolis in Syria, and put all the principal men of that place to the fword. The fame author likewife, as well as Cedrenus, informs us, that there happened about this time a dreadful earthquake in Palestine, and particularly that part of it bordering upon the Jordan, which overturned many churches, monasteries, and towns, and destroyed vast numbers of people. Nay, it appears from those writers, that the shocks of this earthquake, which was probably the same with that mentioned by Dionyfius Telmarenfis, were perceived in almost every district of Syria. It may be inferred from the Greek writers, that the imperial fleet, surprized that of the Arabs, consisting of a thousand ships, in one of the ports of Cyprus, about the year we are now upon, and so intirely defeated it, that only three of them escaped. After the extinction of the late rebellions in Spain, Yusef, tho' of a libidinous and petulant disposition, conducted affairs to the satisfaction of the Moslems of that country, according to Roderic of Toledo, the present year. We must not forget to observe, that Ibrahim Ebn Mohammed, and his family, held their refidence at Hunain, or Homaima, a town of the Arabian Irak, before the late catastrophe happened to him e.

THE following year, being the 132d of the Hejra, com- Abu'l mencing August 20th, 749, Abu'l Abbas Ebn Mohammed, sur- Abbas named Al Saffah, on Friday, the 12th of the former Rabi, proclaimed went from Abu Moslema's house at Cufa, after evening prayer Khalif, had been performed in the mosque of the Banu Ayab, to his own and depalace there. The next day, all the officers of the troops can-feats toned in and about that city, each of them cloathed in black, forces. and mounted on a good horse, with a sword by his side, formed a fort of military cavalcade, and paid their duty to him. Soon after which, Abu'l Abbas, with that whole train of the military men attending him, went from his own palace to the citadel, or imperial palace, where he first harangued them, and then received their oath of allegiance to him. This ceremony being over, he fent his uncle Abd'allah, with a powerful army, to attack Merwan's forces that were incamped near Tubar, at a small distance from Mawsel, or Mosul, where that Khalif was then waiting for an account of the success of the body of troops he had ordered to march against Kahtaba, one of the greatest generals of the age, consisting of 20,000 men, under the command of Yezid, his governor of Irak. Kahtaba receiving advice of Yezid's approach, immediately advanced against him, at the head of his troops, in order to give him battle, foon brought him to a general action, intirely defeated him, and obliged him to fly to Waset. Early the next morning, Kahtaba's forces passed the Euphrates, in pursuit of the vanquished enemy; but the waters of that river being then swelled to an uncommon height, both he and his horse were carried away by the rapidity of the current, and, according to fome of the Arab writers, never met with; tho', if others of them may be believed, his body was afterwards found. Be that as it will, this tragical event by no means cooled the ardour of his troops, who, under the conduct of his fon Hamid, continued to pursue the sugitives with so much vigour, that they soon dispersed them in such a manner, that they sound it absolutely impossible to rally. After the end of the action, Hamid returned with his victorious army to Cûsa, and Abu Moslema Ebn Al Halal was declared privy-counsellor to Abu'l Abbâs. A body of troops was afterwards sent to block up Yezid Ebn Omar Ebn Hobeira in Wâset; which formed a camp at Najila, before they entered upon any farther military operations. The new Khalif, Abu'l Abbâs, whose mother Rabta, or Radiah, was the daughter of Abd'allah Ebn Abid, was cloathed in black at the time of his inauguration, and retired, a month after the conclusion of that ceremony, to Anbâr, a city of Irâk, upon the Euphrates, which he made the seat of the Khalifat, and consequently the capital of the Moslem empire, according to Abu Jaafar Al Tabari.

But now a second missortune happened, of much worse consequence to his affairs than the former, For, he had no fooner fet his foot on the ground, than his horse took fright, and ran with great swiftness into the midst of his men; who, seeing the beast without his rider, imagined that the Khalif was flain at the first onset; and therefore, without taking any care to inform themselves farther in this matter, left their ranks, and betook themselves to a precipitate flight. Nor could the Khalif, though he made all possible efforts to rally them, bring them again to the charge; fo that the only expedient he could purfue at this melancholy juncture, was to fly to Damascus, then the capital of his empire. But the inhabitants of that city, finding his condition desperate, treated him with contempt, and abandoned him; which unexpected defertion obliged him to leave that place, and fly into Egypt; over which country he had appointed Abd allah Ebn Al Magbarah, one of his favourites, after the dismission of Joweirah Ebn Sahl, to preside, the preceding year. Here he maintained himself for some time; but was at last attacked, and put to death, by Abd'allah Ebn Ali's brother Saleh, who was fent against him at the head of a strong detachment, in a town or village of Sa'îd, or Thebais, called Bûsîr Kûridas, on Sunday the 27th of the latter Jomada. At the battle of Tubar, an incredible number of Merwan's foldiers were killed upon the spot, and many more drowned in the Euphrates; amongst the latter of which the Khalif Ibrahim Ebn Al Walid Ebn Abd'almálec, who had formerly been deposed, is faid to have been by some of the Arab writers. After that decifive action, Abd'allah, Abu'l Abbas's general, made himself master of the enemy's camp, where he found an immense quantity of plunder, and pursued Merwan first to Kinnifrin, and afterwards to Hems. From the latter of those places that Khalif fled to Damascus, where he met with the reception already mentioned; which obliged him to make the best of his way through Palestine into Egypt. As Abu'l Abbas's troops continued the pursuit, without the least interruption, a vast multitude of the partisans of the house of Ommiyah perished on this occasion; which, as Abd'allah Ebn Ali himself was pleased to observe, completely revenged the death of Hosein. As for the citizens of Damascus, tho' they had so shamefully deserted Merwan, they refused to open their gates to the victors; upon which, Saleh Ebn Ali, who was sent against them by Abu'l Abbas with a body of troops, entered their city by force, and gave it up to the foldiery to be plundered for three whole days. He also put to the sword Al Walid Ebn Moawiyab Ebn Merwan Ebn Al Hakem, Merwan's governor of the place, and then pursued his route into Egypt. However, before his departure, if we will believe Abu Jaafar Al Tabari and Abu'l-Faraj, he intirely dismantled that city, and caused the bones of the princes of the house of Ommiyah, interred there, to be dug out of their graves, and ordered them all to be burnt. The latter of those authors likewise relates, or at least seems to intimate, that Abd'allah Ebn Ali himself pursued Merwan into Egypt, and not his brother Saleh, as the former of them is pleased to affert; as also, that Merwan was killed with a lance in the mosque at Bûsîr, on the last day but one of the month Dhu'lhajja. After which, his head was cut off, and fent as a present to Abu'l Abbas; who, at the first fight of it, adored God in a most devout manner, distributed 10,000 dinars amongst the poor, and, in conjunction with Abd'allah Ebn Ali, his general, returned thanks to the Deity for delivering into his hands his formidable competitor, or, as he was nicknamed by Ald'allah, the Ass of Mesopotamia 3.

Merwân's

WITH regard to Merwan's character, he is faid by Abu character. Jaafar Al Tabari to have been a valiant and magnanimous prince, endued with great prudence, and thoroughly versed in all the arts of government. He fat upon the throne a little above five years, and was fixty-nine, or, as others fay, fiftynine, or, lastly, as others will have it, fifty-fix, years of age, at the time of his death. He left behind him two fons, Abdallah and Abd'alaziz; the former of which was afterwards taken, and thrown into prison, where he remained till the Khalifat of Harûn Al Rashid. He was then released from his confinement, tho' loaded with irons for some time after that event, died childless, and was buried at Baghdad. The first day of Merwan's reign was Sunday, and the last Thursday. His secretary was Abd'alhamid Ebn Yahya; the captain of his guards Al Kawthar Ebn Al Aswad Al Anawi; his chamberlain his freed-man Saklab, or Saflat, as he is called by Al Makîn; and his judge Othmân Al Timi. The inscription of his seal was, O wise man, remember death. The Arabs express the date of the catastrophe that befell the house of Ommiyah, in the person of Merwan, who was the last Khalif of that house, by the word Kalb, which confifts of three letters, Kâf, Lâm, and Ba, denoting 132, the number of the year of the Heira in which Merwan was killed, and the Khallfat of the princes of the house of Ommiyab intirely abolished h.

Merwan is faid by some of the eastern writers to have been a greater eater than most of his time. Tho' the Khalifs of the house of Al Abbas endeavoured to destroy all the descendants of this prince, yet we are told, that one of them escaped first into E_{gypt} , afterwards into Africa, and last of all into Spain, where he founded the second dynasty of the Ommiyan princes, who assumed the title of Khalif there. We learn from Theophanes, Dionysius Telmarensis, Cedrenus, and Abu'l-Faraj, that the last battle, the loss of which proved the total ruin of Merwan's affairs, was fought upon the banks of the Theophanes denominates the spot on which the two armies engaged Zaba, and Dionysius Telmarcusts Beth Zabe; probably because Merwan, as we are informed by Abu'l-Faraj, had, for some time, fixed his residence there, or, at least, in the neighbourhood of that place. After the defeat of his forces, that prince fled to Harran; from whence, a bridge having been before thrown over the Euphrates, probably near Batn, Batan, or Bettân, he made his escape into Syria, and afterwards gradually into Egypt, where he met with the above-mentioned fate: notwithstanding which, the Moslems still continued, according to Roderic of Toledo, to be governed by his lieutenant Yusef, in Spain !.

and Sindia; upon Abu Moslem, who had brought about the revolution in favour of the race of Al Abbas, that of Khorafân; upon his uncle Abd'allah Ebn Ali that of Syria; and, lastly, upon his uncle Saleh Ebn Ali that of Egypt. The last of which governors chose for his deputy Abu Awn Ebn Abd'almâlec Ebn Yezid. Abd'allah Ebn Ali Ebn Al Abbâs, after his return from Ramla, made a public entry into Damascus, in order to take possession of his new government, and exercised unheardof cruelties upon the members of the house of On miyah there. Some of them he tortured in a most barbarous and inhuman manner, and others he burnt to death. At Rujafa, he ordered Heshâm Ebn Abd'almâlec to receive 120 stripes upon his bare back; which separated the flesh from the bones in such a manner, that it all fell to the ground, and was reduced to ashes, by this cruel governor's command; who, at the same time faid, "This is done by way of retaliation for the barba-" rous treatment met with by my father from him, who told " me, that he received formerly 60 stripes for no crime at all." By the preceding list of governors and provinces, it clearly appears, that the Moslem empire was of a vast extent, when Al Saffab, the first of the Khalifs of the family of Al Abbas, ascended the throne k.

The Kha-ral advantages over the parti sans of the heafe of Ommiyah.

THE following year, being the 133d of the Hejra, comlîf's troops mencing August 9, 750, the people of Chalcidene, a district of gain seve- Syria separated by the province of Chalybonitis from the Euphrates, took up arms in favour of the house of Ommiyah, and advanced into the neighbourhood of Hems; but were overthrown there by the Khalif's troops, called Maurophori by Theophanes, who put four thousand of them to the sword. About the same time, a body of Arabs of the faction of Kais, under the command of one Burikha, formed a conspiracy against the Khalif, and cut off a confiderable number of the partifans of the house of Al Abbas; but they were at last dispersed, with very great loss, by Al Saffah's forces. As the Arabs on this occasion appeared in white cloaths, and the Khalif's men in black; hence arose the two different factions of the Whites and the Blacks in Syria, that have been taken notice of by several of the eastern writers. However, Merwan's head having been cut off, after the last defeat of that prince's forces, in Egypt, it was embalmed, and exposed to public view in the principal cities of the empire; which effectually appealed commotions. One of the Greek historians informs us, that Merwan's army, overthrown at the battle of Zaba, confifted of 300,000 men; and that he escaped with only 3000 slaves into Egypt. Theophanes relates, that the Arabs were divided at this time into two powerful factions, which he calls the Kaisians and the Imanites; the latter of which seem to have been either the people inhabiting the province of Omân, or that branch of the Shiites denominated Imâmians by some of the Moslem writers. These Imanites, according to the same author, were superior in fortitude to the Kaisians, had before destroyed great numbers of them, and then joined the forces assembled by Kahtaba to act in savour of the house of Al Abbâs. Yuses, Merwân's lieutenant, notwithstanding the late revolution in Syria, continued this year to preside over the Mossems in

In the 134th year of the Hejra, and part of the preceding The prima year, the emperor Constantine Copronymus made an irruption ripal into Armenia and the neighbouring provinces, reduced the ci- events in ties of Melitene, Theodosiopolis, and Jezira, carried part of the Mosthe inhabitants off with him into Thrace, and seized upon the lem emgreatest part of Armenia. It appears from Theophanes, that pire during the Khalif's officers, about this time, butchered vast numbers the year of of the Christians in Palestine. Dionysius Telmarensis relates, the Hejra that considerable commotions happened at Maiphercat, Maipherchin, Maipheracta, or Mayafarkin, a city of Mesopotamia, this year. One Cyrus Ebn Tebith advanced from thence at the head of a body of troops into a district called Culab, and put seven of the principal men of that district to the sword. Of which the inhabitants of a neighbouring territory, named Phis, receiving advice, they fortified their capital, raised what forces they were able, and made the proper dispositions, under the command and direction of one John, a Syrian, to give the enemy a warm reception, if they should think fit to appear. But, notwithstanding these dispositions, one Severus, a native of Phir, endeavoured to bring his countrymen under a foreign yoke, and went over to the Arabs. However, John routed the troops fent against them under the conduct of this Severus, and killed the greatest part of them upon the spot. He also defeated Cyrus's governor of Gulab, who had rebelled against his master, and possessed himself of Elul and Phasphafat; driving him from thence with confiderable loss. He afterwards advanced to Hadar, escaped an ambuscade laid for him by one Stephen, who had been reinforced with a body of Arab troops commanded by Awf, a Moslem general, and intirely difpersed that corps. biting the banks of the river Hara, and put many of them to the fword; which induced the members of the canton feated on mount Say to flock to John, who commanded the forces of Phis in no small numbers, in order to enable him to expel from their country the barbarians. The eastern part of Mesopetamia, at the fame time, renounced all allegiance to the Khalif, and fet up Burikha, who had been defeated the preceding year by Al Saffab's troops, in opposition to him. At Edeffa, Abd allah Ebn Bektr affumed the supreme command, after he had destroyed the monasteries of Cuba, Resmat in Taisapha, Catara, Hesma, St. Lazarus, Beth Maada, St. Abel, St. Milles, and Sonin, in the neighbourhood of Edeffa, Harran, and Teta. The winter this year in Mejopotamia, and the neighbouring provinces, was extremely severe; the ground being covered a long time with snow, and the waters with ice. This, in coniunction with several large fwarms of locusts, which intirely confumed all the corn, produced a dreadful famine in Iberia, Armenia, and Mesopetamia, especially the last of these provinces, into which a prodigious multitude had retired out of the others, for the fake of a fubfiftence. We must here beg leave to observe, that the city of Tola, the Constantia, Confanting, Antipolis, and Anthemufic, of the antients, was, according to Theophanes, fifty-fix stadia east of Nisibis, and about the same distance, in a southern direction, from Amida; and that Maipheracta, called by the Arabs Mayafarkin, and fometimes, by way of contraction, in the days of Abulfeda, Fârki, was a city of Mesopotamia, about seven or eight days journey from Moful, denominated, as it should seem, by Ammianus Marcellinus Macepratta, and taken, without any just foundation, by Renaudet to be Tagrit, or the Martyrepolis of Procopias. It must likewise be remarked, that Rodoric of Toledo is undoubtedly mistaken, when he afferts Abd'allah Ebn Mehammed Ebn Ali, surnamed Abull Abbas Al Saffah, to have been inaugurated this year; fince he runs counter herein to the whole stream of Moslem antiquity, as well as to the authority of the best Greek and Syrian writers ...

THE next year, being the 135th of the Hijrd, the febel As also Burikha, having raifed a powerful army, advanced to Dara; during the where he was met and engaged by the Khalif's forces, who following overthrew him with very great flaughter. The partifans of Jean the house of Ommiyab received likewise two other notable defeats at Majul and Akula; the former of which places, called sometimes New Niniveh, and by the Arabs Mawfel, was a city of Mesopotamia, seated upon the Tigris, about six days journey from Maipheraela; and the latter, supposed by Bar Hebræut to have been the fame with Cufa, was feated, according to Sharif Al Edrift, upon the Euphrates, about five stations from Baghdad. It was denominated by Abulfeda, who makes it to have been a small town in his days, Dair Al Akûl, and placed by him at no great distance from Baehdad, about ten parafangs from Al Madayen upon the Tigris; tho' he takes it to be a different city from Cufa. After these deseats, in which the rebels lost abundance of men, the Khalif appointed John, the general of Phis, who had fignalized himself so much on many occasions against the Arabs of Maipheracta, governor of a confiderable extent of territory in that part of his dominions, and loaded him with presents. His brother Abd'allah Ebit Mohammed, who commanded the forces employed in the reduction of the rebel Burikha, Al Saffah had before constituted governor of Mesopotamia. Salikh Ebn Sabikh, another of the Khalif's generals, undertook an expedition into Armenia, and obliged the principal cities of that province to deliver hoftages into his hands, as pledges for their future fidelity to the Khallf; all which he conducted to Maipheracta. Some of these John the general of Phis, foon after came to release; upon which, the people of Maipheralla would have persuaded Salikh to cut him off by treachery; but he escaped by the favour of Abd'allah Ebn Mohammed, who took him under his protection. Stephen, one of the Ommiyan commanders already mentioned, died suddenly this year at Harran. It appears from Abu Jaafar A Tabari and Abu'l-Faraj, as well as from Dienysius Telmarensis; who has been followed herein by M. Bayer, that Abd'allah Ebn Mohammed, who acquired so much glory by the defeat of the tebel Burikha, must have been Al Saffah's successor, the Khalif Abu Jaufar Al Mansur, who had been appointed by his brother, in the beginning of his reign, the governor of Armenia, Mesopotamia, and Aderbijan. For, that his name, as well as Al Saffah's, was Abd'allah, may be inferred from all those authors. It may not be amiss to inform our readers here, that dirhêms were still struck at Cûfa; the author of this hiftory having one of them, in excellent conservation, with the following legend and infeription, according to the learned Dr. Bunt, in the Cuffe character, upon it i

There is no God, but the one only God: He has no companions. This dirhêm was struck at Cûfa in the 134th year. By which we are given to understand, that this piece was coined at Cûfa, in the 134th year of the Hejra, or Mohammedan æra, and the third of the Khalîfat of Abd'allah Ebn Mohammed Ebn Alí, surnamed Abu'l Abbâs Al Saffah. The unity of God, and his superiority over all other beings, intimated by the expressions, There is no God but the only one God, and He has no companions, by which the Mohammedans exclude the Son and the Holy Ghost from a participation of the divine nature, are points deducible from the 4th, the 5th, and the 112th, chapters, of the Korân. It cannot be inserred from Roderic of Toledo, so often cited here, that any thing remarkable happened this year, under Yuses's administration, in Spain.

Some writers have, however, related, that he was but 32 years and an half old at the time of his death. He died of of the small pox, and reigned about four years and nine months, according to the best of the Arab historians. He was, as to his person, tall, handsome, and of a fair complexion. His nose was a little distorted; but he was portly, and of a very good fize. With regard to his disposition, he was discreet and munificent, had good parts, and was extremely averse to shedding of blood; though he was obliged, contrary to his natural inclination, in order to preserve himself upon the throne, to massacre a prodigious number of the friends and adherents of the house of Ommiyah, besides those he flew in the different engagements he had with Merwan's forces, upon the Euphrates, at Damascus, and in Egypt.

Isa Ebn Musa, his nephew, said the usual prayers over him at the time of his interment. As a proof of his fingular munificence, we are told, that he made a present to Abd'allah Ebn Hasan Ebn Hosein Ebn Ali Ebn Abu Taleb of 2,000,000 dirbêms at once; which exceeded every thing of that kind that had been done by any of his predecessors. He was the first of the Khalifs who created a privy-counsellor, namely, Abu Moslema Ebn Al Halâl, whom he caused to be executed for an intention to transfer the Khalifat from his family to that of Abu Tâleb, and afterwards Khâled Ebn Barmac; those of the house of Ommiyab making use of their secretaries of state as counfellors, whom they confulted on all emergent occasions. judge, or Kadi, was Abu Leili of Medina, and afterwards Abu Yahya of the same city; the captain of his guards was Abd'al Jabar Ebn Abd'alrahman Al Azdi; and his chamberlains Abu Othmân Ebn Saleh and Ebn Ghassan. The inscription of his feal was, God is the trust of ABD'ALLAH, who believeth in him. The first day of his reign was Friday, and the last Sunday. He had a very tender affection and high regard for the family of Mohammed, and was a prince of very pious fentiments. Being one day viewing himself in a glass, and perceiving himself in the flower of his age, he addressed himself to God in the following terms: "O God! I will not 44 fay what Soliman Ebn Abd'almalec, a Khalif of the house of Ommiyah, used to say, I am the king and prince of youth; 46 I pray thee to preferve my life only for thy service, and to se grant that I may enjoy a greater share of health than of " any other bleffings." The words were scarce out of his mouth, when he heard one of the flaves in his antichamber fay to his comrade, "By what I fee, there is only five days "difference between your age and mine." The Khalif was immediately struck with the expression, as much as if he had heard the divine decree intimating to him the certain period of his days; which, in effect, those words did, as he was in a fhort time after attacked by the small-pox, which carried him off about two months and five days after they were spoken. We are told by a Persian historian, that this Khalif was furnamed Al Saffah, because he did not obtain possession of the Khalifat without an incredible effusion of human blood. In this prince's reign, as we are informed by the Christian writers, the emperor Conftantine Copronymus constituted one Ishak, a Christian bishop, and his particular favourite, patriarch of Antioch, and the east, and put to death one Matratinus, for not receiving him in that character. That emperor likewife fent an order to the patriarch of Alexandria to admit Ishak in the aforesaid capacity, or, in case of resusal, to repair immediately to Constantinofle; with which he did not think fit R 3

But Ishak and Athanasius, who succeeded him. dying foon after, one George was advanced to the patriarchate of Antioch; and removed afterwards from that honourable post by the following Khalif, Abu Jaafar Al Manfür, who substituted in his room a Christian bishop that was one of his most intimate friends. In the beginning of the Khalifat of Al Saffab, several conflicts happened between his forces and those of Mersugn in Egypt, before he could make himself absolute master of that country. The latter of those princes is said to have been extremely cruel to the Christians in Egypt, frequantly threatening to cut off the patriarch of Alexandria's head, and ordering a scymitar to be brought him for that purpole; but receiving advice, that Al Saffab's forces, under the command of Saleb Ebn Ali, had entered Egypt, he immediately passed the Nile, took post in the city of Geera, or Al Fizab, the antient Memphis, and laid Mesr, then the capital of Egypt, in ashes, together with all the corn and provisions at that time in the place. After which, he seized upon a nunnery, at a small distance from Geeza, made all the religious therein prifoners, and, amongst the rest, a beautiful nun, whose chastity he offered to violate, in the manner already related. Jaafar Al Tahari seems inconsistent with himself, in relation to the year of Marwan's death; intimating in one place, that . it happened in the 132d year of the Hejra, and in another the following year. Some of the Arab authors inform us. that this Mersyan was a monstrous glutton, and so extremely fond of sheep's kidneys, that he could not forbear wrapping his hand in the corner of his vest, whenever he saw a sheep. and tearing out of it that part; which he devoured immedi-To this they add, that, after the ravenous operation, he threw off his vest, and put on another; and that he left above ten thousand such greasy vests behind him. gard to Al Saffab's age, at the time of his death, though, according to the Arab writers, this did not exceed thirty-three years, as has been already observed; yet he was forty-two years old, when that tragical event happened, if we will believe Khondemir, the celebrated Persian historian o.

SECT. XXII.

TPON the death of Abd'allah Abu'l Abbas Al Saffab, his Abu Jasbrother Abu Jaafar Al Mansur, who, in Al Saffah's far Al life-time, had been declared the prelumptive heir of the crown, Mansur was proclaimed Khalif in the imperial city of Anhar, then the succeeds capital of the Mossem empire. His brother, who lodged the Al Saffah. will made in his favour in the hands of his uncle Isa Ebn Ali, with orders to him to open it, and oblige the people to take an eath of fidelity to the new Khalif, as foon as he was dead. had appointed Abu Jaafar Al Mansar chief of the caravan of silgrims viliting Mecca this very year; so that the latter was on his journey to Mecca when the former expired. This happened in the though of Dhu'lhajja, which, as its name imports, is peculiarly fet apart for the celebration of the grand folemnity there. Upon the arrival of the news of Al Saffab's death, he immediately dispatched Abu Moslem to Cufa, to take care of his affairs. When Abu Mossem arrived there, in order to oblige the inhabitants to take the oath of allegiance to A! Mansier, and proclaim him Khalif, he found that his nephew, He Ebn Musa, had been attempting to usurp the Khalifat. But the appearance of this great general, who was foon followed by At Mansur himself, put an end to all the towering projects of Ifa, and obliged him to ask pardon of the new Khaltf for his temerity and presumption; who granted him his life, upon condition that he should always remain in a private station. However, his uncle Abd'allah Ebn Ali, then governor of Syria, was not intimidated by this success; but let up for himself in that country, where he gave Al Manster, much more trouble than his nephew Isa had done, as will bereafter very clearly appear P.

In that rich and opulent province. The Persians, however, as Dionysius calls the friends of the house of Al Abbas, proved superior to their enemies in this war, and dismantled all the fortified towns of Syria, except Antioch, whose fortifications they left intire. According to Roderic of Toledo, three funs, or two parhelia, were seen either this or the preceding year at Corduba in Spain. It has been observed by Rases, that no rain fell there, either this or the following year; which occasioned a great scarcity of provisions, if not a downright famine, in that fertile region, over which Yufef still continued to preside 4. commenced June 27th, 754, Abu Jaafar Al Mansur Ebn Mogurated at hammed Ebn Ali Ebn Abd'allah Ebn Al Abbas was inaugurated Al Hashe- at Al Hashemiyah, according to Abu Jaafar Al Tahari, with all possible demonstrations of joy on the part of his subjects there. His, muther Salma, the daughter of Bafbar, who had been only his father's concubine, was born at Bafra. He was first faluted Khalif at a place called Al Safiab, i. c. the famous, the bright, the illustrious, &c. from whence he took occasion to predict, that his reign would be glorious, and distinguished by many actions His uncle Isa Ebn Ali assembled all the members of the house of Hasbem at Anbar, in order to support his interest. before his arrival there. This, at that juncture, he judged a necessary precaution; being apprehensive, that his nephew's title to the Khalifat would be disputed by a powerful faction a and that, in consequence of such a contest, new troubles in the interior part of the empire must immediately ensue.

In the mean time, Abd'allah Ebn Ali, Abu'l Abbas's uncle, Abu Moflem over- having been apprized of his nephew's death, and that his other nephew, Abu Jaafar Al Mansur, brother to the deceased, had throws Abd'allah been proclaimed Khalif at Cufa, came to a resolution not to Ebn Ali. recognize his authority; and, in consequence of this resolution: caused himself to be acknowledged in the same quality at Damascus. In vindication of his conduct on this occasion. he thought fit to alledge, that when Abu'l Abbas Al Saffah, the first Khalif of the house of Al Abbas, sent him to attack Merwan, the last Khalif of the race of Ommiyab, he declared, that, in case he could deliver him and his family from all future apprehensions of that dangerous enemy, who disputed the empire with him, he should be called to the succession immediately after him; and that having executed that prince's orders, in relation to Merwan, he thought he had a right, in pursuance of the aforesaid declaration, to aspire to the Moslem throne. To support his pretentions to the Khalifat, he raised a powerful army in Arabia, Syria, and Mesopotamia, and advanced with great expedition to the banks of the Mafius, at a small distance from Nisibis, where he incamped. Abu Jaafar, receiving advice of this rebellion, fent Abu Mostem against Abd'allab, with all the forces he could assemble in Persia, Khorasan, and Irak; who, having harassed him, without intermission, for five months together, at last brought him to a general action, intirely defeated him, and forced him to betake himself to a precipitate flight. battle was fought on Tuesday, the 26th day of the latter Tifri, a Syrian month, answering to our November, in the 137th year of the Hejra, and of our LORD 754. Theophanes pretends, that this engagement happened at Tyana, in Captadocia; in which he must be greatly mistaken, as running counter in this point to Dionysius Telmarensis, and all the most celebrated Arab historians. He likewise seems to intimate, that the victory gained by Abu Moslem was in a great measure owing to the bravery of the Sclavonian and Antiochian troops, that ferved in Al Mansur's army. He farther gives us to understand; that the Syrian troops attacked several bodies of the Khalif's forces this year in Palestine, Hems, &c. and cut great numbers of them to pieces. After the end of the action upon the Mafius, Abu Moslem seized upon the enemy's camp, and made himself master of all their baggage; but, considering them in the light of Al Mansur's subjects, and Moslems, he did not put many of them to the fword. As for Abd allah, his affairs being intirely ruined by this blow, he left the shattered remains of his army to shift for themselves, and made the best of his way to Bafra *.

It will be proper to observe here, that the house of Abu Mos-Al Abbas owed their elevation to the Khalissat almost intirely lem associated Abu Mossem, there had for some time been a considerable sinated by misunderstanding between that general and Abu Jaasar Alebe Kha-Mansar. follow his advice. However, he refuled him the post of Mirhaje, or chief of the caravan of pilgrims visiting Mecca, which he follicited for himself, and conferred it upon his brother Abu Jacfar, in the last year of his reign. This not a little chagrined Abu Moslem, who thought his important fervices to the house of Al Abbas gave him a right to any employment he should think fit to demand. Leaving, therefore; the Khalif's court in difgust, he could not forbear saying, " that, as the house of Al Abbas were members of the prophet's family, and had possession of the gates of Mecca, they might have left him the honour he defired." order likewise to manifest his discontent, he set out for Mecca a day before Abu Jaofar, and carried an immense quantity of provisions with him upon the backs of 200 camels, with which he regaled twice a day the principal pilgrims of the caravan; and, after the end of every entertainment, made each of them a present of a vest. The affront offered on this occasion to Abu Jaafar, which was highly refented by that prince, afterwards cost him dear. For as soon as he came to the throne, tho' he retained Abu Moslem in his fervice, as has already been feen, in order to extinguish Abd'allah's rebellion, no one of his other governors of provinces being able to affift him with a fufficient body of troops at this perilous conjuncture, he feemed in earnest to meditate his destruction. Having received advice of the total overthrow of Aba allab, the Khalif, who was naturally of a covetous disposition. fent an officer that was not present in the action to the army, to bring him a faithful and exact account of the plunder that was This conduct appearing very strange to Abu Mestern, he faid to the officer with some emotion, " I have hitherto given so good an account to the Khalif of the lives and blood of so many thousand men, who have passed over the edge of my fword, fince it has been drawn for his fervice, that he 46 ought not to have doubted of my fidelity with regard to " the spoil." Nor was he content with expressing his resentment in this manner. For, instead of marching into Syria and Egypt, after the defeat of Abd'allah, as by his orders he was obliged to do, he retired into Khorasan, where he lived for fome time in a fort of independency, tho' without any formal renunciation of his allegiance to the Khalif. However, at last, either by the artifices of his enemies, or too great a prefumption of his own merit, he was drawn to court, and met with a most gracious reception there; though, a few days after, he was affaffinated by four persons posted in his chamber by Al Mansur, for that purpose. The following detail of the circumstances preceding and attending this horrid action have been handed down to us by Abu'l Faraj. Abu Digitized by GOOG Moftem, Moslem, by his distribution of vests amongst the Arab pilgrims that attended him to Mecca, and his reparation of the roads, as well as of the fountains and wells of water, so neceffary for the refreshment of those pilgrims, had acquired such a reputation as excited the jealousy of Al Mansur, and induced him to resolve upon his destruction. To which he was farther prompted by a letter brought to him from Abu Moflem, who fet out from Mecca before him, and received advice of the decease of Al Saffab upon the road, in which he condoled with him for his brother's death, without congratulating him upon his accession; which extremely irritated the new Khalif. Nor did he either stop upon the road till that prince came up, or return to him, as in point of duty he ought to have done; which greatly aggravated the affront, and made Al Mansur more sensible of the contumelious treatment he had received. From that moment he not only hated Abu Moslem, but was afraid of him, and could enjoy no fort of rest till he had formed a scheme for his destruction. Abu Moslem, on the other hand, was very well apprized, that he had incurred the displeasure of the Khalif, and therefore consulted one of his friends at Raya, whether or no it would be proper for him to go to court? That trufty confident advised him by no means to see the Khalif, but to retire instantly into Kho-This he refusing to do, and making the best of his way to Al Mansur's residence, it was told him, "that he had " left his counsel behind him at Raya;" which afterwards passed into a proverb amongst the Arabs. Al Mansur, upon his arrival, at first treated him with great marks of distinction, and ordered him to refresh himself that night in a proper manner; which he did, without delay. But, the next day, when he returned to court, he was affassinated by four of the Khalif's guards, who had placed themselves behind a curtain for that purpose, and, as soon as Al Mansur clapped his hands, which was the fignal agreed upon between them, they rushed upon him, and, amidst his outcries for mercy, and loud professions of loyalty to Al Mansur, immediately dispatched him. Upon his first appearance before the Khalif that day, after he had fent for him, he upbraided him with the difrespect he had shewn him, and particularly with having inferted his own name before that of his fovereign in one of his letters, as well as with ridiculing, in conjunction with Mâlec Ebn Al Haitham, a letter that he himself had sent him. In answer to which acsusations, Abu Moslem endeavoured to excuse his former conduct, and, in order to move the Khalif's compassion, prostrated himself before him; but without effect, that prince wishing God might destroy him, if he did not instantly put him to death. He then clapped his hands, and the aflassins appeared;

appeared; upon which, Abu Moslem cried out, Preserve me, O emperor of the faithful, from your enemies. To whom the Khalif replied. What more deadly enemy have I than yourself? We find it intimated by Abu Jaafar Al Tabari, that Al Mansur vowed Abu Mostem's ruin, because he had calumniated him; but that for some time he in vain attempted to get him into his power, tho' at last he decoyed him to court, where he met with his tragical fate. The fame author also relates, that he was masfacred on the 25th day of the month Shaaban, in the 137th year of the Hejra; and that, after the perpetration of this horrid fact, his body was thrown into the Tigris. Some writers pretend, that this great general had an intention to transfer the Khalifat from the house of Al Abbas to the descendants of Ali, or rather at first to have settled the latter upon the Mostem throne; and that this was the principal cause of his destruction. Be that as it will, he is faid to have killed fix hundred thousand men in the various battles he fought for the house of Al Abbas, and on other occasions, or, as some will have it, that number, befides those he destroyed in his military expeditions. He is also said to have been a great glutton and epicure; to have confumed every day 3000 cheefe-cakes, or tarts, and 1000 sheep, besides oxen and sowls; and to have had 1000 cooks, and as much kitchen furniture as would load 1200 beafts of burden. He had three wives, with every one of which he lay only once a year. He was one of the most jealous and suspicious of mortals, and kept his wives confined in a castle, into which no one but himself was permitted to enter. They were supplied with necessaries through the windows of that prison; and whenever any of them was introduced to his embraces, she rode on a beast that was afterwards killed, and the faddle on which she fat burnt the night after it had been used, in order to prevent any man's ever making use of them for the future. He was indisputably valiant and brave, tho', with regard to his intellectual abilities and humanity, authors are not perfectly agreed; some of the eaftern historians representing him as prudent, merciful, and discreet, whilst others of them have characterized him as an officer of a fierce, merciless, and intractable disposition. A certain Moslem being once asked, whether Abu Moslem or Al Hejáj was the better man? he replied, I will not say, that Abu Moslem was better than any other man, but that Al Hejaj was avor se than him. Some pretend, that he was born in a village belonging to the territory of Mera, a famous city of Khorafân; others suppose him to have been an Arab, extremely well versed in the writings of the antient poets of his own nation, as well as in the moral traditions of the fayings and actions of Mohammed; and, lastly, others maintain, that he was originally a flave, and of Curd extraction. But however this may be, as he had the principal share in that surprising revolution, which fixed the house of Al Abbas upon the Moslem throne, and makes so great a figure in the Arab history, we thought it would be highly proper to oblige our curious readers at least with the preceding short sketch of his life and character, as well as a circumstantial account of his

That general having acquired an immense quantity of spoil in this expedition, the Khalîf was prompted by his avaricious temper to fend a person express to the army, to seize upon it; which so disgusted Jambur, that he immediately turned his arms against his matter. But Al Mansur having ordered a formidable army to march against him, he abandoned the city of Raya, where he had cantoned his troops, at the approach of the Khalif's forces, and retired to Ispaban, in order to possess himself of that city and its dependencies. We must beg leave to remark here, that Dionysius Telmarensis is guilty of a mistake, when he afferts Al Saffâh to have died this year; such an assertion running counter to what has been advanced on this head by Abu'l-Faraj, Eutychius, Abu Jaafar Al Tabari, and all the rest of the most celebrated Mostem historians ".

and intirely defeated him. Dionyfius Telmarenfis feems to intimate, that an engagement happened this year in the neighbourhood of Mesopotamia, between the governor of that province's son and one of the imperial generals, who had made an irruption into the Moslem territories; tho' we meet with no account of this action in any of the Arab writers. On the oth day of March, either the present or the following year, several shocks of an earthquake were felt in Palestine and Syria, which did very confiderable damage. About this time, Theodorus, patriarch of Antioch was banished into an obscure part of Palestine by the Arabs, for holding an illicit correspondence with the emperor, and discovering to that prince feveral fecrets relating to the present situation of the Moslem affairs. On this occasion, the Christians were forbidden either to build or repair any churches, to expose publickly the cross in any part of the Khalif's dominions, or to enter into any religious disputes with the Arabs. Salema one of Al Mansur's generals, according to Theophanes, invaded Cappadocia the same year with an army of 80,000 men but was obliged to retire out of that country with confiderable loss, and without any other advantage than the acquisition of a few Armenian deserters, whom he conducted into the Moslem territories. John patriarch of Antioch, Michael patriarch of Alexandria, Timothy bishop of Edessa, Constantine bishop of Samosata, Dionystus bishop of Harran, Serguna bishop of Marde, and David bishop of Dara, who was afterwards created patriarch, all Monophysite prelates, flourished in the year we are now upon; and Athanasius Sandalensis, bishop of Maipheralla, erected a monastery on mount Telbesme, Tela-d-Besme, or Tel Besmai, called asterwards the monastery of Mar Athanasus, about the same time. Aba also, who belonged to the monastery of Mar Abib, was promoted to the see of Amida in Mesopotamia, in the room of Severus, who refigned. The fynod of Mabug feems likewise to have been held in the church of St. Thomas, without the town, the prefent year; at which assisted John bishop of Callinicum, Timothy bishop of Edessa, David bishop of Dara, Aba bishop of Amida, Serguna bishop of Marde, Mardin, or Maredin, Stephen bishop of Chabura, Constantine bishop of Samosata, Cyriac bishop of Tur-Abdin, Dionysius bishop of Harran, Elias bishop of Sigar, Paul bishop of Tagrit, Jonas bishop of Be Nuhadra, Naarda, Nearda, or Neardea, and several other Syrian and Mesopotamian prelates of considerable note. The refult of which fynod was a schism, occasioned principally by the influence of a monk named John, at whose infligation the eastern Mesopote mian clergy chose John bishop of Callinicum for their patriarch; whilst those seated at Moful.

ful, and in the western parts, elevated one George, not then upon the spot, to that honourable post. It seems to appear from Roderic of Toledo, that the Angli, or English, laid waste, about the 134th year of the Hejra, the borders of the Mossem

That fu- house of gitive prince, at this time about twenty-eight years of age, Ommiyah was recognized by the Arabs of that country for lawful Khalif acknowledged of the west, and is said to have reigned thirty-two years and Khalif in feveral months; leaving his crown, according to fome of the Spain. eastern writers, to his son Hesham, in the 172d year of the Hejra. He erected the great mosque at Corduba, or Cordova, about two years before his death; and founded a monarchy, that remained near 200 years. The Spanish chronicle informs us, that he was surnamed Al Adel, or the Just; and that he left eleven fons and nine daughters behind him. We must not forget to observe, that Rases has placed Abd alrahman's arrival in Spain in the preceding year. That prince affumed to himself the title of Emir Al Mûmenin, or emperor of the faithful, of Spain, and king of Corduba; and, after the defeat of Yusef, in the year of the Hejra 142, afferted his independency, and refused to pay any tribute to the eastern Khalif. Abu Jaafar Al Tabari is undoubtedly guilty of a mistake, when he affirms Moawiyah Ebn Hesham himself, the father of Abd alrahman, to have been the first Khalif, or Mossem emperor, of Spain; as, in this point, he runs counter to the whole stream both of Spanish and Arab antiquity. Al Mansar imposed about this time, according to Theophanes, an additional tribute upon the Christians in his dominions, which even the monks and religious were obliged to pay, fealed up the furniture of their churches with his own feal; and, that it might be the more eafily disposed of, put it into the hands of the Jews. Some authors pretend, that the Khalif this year issued an order for the reparation and enlargement of the temple at Mecca; but that this was ever carried into execution, does not from any Arab author appear. On Tuesday, March 3d, a terrible earthquake happened in Jezira, or Mesopotamia, which, according to Dionysius Telmarensis, demolished three considerable towns x.

The Rathe Khalîf.

THE next year, being the 140th of the Hejra, beginning wandians May 25th, 757, the Khalif Al Mansur sent Abd al Wahab, attempt to his brother Ibrahim Ebn Mohammed's son, with an army of assassinate 70,000 men, to Malatia, or Melitene, a city of Armenia, or, as others will have it, of Cappadocia; where he incamped, during the space of fix months, and in that time resortified the town, that had a little before been difmantled by the Greeks. He also made it a place of arms, deposited a great part of his treasures there, and left in it a garison of 4000 men. He likewise built a castle, or citadel, at Claudias, or Claudiopolis, a neighbouring city of Cappadocia, according to Abu'l-Faraj. But the most remarkable event that happened this year, was the rebellion, or insurrection, of the Rawandians, an impious fect, who, according to Ebn Shobnab, held a metempsychosis, or transmigration of souls, in the city of Al Hashemiyab; of which we shall here beg leave to give our readers a short and succinct relation. The Rawandians were descended, or at least received their name, from one Al Rawand; and have been represented by several of the eastern historians as some of the first who strenuously promoted the interest of the house of Al Abbas in Khorasan. But Abd'allab. the fon of this Al Rawand, having been engaged in some disputes with Abu Moslem, who was very powerful in Khorasan, he came to an open rupture with him; the confequences of which were by no means favourable to Abd allah Ebn Al Rawand, and his adherents, who were intirely defeated and difperfed, and obliged to hide themselves in the most obscure parts of that province. From this time to the present year, after Abu Moslem had been put to death by the Khalif's order, Abd'allah lay concealed; but being now freed from all apprehenfions of his most formidable enemy, he assembled all his followers in the city of Al Hashemiyah, then the residence of the Khalif, and, at the head of them, went in procession round Al Mansur's palace there, in the same manner as the religious Moslems did round the Caaba. By this they gave him to underitand, that they invoked him as their deity, and scrupled not to pay him divine honours. The Khalif being extremely incenfed at fuch an open and bare-faced impiety, ordered an hundred of the principal of them to be imprisoned. This fevere treatment so irritated the rest, that, since Al Mansiar would not be looked upon as a divinity, they were resolved to affaffinate him, and substitute another in his room. In order sup. c. xviii. p. 17. Rases, Hiscan illustrat, ubi sup p 703. Francofurti, 1603. ABU JAAFAR AL TABAR. AL MAKIN, ubi sup. p. 101. ISM. ABULFED. hift. univ. THEOPHAN. ubi fup. p. 261. DIONYS. to facilitate the execution of which design, they took an empty coffin to the prison where their companions were confined, under the pretext of carrying from thence a dead body, and released them all. After which, they went in a body to the Khalif's palace, with a resolution to murder him; but he, being a person of uncommon bravery, tho' he was surprized, with very few people about him, instantly mounted a mule, never a horse in this hurry and confusion being at hand, and immediately advanced towards the mutineers, with an intention to fell his life as dear as possible. In the mean time, Maan Ebn Zaidat, who had kept himself concealed, in order to avoid the Khulif's refentment, he having been one of the chiefs of the Ommiyan faction, seeing the imminent danger Al Mansur was in, sallied out of his retreat, put himself at the head of that prince's attendants, and charged the rebels with fuch fury, that he intirely defeated them. This generofity of Maan was so fignal and unparalleled, that it passed into a proverb amongst the Arabs. The Rawandians were treated so rudely on this occasion, that they were all, to the number of 6000 men, killed upon the spot; and the Khalif delivered from instant death, when his case seemed to be absolutely desperate. However, the affront that had been offered him in his capital city fo chagrined him, that he resolved to build a new city upon the banks of the Tigris, and fix his refidence there. The foundations of which city, known from that time to the present by the name of Baghdad, were laid five years after Abdallah Ebn Al Rawand's revolt, and consequently in the year of the Hejra 145 .

The same year, Al Munsar removed his uncle Saleh Ebn Other Ali from the government of Egypt, and appointed Abd almâlec events of Ebn Yezid to succeed him in that post. Theophanes seems to the 140th have had the Rawandians in view, when he informs us, that year of the some of the Persians, or Maurophori, that is, of the saction of Hejra. the house of Al Abbâs, after they had dissipated their substance, threw themselves headlong from off the tops of towers, and other high buildings, in order to fly from thence to heaven; which strange and amazing conduct he attributes to demoniacal obsession. Some other actions he also relates of them, which to him seemed to proceed from the same source. The ringleaders of this insatuated saction, or sect, to the number of six, he farther tells us, the Khalîs ordered to be put to death, after they had been discovered, at Beræa and Chalcis. It appears probable, from what has been observed to Rases, being struck with terror, applied themselves to the body of St. Vincent, then in their possession, that had wrought many miracles, for its protection, and carried it with them in their flight to the sea-side. These unhappy wretches were afterwards discovered by one Alibohaces, an Arab of distinction, as he was hunting, and the people accompanying him, on the sea-coast of Algarve. As for Abd'alrahman Ebn Meawiyah, after the death of Yusef, he seized upon Corduba, as well as the famous garden in Arabic termed Razafa, and made himself master of all the Mostem territories in Spain. He also cut off Firat Al Hadra, Beye, and other Arab commanders, who had revolted against him, and affembled a considerable force. in order to drive him from the throne. Of their followers he flew great numbers in battle, hanged fome, and put many others to various kinds of deaths; by which means, he perfeetly fettled himself in the Khaltfat of the west, restored the public tranquillity, that had been so long disturbed, and intirely appealed all commotions in the Moslem part of Spain b.

The History of the Arabs. 276 Al Man- THE following year, being the 144th of the Hejra, comfür cuts off mencing April 11th, 761, Hamid Ebn Kabtaba was ordered feveral of by the Khalif Al Mansur to retire from Egypt, and succeeded the dein the government of that fertile and opulent province by Yezid scendants Ebn Hâtem Ebn Abu Safra Al Mohallebi. The same year, Al of Ali Ebn Mansur got into his hands Abd'allah Ebn Al Hasan Ebn Al Abu Tâ-Hosein Ebn Ali Ebn Abu Tâleb, and some others of the sons leb. of Hasan; as he also did Mohammed Ebn Abd'allab Ebn Omar Ebn Othman Ebn Affan, surnamed Al Diybaj Al Mothhab, whom he likewise found means to decoy. Being informed, that Mohammed and Ibrahim, the fons of Abd'allah Ebn Al Hasan, had formed a design to dethrone him, he fent out several parties in quest of them; and, in order to discover the place of their retreat, he took with him Abd'allah, their father, and all his domestics, loaded with irons, into Irâk, examined them there, and afterwards commanded them all to be closely confined. He also treated Mohammed, surnamed Al Diybaj Al Mothhab in the same manner, and ordered him to be scourged with so much severity that he died in prison. After his death, his head was cut off, and exposed in all the principal towns of Khorasan; the populace there being at the same time given to understand, that this was the head of Mohammed Ebn Abd'allab; which step was judged requisite, in order to make them believe that Mohammed Ebn Abd'allah Ebn Al Hasan was destroyed, and thereby cut off all hopes from this prince's faction, which was then very powerful in that country. Theophanes feems to intimate, that the Rawandians occasioned this year fome commotions in Syria. Dionysius Telmarensis relates, that Al Mansur sent Ebn Wahab with a formidable army, attended by a proper number of workmen, to rebuild the city of Melitene in Cappadocia, in the 144th year of the Hejra, or of CHRIST 761, after it had lain in ruins about eight years; tho' that city was rebuilt, or rather refortified, by Abd'al Wabab Ebn Ibrahim Ebn Mohammed, if we will believe Abu'l-Faraj, four years before, as has been already observed. The latter of these historians likewise informs us, that the Khalif carried twelve of the sons of Hosein (Hasan it must have undoubtedly been in the original, all the remaining copies of that author being corrupted here) with him from Medina to Cufa; where he incarcerated them in so strait a room, that they could none of them sit down. The little air, therefore, they were allowed to breathe, foon becoming tainted by the excrements of these unhappy men, with which they were obliged daily to conspurcate and contaminate one another, they in a fort time expired. It does not appear either from the Spanish or Arabic writers, that any

In the 145th year of the Hejra, the Khalif Al Manfar The Khalif laid the foundations of Baghdad, the capital of the Babylonian, Al Manor Chaldean, Irâk, as has been already remarked. To this fur lays he was excited by the affront offered him, or rather the affaf- the founfination intended him, by the Rawandians, in the city of Al dations of Hashemiyab; where they rebelled against him, and besieged Baghdad. him in his palace. Another reason assigned by Abu'l-Faraj for the erection of this metropolis, was, because the place pitched upon for its fituation was at a greater distance from Cufa; the inhabitants of which city had never been faithful to him, but always debauched his army, and promoted to the utmost of their power a desertion amongst his troops. Befides, the people of Irâk, who had perfifted in their fidelity to him, represented, that, by building his capital on a spot of ground near the confluence of the Sorat, or Shat Al Arab, the Euphrates, and the Tigris, it would be in a great measure secured from the insults and attacks of those who should ever have an intention to dispute the Khalifat with him; and that, by being fituated, as it were, in the middle of the tract comprehending the districts of Basra, Cufa, Waset, Mawsel, or Moful, and Sawada, and at no great distance from those cities, it would be plentifully supplied with all forts of provisions from thence, by means of the aforesaid rivers. Having, therefore, chosen, for the site of his new city, a delightful plain on the western bank of the Tigris, and the horoscope of a lucky day and moment, by the unanimous confent of his aftrologers, he ordered the workmen, affembled on this occafion, and drawn from all the politest parts of the Moslem empire, to begin to dig for the foundations of Baghdad. Persian geographer places this metropolis in his third climate, and informs us, that Khofrû, named Anushirwan, gave the plain on which it stands to one of his wives. This princess, who kept great numbers of sheep there, erected on the very spot where Baghdad was afterwards built, a chapel, or oratory, which she dedicated to her principal and favourite idol, called Bagh; and, according to the last-mentioned author, from this event, gave to all the open country forming that particular district the name of Baghdad, i. e. in the Persian tongue, the gift, or present, of Bagh. In process of time, continues the Persian writer, this chapel came to serve for an oratory and retreat to an hermit of uncommon fanctity and austerity of life; who accidentally met with one of the Khalif's officers, that, whilst his master was riding on the banks of the Tigris, full of his new scheme, had strayed a little from the rest of that prince's attendants, and approached the antient structure raised by the princess above-mentioned in honour of Bagh. This officer foon discovered to the hermit Al Manfûr's design; upon which, the holy man told him, that, according to a tradition which had long prevailed in the circumjacent territory, a city was to be built there by a person named Moclas; but that he could not perceive any affinity between this name and those by which the Khalif was called. However, the officer, rejoining his companions, communicated to Al Mansur what he had learned of the hermit, in relation to the erection of a city upon the spot he had chosen; and the Khalif thereupon alighted from his horse, prostrated himself on the earth, and returned God thanks for being pleased to destine him to be the author of so grand a work. All the Mostems then present being vastly surprized at this action, as not being able to discover any similitude or resemblance between the names, or rather furnames, of Abu Jaafar and Al Mansur, applied to the Khalif, and that of Moclas, mentioned by the hermit; Al Mansur, in order to put them out of their pain, immediately told them, that having in his younger years taken one of his nurse's bracelets, to buy with it some provisions for himself and his brothers, who were all then in very necessitous circumstances, she ever after called him Moclas, which was the name of a famous thief, or highwayman, very well known in Khorasan. To this he thought fit to add, that, as God had been pleased to appoint him by this name to carry into execution the design he had formed, he would not chuse any other situation for his new city than the spot he at present found himself upon f.

A fartber the foundation of Baghdad.

But, notwithstanding the authority of the Persian geograaccount of pher, the Arab writers give a very different account of this The spot on which Baghdad at this time stands was a fine verdant plain, according to Abu Jaafar Al Tabari, and had nothing, before the foundation of that city, upon it, but the cell of a Christian monk, called Baghdad. From him, therefore, if this author and Eutychius may be credited, the new city received the name of Baghdad. Others, however, inform us, that this monk, whom they call Dâd, possessed a beautiful garden, adjacent to his cell, of a very confiderable extent; and that the town, whose foundations occupied this, was from thence denominated Baghdad, or the garden of The first city that went by this name was erected by Al Mansur on the western bank of the Tigris; from whence he detached a body of the Mollem troops, under the command of his fon Al Mohdi, to the opposite bank. Here the young prince took post, and fortified the place on which he had incamped with a wall, in order to cover his troops, as well as the workmen employed by his father on the other fide of the river from the incursions of the Persians, who seemed to have taken umbrage at the erection of a new metropolis fo near their frontiers. Hence it came to pass, that the city, or rather that part of the city, foon after built upon the eastern bank of the Tigris, received the name of the camp, or fortrefs, of Al Mohdi; and, in conjunction with the other, on the opposite bank, formed the city of Bagbdad. The former of these, as having its streets paved with stones, was also denominated Rusta; a name that was likewise applied to other places of note in Jezira and Irak. The Khalif had a superb and magnificent palace both in the eaftern and western parts of the town, which went under the appellation of the house of the Khalifat, or the imperial palace; tho' the former, which, by way of eminence, was stiled the garifon, or the royal inclosure, was much more grand and stately than the latter. The eastern palace was furrounded on the land-fide by a femicircular wall, that had fix gates; the principal of which seems to have been that called the gate of the prefects, whose entrance was generally kissed by the princes and embassadors that came to the Khalif's court. Some writers are greatly mistaken, when they make Baghdad to have occupied the spot on which the antient Babylon stood; since the former seems to have been erected upon the foundations of Seleucia, and to have been divided by the Tigris in the same manner that the latter was by the Euphrates. Besides, there is a village, according to the oriental geographers, upon the Euphrates, called Babel, confiderably to the north of Baghdad, near which the traces of a very large city, supposed with greater reason to have been Babylon, are still to be seen; whereas nothing of that kind appears in the neighbourhood of Baghdad. The deflection of the gates of the interior from those of the exterior city induced the Arabs, according to Abulfeda, to denominate the place Zauraa, that is, oblique, crooked, &c. tho' others pretend, that the obliquity of the Kebla of its principal mosque gave this metropolis that name. For, the city, at least that part of it erected on the western bank of the Tigris, was intirely round; the Khalif's palace being, as it were, in the centre of it, and having annexed to it the great mosque, whose Kebia was oblique, insomuch that the Moslems performing their devotions here turned their faces towards the gate of Basra. With respect to the eastern part of Baghdad, we find it intimated by the oriental writers, that it consisted of an in-Dig tizes by Gterior (e

terior and exterior town; each of which was furrounded by a wall; and consequently, that the eastern city, or principal part of Baghdad, had appertaining to it both an interior and exterior wall. For some time, after the foundations were laid, the work went on but flowly. For, Abu Jagfar, intending to demolish Al Madayen, that had formerly been the residence of the kings, or Shahs, of Persia, surnamed Khosrû, and to make use of the materials of the buildings in the erection of his new city, upon confideration, found that he could not advance very briskly in that demolition; as the stones were of so wonderful a fize, and the towers and walls of fo furprizing a height, that it would require much time, as well as a very large expence, to level with the ground all the fabrics there, and transport all the materials, of which those noble edifices were composed, from thence to Baghdad. fides, he confidered, that it would be no small reproach to him to have it faid, that he could not finish the metropolis upon which his workmen were then employed, without destroying such a pile of buildings as could scarce be paralleled in the whole world; and this induced him at last intirely to abandon his first design. To which we may add, that the demolition of Al Madayen, had he finally resolved upon it. would have been not a little retarded by the commotions that happened in his empire this very year; of which we have been obliged with the following accounts by some of the best Arab historians f.

Soon after the Khalif Al Mansur began to lay the foundations of Baghdad, in the 145th year of the Hejra, Mohammed Ebn Abd'allah Ebn Al Hasan Ebn Al Hosein Ebn Ali Ebn Abu Tâleb, whose head the partisans of the house of Al Abbas had pretended to expose in all the principal places of Khorasan, the preceding year, was proclaimed Khalif at Medina, and assumed the furname of Al Mohdi. In order to support his pretensions to the Khalifat, he assembled an army of 100,000 men; but, upon the approach of Isa Ebn Mûsa, whom Al Mansûr sent against him, the greatest part of his forces dispersed of their own accord, and the rest retired to the deep ditch, or intrenchment, which the prophet himself had ordered to be dug round Medina, by the advice of Salman, the Persian, for the security of the city, and which Mohammed Ebn Abd allah Ebn Al Hasan. on this occasion, caused to be immediately repaired. However, receiving advice, that Isa was marching against him, he drew his troops out of the intrenchment, dismissed as many of them as were unwilling to engage, and with the rest, amounting to about 300 men, came to a general action with the Khalif's forces; but being overthrown, he was so closely pursued by Isa, that the latter, at the head of his horse, entered the town, and, without much difficulty, made himself master of it. He also put Mohammed Ebn Abd'allah Ebn Al Hasan himself to the sword, and cut off his head; which he sent as a present to Al Mansûr, who immediately ordered it to be carried in triumph through the principal provinces of the empire. Mohammed Ebn Abd'allah Ebn Al Hasan, who pretended to dispute the Khalifat with Al Mansûr, is said to have lost his life at Medina, the present year, in the month of Ramadân E.

THE same year, Ibrahim Ebn Abd'allah Ebn Al Hasan Ebn Ibrahim Al Hosein Ebn Ali Ebn Abu Tâleb caused himself to be saluted Ebn Ab-Khalif at Basra, and obliged the people of that city to take d'allah an oath of fidelity to him. He likewise seized upon Persia Ebn Al and Abwaz; and, in order to maintain himself in the posses. Hasan, fion of the provinces that had submitted to him, he also took who rethe field with an army of 100,000 men. But the Khalif's bels, is nephew, Isa Ebn Mûsa, at last, after the deseat of Moham-likewise med Ebn Abd allah Ebn Al Hasan, coming up with him, engaged and killed him, put his forces to flight, and dispersed them in such a by Isa. against him. As for Ibrahim himself, he perished in the action; after the end of which, his head was cut off, and fent by the general to Al Mansûr, who received it with all possible demonstrations of joy. Thus the Khalif, by his prudence and bravery, or rather the valour and conduct of I/a, appealed those commotions that threatened destruction to his family, in the year of the Hejra 145, which enabled him to resume the great work he had begun on the banks of the Tigris, and to give law to all his domestic enemies that had for some time been meditating a revolt h.

WE must not forget to observe, that the great success which The Turks attended Al Mansar's arms this glorious campaign, has been make an mentioned by Theophanes; who informs us, that the troops irruption employed by that prince in the reduction of the rebels to his into Arobedience, whom he calls inhabitants of the desart, amounted menia. to about 80,000 men. He likewise relates, that the Turks, passing the Caspian straits, made an irruption into Armenia, killing many of the natives of that country, and taking a confiderable number of them prisoners, this present year.

Buents of the year 146.

THE following year, being the 146th of the Hejra, commencing March 21st, 763, there was a profound calm almost throughout the whole Moslem empire; which enabled the Khalif, through the course of this year, to continue, without interruption, the building of Baghaad. However, if we will believe Theophanes, the Turks, in the beginning of it, made a fecond irruption, through the Caspian straits and Iberia, into the Mostern territories; but being met by a body of Arab troops, an engagement enfued, in which many on both fides were sain. We are likewise informed by the same writer, that Ifa Ebn Mûfa, having been before appointed to fucceed the Khalif, was, by the following artifice, deprived of his reversional right to the Khalifat. Al Mansur bribed his physician to give Isa a violent and soporiferous sternutatory medicine, in order to cure him of the megrim and vertigo, with which he was grievously troubled. This, continues our author, produced the defired effect; depriving Isa, for three days, of his fenses, and rendering him intirely incapable of holding the reins of government; which being observed by the Mossem nobles and generals, who had been assembled by Al Mansur for that purpose, they unanimously agreed to call Al Mohdi, the Khalif's fon, to the succession, after his father's death. However, Ifa, afterwards coming to himself, and recovering the use of his reason, received a large quantity of gold from the Khalif; which he confidered as a fort of recompence for the injury that had been offered him. That some particular circumstances mentioned in this story might have really happened, we shall not take upon us absolutely to deny; but that the whole relation is strictly true, we are by no means disposed to believe, since we are assured by Abu Jaafar Al Tabari, that Isa was removed from the succession after the death of Al Mansur, the right to which had before been granted him, and declared the apparent heir to the crown after Al Mohdi, the following year, not without much fouabbling and Dionyfius Telmarenfis writes, that there was a dreadful inundation of the Tigris, which almost intirely destroyed the city of Moful, and all the neighbouring towns, in the month of March, this present year k.

THE next year, which was the 147th of the Hojra, Al Abd'allah Manfür got Abd'allah Ebn Ali, his uncle, who had rebelled destroyedby against him, and been overthrown by Abu Meslem near Nisthe Khalif, bis, in Mejopotamia, into his hands, and destroyed him in the following manner. The Khalif invited him to his court, fwearing at the same time that he would not hurt him. This induced Abd'allah to leave the city of Basra, whither he had retired, and lived in obscurity with his brother Soliman, and come immediately to Al Mansur's residence. Soon after his arrival, the Khalif ordered a house to be built for him, whose foundations should confist chiefly of falt. Which being done, a vast quantity of water was, by his order, poured upon them. This occasioned the fall of that house upon Abd'allah Ebn Ali, who was thereby crushed to pieces soon after he had taken posfession of it 1.

THE same year, according to Theophanes, some disturb- Other conances happened in the defart of Palmyra, tho' the particular tingencies circumstances attending these troubles he has not handed down about the to us. The Khalif likewise, if we will believe this writer, Same time, ordered all the crosses upon the tops of churches to be taken down, would not permit the Christians to hold nightly meetings, nor to teach their children to read, and discovered a strong disposition to have proceeded to a formal persecution. About the same time, according to Dionysius Telmarensis, there was a grievous murrain in Mesopotamia, that proved fatal to vast numbers of cattle there. Soon after the death of Abd'allah Ebn Ali Ebn Abd'allah Ebn Al Abbas, Abu Abd'allah Jaafar Ebn Ali Ebn Al Hosein Ebn Ali Ebn Abu Tâleb died at Medina. It has been already observed, that Al Mansur called his fon Al Mohdi, after him, to the succession, in prejudice to his nephew I/a, who had been before declared his immediate successor, but was now appointed to mount the throne after Al Mobdi, tho' not without some difficulty, likewise this vear m.

In the 148th year of the Hejra, the workmen employed in The workthe erection of Baghdad continued their operations; and that men still with so much diligence and success, that they had well-nigh employed put the last hand to the new city. This year, fix stars seemed at Baghto fall from heaven, in the month of the latter Canun, according to Dionysius Telmarensis; who likewise informs us, that Severus, bishop of Amida, died on the 14th day of the month Adar, and was buried in a monastery where he had refided a confiderable time. We must beg leave to observe here, that the Syrian month called the latter Canun answers.

Baghdâd finished.

THE following year, being the 149th of the Hejra, the famous city of Baghdad upon the Tigris, the capital of the Moslem empire, was finished. That part of it, situated upon the western bank of the Tigris, is said to have cost the Khalif 4,000,000 dinârs; tho', according to Abu'l-Faraj, he actually demolished part of the White Tower, or citadel, at Al Madâyen, and ordered the materials procured from thence to becarried to the spot he had marked out for the site of his new However, finding that the demolition of all the buildings of Al Madayen, and the transportation of the materials belonging to them to Baghdad, would be more expensive than he at first apprehended, he abandoned the design he had formed. The city, when finished, was perfectly round, shut up by a double wall, and flanked with a confiderable number of towers. The castle, or citadel, was in the middle of it, and commanded every part of the town. Its gates were disposed in such a manner, that those of the first wall were in a floping and oblique position in respect of those of the second; which disposition, according to some authors, gave this place the name of Zaura, or Zauraa, i. e. oblique, crooked, &c. tho', if others may be credited, it received that name from the obliquity of the Kebla in its principal mosque. feems to be intimated by Sharif Al Edriss, that the eastern city was not built till the Khalifat of Al Mohdi; tho' we are of opinion, with the celebrated Golius, that this town was begun, and even in a manner finished, before the death of Al Mansier. The palace in the western town was called the palace of Al Mansûr, as that in the eastern city went under the denomination of the palace of Al Mohdi. The Khalif stiled his new metropolis Medinat Al Salam, the city of peace, either by allusion to the name of Jerusalem, or because, at the time when it was finished, all the commotions in his empire were appealed, and almost every nation in Asia had submitted, or was become tributary, to him o.

To which they add, that Kaikaus, the second king of Persia of the second dynasty, who could have been no other than Cush, the son of Nimrod, according to these authors, constructed the temples, and the other most antient public buildings, of the place P.

WE are told by Abu Jaafar Al Tabari, who has been fol-Whence it lowed herein by Eutychius and Al Makin, that this city re-derived its ceived its name from that of the monk, or hermit, Baghdad, name, acin whose garden, and part of the territory adjoining to it, the cording to foundations were first laid; tho' others pretend, that this the Arab monk's name was not Baghdad, but Dad. Be this, however, writers. as it will, Baghdad seems to have been raised out of the ruins of Ctesiphon, as well as those of Seleucia, and was not only denominated by Al Mansur, after the erection of it, Medinat Al Salam, or Medinat Affalam, but likewise Dar Al Salam, or Dar Affalam; which appellation was plainly of the same import with the former. Hence it was frequently called by the Syrians Medinat Selama, and by the Greeks Irenopolis; both of which are equivalent to the Medinat Assalam of the Arabs. We find two opinions concerning the reason of the name Baghdad mentioned by Abulfeda. According to the first, Bagh, in the Persic language, signified a garden, and Dad was the proper name of the man on whose garden was erected Al Mansûr's new metropolis; of both which words the name Baghdad is apparently formed. If we will pay any regard to the fecond, the spot on which this city stood was denominated Baghdad by an eunuch, fent by Khofra king of Persia thither, from an idol named Bagh, worshipped in those parts of the east, and the present made him by that prince of the ground on which his temple stood; a gift, or prefent, in the Persic tongue, being expressed by Dad. The same author observes, that Al Mansur derived the appellation of Medinat Assalam, which he conferred upon his new capital, from Vadi Assalam, the torrent of peace, a name frequently applied by the orientals to the Deglata, or the Tigris, on whose banks that capital The Nestorians, who were in great favour with the Khalifs, transferred their patriarch's see, fixed before at Ctesiphon and Seleucia, to Baghdad; and the Greeks, likewise, according to Nilus Doxapatrius, had a patriarch there. vailed upon the Khalif to expel John, the Greek metropolitan, from thence, in the year of the Hejra 300. And John, the Nestorian patriarch, prevented Ignatius Barchichi, the Jacobite Mafrian, from fettling at Baghdad, about 94 years after; tho' the Khalif then permitted a bishop, subject to the Mafrian, to reside there. However, Bar Hebraus, the Jacobite Mafrian, relates, that he spent the summer at Baghdad, and ordained four deacons and a bishop there, in the year of Christ 1265; as likewise, that Jacobite bishops were before that time permitted to fix their residence in this city; and that Lazarus, one of them, was deposed by Dionystus, the Jacobite patriarch, whose conduct in this particular was approved of by the Khalif Al Mamun, in the year of our LORD 829. This great city was the feat of the Khalifs of the house of Al Abbas, excepting only two or three, from its foundation to the year of the Hejra 656, when it was taken by the Tartars. Of which furprizing revolution, and the principal circumstances attending it, our readers will meet with a full and ample account in the fequel of this hiftory 9.

Baghdâd different times by the Tartars, Turkmans, Persians, and Turks.

BAGHDAD, the capital of the Mostem empire for near 500 possessed at years, remained in the hands of the Tartars, or Mogals, to the year of the Hejra 795, or of CHRIST 1392, when Timur Begh, or Tamerlain the Great, took it for the first time from Soltan Ahmed Ebn Awis, or Sultan Ahmed Ebn Weis: who, being incapable of making head against the numerous forces brought by Timur, after he had subjugated Persia, to form the fiege of this city, found himself obliged to send all his baggage over the Tigris, to crofs that river with all his troops, and, in fine, to abandon his capital to the conqueror. He was, however, hotly purfued by one of the enemy's detachments to the plain of Kerbela, where several skirmishes happened, and a confiderable number of men on both fides were killed. Notwithstanding which, he at last, by his conduct and bravery, escaped the fury of his pursuers, took refuge in the territories of the Greek emperor, and afterwards found means to reposses himself of the city of Bagbdad. There he remained till the year of the Hejra 803, when the city was taken a second time by Timur; who, never-

However, afterwards returning, he was chased from thence by Kara Yusef, the Turkman, in the year of the Hejra 815; who likewise reduced Baghdad a second time. and finally expelled from thence Abu Becr, the fon of Miran Shah; securing that capital to his family, in which it remained till the time of Hasan, or Hassan, surnamed Uzun, which, in Turkish, fignifies long, commonly called by the Europeans Usun Cassan, a Turkman prince, who drove the descendants of Kara Tusef from thence, in the year of the Hejra 875, or of our LORD 1470. The princes of this family maintained themselves in possession of Raghdad till the year of the Hejra 914. or of CHRIST 1508, when Shab Ismael, surnamed Sufi, or Sófi, the first prince of the royal family that reigned in Irân, or Persia, till the dethroning of the late Shah Hosein, made himself master of it. From that time, for above an hundred years, this city continued to be a bone of contention between the Turks and the Persians, having been the subject of several bloody wars between those two powerful nations. It was taken by Soliman I. surnamed the Magnificent; and retaken by Shah Abhas, king of Persia; but being at last besieged by Amurath, or Morad IV. with a formidable army, it was finally obliged to surrender to him, in the year of grace 1638, and has remained in the hands of the Turks to this very day.

It may not be amis farther to observe here, that this city, Some farwhich has always been so celebrated amongst the Moslems, ther rehad several other names besides those already taken notice of markable. under the denomination of Karkh; tho' this name feems to have been more particularly applied to that part of the western town to which Al Mansur commanded the market, that had before been kept in the neighbourhood of his palace, in order to remove the rabble to some spot at a greater distance from him, to be transferred. Here he likewise had a bridge constructed over the Tigris, to keep open more effectually a communication between this and Al Mobdi's part of the town. The name of Karkh was afterwards rendered famous by the aforesaid market, which occasioned the erection of a constderable number of buildings there. The Dar Al Khalifa, that is, the house, or palace, of the Khalif, in the western town, called Kafr Al Mansûr, the palace of Al Mansûr, as well as the other named Kafr Al Mohdi, the palace of Al Mohdi, made a very good figure. There was likewise a palace in Baghdad sufficiently grand, known by the name of Kasr Al Hasan Ebn Zohal, the palace of Hasan Ebn Zohal, besides several public buildings erected by the Khalif Al Mostanser Billa, and particularly the famous college founded by that prince, denominated by the Arabs Al Madrasah Al Mostanseriah, which, for the beauty and elegance of its structure, the number of students it contained, as well as the learned men it produced, and the ample revenues fettled upon it, has been represented by Abu'l-Faraj as excelling, in his time, every other house of learning in the then known world. Amongst other students here, there were 300, who applied themselves intirely to the study of the Mohammedan law, according to the decisions of the authors of the four chief fects of the Sannites, or orthodox Moslems; every one of which sects had a professor in this college, who had a monthly falary fettled upon him, for instructing 75 young men committed to his care in the principles of the fect to which he belonged. Every one of those students had likewise a very handsome daily allowance of all kinds of provisions affigned him. There was also a bath set apart for the use of the students here, and a physician maintained at the Khalif's expence, who visited them every morning, to see whether any of them stood in need of his assistance. The college had also a kitchen, a cellar, and an apothecary's shop, belonging to it, that the prelectors, and the young men educated therein, might be taken proper care of both in fickness and in health. With regard to the four orthodox fects abovementioned, it may not be improper to remark, that, notwithstanding some differences as to legal conclusions in their interpretation of the Korân, and matters of practice, they were generally acknowleged to be orthodox in radicals, or matters of faith, and capable of falvation, and had each of them their feveral stations, or oratories, in the temple of Mecca. The founders founders of these sects are still looked upon as the great masters of jurisprudence, and are faid to have been men of great devotion and felf-denial, well verfed in the knowledge of those things which belong to the next life, and to man's right conduct here, and directing all their knowledge to the glory of This is Al Ghazâli's encomium of them, who thinks it derogatory to their honour, that their names should be used by those who, neglecting to imitate the other virtues which make up their character, apply themselves only to attain their skill, and follow their opinions in matters of legal practice. Besides Al Mostanser Billa's college, there was another samous college and gymnasium at Baghdad, sounded by Moez-addin Abu Ifeta Mâlec Sbâb, the third Sultan, or Soltan, of the Seljuks of Irân; and another erected by his prime minister, or Wazîr, Nezâm Al Molk; the first of which was called Al Madrasah, or Al Madrasat Al Hanîsiat, and the other Al Madrasat Al Nezãmiat. In the vast number of learned men born at Baghdad, may be reckoned the famous Ahmed Ebn Hanbal, the author of the fourth sect of the Sonnites, of whom we shall speak more fully hereafter. Amongst the persons famed for literature, educated here, may be ranked Kawam-addin Yusef Ebn Hasan Al Hoseini Al Rûmi, who wrote a treatise in Persic concerning the power and prerogatives of princes; Ahmed Ebn Shamsi Al Hadi, who wrote in Turkish the lives of several oriental poets; Abu'l Abbas Ebn Hamdun Al Kateb, who obliged his countrymen with a choice collection of historical narrations, and various elegances, in Arabic; Moaffek addin, who published a commentary upon Aristotle's piece de auditione naturali, in Arabic; Mohammed Ebn Soliman Fodhûli, the author of a poem in Persic concerning cordial friendship; Ebn Najjar Mobeb addin Mohammed Ebn Mahmûd Al Baghdâdi, who composed a history that bore the title of Tarikh Ebn Najjar Al Baghdadi; Ebn Haithemah Ebn Zehr Al Nessai; Abu Sahal Haithem Ebn Jemil Abu'l Barakat, a physician of Baghdad fent for by the Khin of Khowaraxm; Abu Kerim Sa'id Ebn Al Talmith, a Christian physician of Baghdad, who obtained from the Khalif Naser, or Nasr, the title of Amino'ddawla; besides many others, whose names we are not permitted to enumerate by the limits prescribed us here. From what has been faid, we may conclude, that, for feveral ages, Baghdad must have abounded more with Moslem doctors, and other learned men of various kinds, than any other place in the Mehammedan dominions, except Mecca and Medina. It was also extremely populous, and contained several forts, or castles, capable of making a tolerable defence, that derived their names from their founders; fuch were Tak Al Harani, Tak Al Atrif, Tak Al Aki, and others; the principal of which Mod. Tak Al Asma, so called from Asma, the Khalif Al-Manfür's daughter, erected on the eastern bank of the Tigris, in that part of the city to which was more particularly applied the name of Rufafa, or Al Rufafa. One of the gates likewife of Barhdad, that was fortified in a peculiar manner, received the appellation of Tak, or Taka. The language spoken here was one of the most polite and elegant dialects of the Arabic, as there was a greater concourse of nobility and learned men, that excelled in many branches of literature, for feveral ages, in this city, than in almost any other of the east. After what has been faid of the flourishing state of Bagbdad, for so considerable a period of time, it will not appear frange, that these should have been a mint here, in which a vast number of dirhêms and dinârs were struck. At present, tho' it groams under the Turkish yoke, Bagbdad is a celebrated empory and frontier of the Ottoman empire on the fide of Persia, to which not only many merchants, but likewise an incredible number of passengers, travelling from Natalia, Syria, Palestine, and Egypt, into Persia, continually resort. It is the seat of a Palha, to whom every one of those passengers pays a fort of tribute, or toll, which, in the whole, amounts to a very large annual fum. The religion professed here is the Mobammedan, the various sects of Christians are tolerated, of which the Nesterians, who have a church, bear the greatest The facebites and Armenians have no place of public worship, but go to the convent of the Capuchins, who administer the sacraments to them. There are several Jews likewife that relide constantly at Baghdad, but many more who come thither annually, in order to visit the sepulchre of the prophet Ezekiel, which is faid to stand about a day and a half's journey from the city. The Pasha of Baghdad is generally a Visir. The proper garison, about the middle of the last century, consisted of only 300 Janisaries, commanded by an Aga; tho' the Pasha, whose house stood then upon the bank of the river, and made a good appearance, had under his command a body of 6 or 700 horse. There were also then about 3 or 400 Spahi's, commanded by two Aga's, befides another body of horse, under two Aga's, that went under the denomination of men of courage. In fine, the Ottoman troops at that time in and about the town amounted to about 3000 The city then was 1500 paces long, 7 or 800 broad, and about three miles in circumference. The walls were of brick, and strengthened with towers that resembled bassions: upon which the Pasha had mounted 60 pieces of cannon; the largest of which were not above five or fix pounders. There were four gates, three on the land-fide, and one upon the river; over which there was a bridge of thirty-three boats, or rather pieces of timber, brought from Moful and other places, astened together on goats skins, blown like bladders. The raftle, or citadel, was in the city, near one of the gates called Al Mazzan, on the north fide; standing partly on the river, and furrounded by a fingle wall, adorned with turrets; upon which were planted, tho' without carriages, about 150 pieces of cannon. The Passa was affisted, in the civil government of the place, by a Kadi, who represented the Musti, and a The Pasha was assisted, in the civil government Tefterdar, who collected the revenues of the Grand Signor. There were five mosques, of which two were tolerably well built, and adorned with Duomo's; covered with varnished tiles of different colours; ten caravansera's, or inns, two of which were proper enough for the reception of travellers; and feveral Bazars, or market-places, arched, to enable the merchants to bear the heats, and watered three or four times a day, for the same purpose. Commerce then flourished to $ considerable degree here, tho' not so much as when the city was in the hands of the king of Persia; Sultan Amuruth IV. upon his making himself master of it, having put most of the richest merchants settled there to death. Many of the Shiites, or followers of Ali, were fettled there, being so simple as to believe, that their great Imâm lived at Baghdad. The pilgrims that visit Merca by land are obliged to pass through Bagbdad, and every one of them pays a tribute, or toll, equivalent to four piastres, to the Passa; which branch of the revenue brings annually a very confiderable fum into the coffers of the Grand Signar. Tavernier informs us, that the Rafedi's, or heretics, here, who feem to have been a branch of the Shiites, in his time, were so rigid and strict, that they would by no means either eat or drink with a Christian, and scarce with a Sonnite himself. In his time, the inhabitants of Bagbdad consisted of about 15,000 souls. The latitude of this city was defined by the astronomers, who lived in the days of the Khalif Al Maman, to be 33° 20'; and by some of the modern geographers and astronomers, 33° 15'. But, for a more particular description of the present state of this celebrated city, we must beg leave to refer our curious readers to the last-mentioned author, who, in that point, will give them full and ample fatisfaction?.

The same year, Abd'alrahmân Ebn Moawiyah, the grandson of Heshâm, who had fettled himself upon the Mossem throne in Spain, and been acknowleged lawful Khalif of the west by the Mohammedans there, began to erect the great mosque at Cordova, or Corduba; which, after it was finished, during the continuance of this monarchy, was highly revered by all the Moffems in that part of the world. Al Mansar's arms having been attended with all imaginable fuccess, the preceding years, his subjects, through the whole course of this, enjoyed the sweets of peace, without the least discontinuance or interruption t.

The famous Abu Hanîfa dies.

THE next year, being the 150th of the Hejra, beginning February 6th, 767, the famous Abu Hanifa Al Nooman Ebn Thâbet, the founder of the first of the four chief sects of the Sonnites, who was born at Cafa in the 18th year of the Hejra, departed this life. He died in prison at Baghdad, where he had been confined, because he refused to be made Kadi, or judge; on which account he was very hardly dealt with by his superiors, yet could not be prevailed on, either by threats or ill treatment, to undertake the charge; chufing rather to be punished by them than by God, says Al Ghazali; who adds, that when he excused himself from accepting the office, by alleging that he was unfit for it, being asked the reason, he replied, If I speak the truth, I am unfit; but if I tell a lie, a liar is not fit to be a judge. It is faid, that he read over the Korân, in the prison where he died, no less than 7000 times. The doctrine, or tenets, propagated by him, as well as the fect of which he was the author, went amongst the Sonnites by the name of Hanîfiah, or Hannîfiyah. The Hanîfites are called by an Arabian writer the followers of reason, and those of the other three orthodox fects followers of tradition; the former being principally guided by their own judgment in their decisions, and the latter adhering more tenaciously to the traditions of Mohammed. The feet of Abu Hanifa heretofore obtained chiefly in Irâk, but now generally prevails amongst the Turks and Tartars. His doctrine was brought into great credit by Abu Yusef, chief justice under the Khalifs Al Hadi and Harûn Al Rashid. We must not forget to observe, that Abd'allah Bathalmids wrote a treatise concerning the divisions, or different fentiments, of the Hanifites; which, amongst the admirers of that fect, is held in good repute ".

ABOUT the 151st year of the Hejra, as should seem from The Kha-Abu'l-Faraj, who makes this event to have happened a little life cured after the Khalif Al Mansur had fixed his residence at Baghdad, of a dan-Jeyürjeyus, or George, Ebn Bakhtishua Al Jondisaburi, a samous gerous illphysician, and a Christian, was brought to court, in order to cure ness by a the Khalif of a want of appetite and indigestion, under which Christian he at that time laboured. The physician, attended by his physician. scholar, or pupil, Isa Ebn Shahlatha, being introduced to the Khalif, discoursed with him both in Persic and Arabic, with great fluency and elegance; assuring him at the same time, after he had received from him an account of his disorder, that, with the divine affishance, he could cure him. The Khalif, charmed with the gracefulness of his person, the politeness of his language, and, above all, the affurances he had given him, ordered a fumptuous and costly vest to be put upon him, assigned him one of the best apartments in his palace, and commanded his chamberlain Rabi to treat him with the highest marks of respect. George having in a short time effected a cure upon him, Al Mansur one day asked him whether he was married? To which the physician replied, that he had for his wife an old woman, who was extremely infirm, and not able to rife from her seat. Upon this, the Khalif ordered Salem, one of his eunuchs, to take with him three beautiful Greek girls, and a present of 3000 dinars, to George's apartment; who, not finding him at home, left them with Ifa Ebn Shahlatha, his scholar, there. But George, upon his return, after reprimanding I/2 for receiving them, returned them to the Khalif; who fending for him, and asking him, with stat surprize, the reason of so strange and unparalleled a conduct, the phyfician told him, without any scruple or hesitation, that it was not lawful for a Christian to have more than one wife at a time. This increasing Al Mansar's astonishment, he dismissed him with uncommon expressions of esteem, and afterwards heaped his favours with greater profusion upon him. About the same time, the Khalif sent three bodies of his troops, under the command of his brother Al Abbas, governor of Mesopetamia, Hasan Ebn Kabtaba, and Ebn Asad, to penetrate into the imperial territories. These forces were composed of Sindians, Alans, Khozars, Khazars, or Khazarites, Medes, Persians, Akulites, Arabs, Khofanites, Turks, and others; but did not meet with great success in their expeditions. The Khalif himself, at the head of a powerful army, confifting of 80,000 men, moved from Amida, Amid, or Edeffa, Tur-Abdin, and Tela-Kom, in the beginning of the campaign; and made an irruption into the northern parts of the Roman empire. the year 151,

Some other THE same year, a complaint being brought before Al Manevents of far against the patriarch George, by the bishops who had been deprived by him of their authority at the fynod of Sarug, and he being by them accused of exercising tyranny upon the Syrian clergy, the Khallf ordered him to be put in irons, and gave his accusers leave to substitute another patriarch in his room. Upon which, by their unanimous suffrages, they advanced to that high dignity David bishop of Dara; whose lenity and moderation might justly have intituled him to the profoundest respect and veneration of all the Mesopotamian clergy, over whom he prefided; tho' none of them, except those by whom he had been elected, paid any regard to his orders and decifrons; he having been not a little blamed for being to active against his predecessor. Hence a schilm arose amongst the Jacobites; some of whom considered David as their patriarch, others George, and others acknowledged no patriarch at all. With regard to Tur-Abdin, mentioned above, it may not be improper to remark, that the natives call it simply Tur, which in their language signifies a mountain; and that it is a confiderable tract in the neighbourhood of the Tigris, which formerly contained a pretty large number of towns and monasteries, all under the jurisdiction of a bishop, called the bishop of Tur-Abdin. His diocese was, in process of time, split into several others, viz. Salacha, or Salakh, Beth-Manuem, &c. and especially after Saba was translated from the fee of Salacha to the patriarchate of Tur-Abdin, and fet up in oppofition to Ignatius VI. the lawful patriarch of the Jacobites; which produced a schism that continued from the year of CHRIST 1364 to the year 1494. We must also beg leave to observe, that the Nestorian convent on the Curd, or Gordyman, mountains was reduced to afties, together with all the people therein, as they were celebrating their annual festival on the spot where Noah's ark had rested, in the usual manner, by lightning, the preceding year . THE following year, being the 152d year of the Higra, The Khathe celebrated Christian physician, George Ebn Bakhtishua Al lif takes a Jondisabliri, who had been so serviceable to the Khalts Al new physi-Mansar in the recovery of his health, was himself taken ex-cian, and tremely ill, and his life thought to be in no finall danger. rebuilds a Upon which, he asked the Khalif's leave to return home, in fortress, in order to see his fon and family, and to be buried with his the year brothers, in case it should please God to put a period to his days. Al Manfür defired him first, by way of reply to his petition, to embrace Mohammedism; and, in that case, promised him a certain admission into paradife, after his death: to which George made answer, "O emperor of the faithful. " I am determined to go to the place where my ancestors re-" fide in the other world, whether that be paradife or hell." This excited the Khalif's laughter, who thereupon returned, "But finge you have been with me, I have been free from the maladies with which I was before afflicted; how, there-" fore, can I part with you?" To this the physician replied, that he should leave behind him his scholar Isa, who was a very skilful professor of physic, and would take all possible care of his majesty's health. The Khalif then dismissed George, with a present of 10,000 dinars, and sent an eunuch with him, to conduct him to his friends and relations, with orders to have his body conveyed to them, in case he should die upon the road. However, he arrived at home fafe, under the eunuch's conduct. After his departure, Al Mansar sent for Isa, whom, upon converling with him, he found to be a person of profound erudition, and therefore subflituted him in his master's place. I/a, after his advancement, began to grow contentions, and to behave in a very infolent manner, particularly to the Christian bishops and metropolitans, of whom he would have exacted large fums of money. Attending the Khalif once to Nisibis, or Nisibin, he had the affurance to write to the metropolitan of that city to fend him the most valuable part of his confecrated veffels, or church-plate; threatening him with his refentment, in case of refusal; and, in his letter, making use of the following remarkable words: " Are you ignorant " of my interest with the Khalif? Do not you know that on " me his health intirely depends, so that I can make him fick or well as I please?" This letter Cyprian, the metropolitan of Nistbin, found an opportunity of reading first to Al Rabi, Al Manfar's chamberlain, and afterwards to the Khalif himself. Al Mansur, after he had received this intelligence, finding how he was abused, first deprived Isa of all the valuable presents he had made him, and then, after a proper castigation, discharged him his service. The same year, that is, the 152d year of the Hejra, died Yezid Ebn Hâtem, who had been made by Al Mansûr governor of Egypt. He was succeeded in his post by Abd'allah Ebn Ali Ebn Abd'alrabman Ebn Moawiyah Ebn Hadij. About the same time, likewise died Maan Ebn Zâyada, an Arab of so brave and generous a disposition, that, amongst his countrymen, it passed into a proverb. The Khalif first appointed him his lieutenant of Yaman, afterwards of Aderbijan, and lastly of Khorasan. Al Mansar is also said by Dionysius Telmarensis to have erected a new fortress, called by that author Arsamosata, upon the river Arsanias, either this or the preceding year. But Dionysius, in what he advances here, must undoubtedly be mistaken. For this town, which likewise went under the name of Armofata and Arfamote, has been taken notice of by Pliny, Ptolemy, Tacitus, and Polybius, as wellas by a coin of M. Aurelius, in the Medicean collection at Florence, struck several hundred years before the Khalifat of Abu Jaafar Al Mansûr, which has been published by the learned Lucas Holftenius. The Arabs, therefore, did not found, but rebuild, or rather repair, the place at present under consideration. However, it may be fairly inferred from Dionysius, that Cellarius is guilty of a mistake, when he places Armosata, or Arsamosata, at a great distance from the Arfanias. The Kbalif's workmen, foon after they begun their operations, were struck with terror at the fight of a body of the imperial troops incamped on the other fide the river, and immediately abandoned their work; which gave the enemy an opportunity of demolishing what they had done. However, the Arabs foon returned, refumed their work, and finished the fortress in such a manner as to put it out of danger of any future infult. Abd'alrahman Ebn Moawiyab still maintained himself, notwithstanding the power of Al Mansar, and the success that had attended his arms in the east, upon the Moslem throne in Spain y.

to revenge an irruption which the imperial forces had made in-waded by a to Armenia the preceding year. He advanced first into Isauria, Moslem and from thence marched to a fortress called Syce, which he army, come firaitly belieged. Advice of this being brought to the em manded by peror, he fent orders to Michael, Manes, and Bardanes, three one Baof his commanders, to move with a body of Bucellarians nake. and Armenians, and other troops drawn out of some of the eastern provinces, against the Arabs, and force them to raise The imperial generals, in pursuance of the orders they had received, assembled their forces, and, in conjunction with a fleet fitted out by the citizens of Cibyra, that had entered the port of Syce, immediately advanced to the relief of the place. Banaka, being apprized of their approach, made the neceffary dispositions to engage them; which at last he did, and gave them a total overthrow, putting a great number of them to the sword. 'Tis remarkable, that the Arabs, in this action, made the first onset with the same outcries and howlings that the Turks do, in order to intimidate the enemy, when they begin the attack, at this day. After this defeat, Banaka, who had made himself terrible to the Christians, by the depredations he had committed in the imperial territories, and the captives he had carried off from thence, the foregoing year, ravaged all the neighbouring district in a dreadful manner. However, he could not reduce the fortress he had for some time fo straitly besieged, but was obliged to return home. without having made any confiderable conquest; tho' he acquired some valuable spoils, and took several prisoners, in this expedition. About the same time, Al Mansar dismissed Nubakht, his astrologer, who was a Persian, and extremely well versed in every branch of his art, on account of his ill state of health; filling the post become vacant by his dismission with his fon Khorshadmah Watimadah Khosir Waabahabad, whose name the Khalif converted into that of Abu Sabl. In the 151st year of the Hejra, or the 768th of CHRIST, Dionysius, bishop of Harran, departed this life, and was succeeded by a person of the same name, taken out of the monastery of Tuchenin, or Zokhenîn; as did likewise Stephen, bishop of Chabura, or Al Khabûr, Zacharias, bishop of Edessa, and Jannes, bishop of Tela, the following year; the two last of whom were succeeded by Elias, a cruel and flagitious perfon belonging to the monastery of Cartamina, or Kartamin, and one Sabinus. At this time, David, the patriarch, Serguna, bishop of Marde, Abas, bishop of Amida, or Amid, Constantine, bishop of Samosata, or Someisat, and Paul, bishop of Tagrit. or Tacrit, were in great repute. A comet was feen in the month of May, between the eastern and northern parts of the hemisphere; and soon after it rained black stones, some of which were preserved to the time that Dionystus Tehnarensis wrote the annals here referred to. Zeid, one of the Khalisse generals, is likewise said by that author to have exacted a capitation-tax of the Scythians, or Tartars, the same year.

The transactions of the year 154.

THE next year, being the 154th year of the Hejra, the Khalif sent one of his commanders, called Mualabitus, or Al Moballebi, by Theophanes, with a numerous army into Africa; but what he did there this campaign, we are not told by that author. Al Fadl, furnamed Barinar, another of that prince's generals, made an incursion into the Christian territories, and earried off with him from thence about 500 prisoners. people of Mopfuestia, or Al Mastia, in Cilicia, receiving intelligence of this, detached a body of troops, levied amongst themselves, in order to cut off his retreat; but Al Fadl defeated this detachment, and put the Mopfuestians to flight, with the loss of a thousand men. The Kbalif went this year to Terusalem, where he kept the great fail of Ramadan; and obliged many Christians to retire from thence into the dominions of the Greek emperor. Either this or the preceding year, Milfa Ebn Mofaab, the Khalif's governor of Moful, raised a violent persecution against the Christians of the Facebite persuasion there; which, by means of his deputies, or inferior officers, whom he had appointed to preside over several confiderable cities of Mesopetamia, he extended to other parts of that province. One of these was Adam Ebn Yezid, the lieutenant of Amid, Arzan, Al Rûm, and Mayafarkîn, who, in cruelty and barbarity, seems to have surpassed all the rest. One Zoaras, or Zoara, a monk belonging to the convent of Sf. Matthew at Mosul, having conceived an invincible aversion to, and borne an implacable hatred against, his brethren there, accufed them to Faafar, Al Mansar's son, of having concealed the treasures of Hesbam, Mersoan, and other Khalifs, besides an immense quantity of gold and silver of their own. which, that prince fent a detachment to plunder the convent, and strip the religious there of every thing valuable belonging to them; which being done, he issued an edict to oblige the Christians to transmit him an exact account of all the rich furniture contained in the churches and monasteries of Mesopotamia. But Jaafar dying foon after, that edict was revoked, and the valuable effects taken out of the convent of St. Matthew reftored. At this time, a body of 500 slaves, being chiefly Sindians and Khazars, or Khazarites, attempted to feize upon the imperial treasury in Harran; but being repulsed by Al Abbas, the governor, they were foon dispersed, and several of them executed for being concerned in so villamous an attempt. At Manfur Sent officers likewise, this year, to collect the capitation exacted of the Christians settled in Armenia, Byria, and Mesopotamia, with the utmost riggue and severity; and to impres the mark of slavery upon the forcheads, necks, arms, breafts and shoulders, of that unfortunate people; which drove many of them into the imperial territories. Hence probably arole the custom of having certain marks and characters painted on the arms and other parts of those who visited Yerufalem, which in some measure prevalls at this very day. The Khalif also ordered the walls and fortifications of Caldivicami to be repaired. The same year, a notorious villain. born in a village called Rama, in the neighbourhood of Tacrit, after he had acted the monk for several years in the convent of St. Matthew at Moful, put off the monaftic habit, and declared himself a convert to Mohammedism. This man, however, afterwards returned to the Obriftian faith, affumed the name and character of a prophet in the territory of Dara, where he pretended to foretell future events, and to threaten defluction to the Christians of Mesopotamia, unless they specdily repented of their fins; and had the impudence to place himself in the episcopal chair belonging to the cathedral church of Dara. Here likewise, though he was only a deacon, he took upon him to communicate to prefbyters the benetilation, to confecrate oil mixed with spittle, and to distribute potions of this amongst the populace, as a remedy that would effectually cure all diforders; by which he amaffed vaft fums of money. The news of which proceedings being brought to Cyriacus, the bishop, he had the impostor carried immediately before David the patriarch, who ordered him to be conducted to Harran, and thrown into prison there. We must not forget to observe, that, about this very year, flourished Theophilus Edessenus, by nation a Maronite, and by profession an aftronomer. He wrote a history, in which he makes 5197 years to have elapsed between the creation of the world and the commencement of the zera of Seleucus. He also translated the Ilind of Homer into the Syriac language. But, for a farther account of this learned author and his works, we must beg leave to refer our readers to some of the writers cited here; who, on that head, we doubt not, will give them full and ample satisfaction .

The Arabe Some districts of Affyria and Mesopotamia.

THE following year, being the 155th year of the Hejra, seize upon Abd'allah Ebn Ali Ébn Abd'alrahmán Ébn Moawiyah Ebn Hadij died in Egypt, over which country he had been appointed to preside by Al Mansur; who sent Musa Ebn Ali Ebn Rigáb Al Lakhmi thither to succeed him. Musa continued in that post, which he filled with credit and reputation, till the death of the Khalif. There was a great drought this year, according to Dionysius Telmarensis, in Mesopotamia. The Arabs of Al Thalabiya and Maad, with their flocks, camels, and other beafts of burden, made an irruption into Affyria and Mefopotamia; possessing themselves of the districts of Niusal, Beth-Garme, or Bajarma, Heza, Marga, Canisapor, Resin, Kok, or Cocha, and Salakh, or Salacha. With regard to Beth Garme, or Bajarma, we must beg leave to remark, that it was a tract of Assyria, containing the cities of Dakuka, Shahar-Kadta, Buazicha, and others that we find enumerated by Elias Damascenas, the Nestorian bishop, and called Germa by Agathias Scholasticus. It was a bishop's see, and had one Constantine for its bishop in the year of our LORD 969. Marga was a town, or pretty large village, in the territory of Moful. Bar Hadbefbaba, one of the bishops of Marga, has been mentioned by some of the eastern writers. Kok, or Cocha, may possibly have been the fame city with the Coche of Arrian, Ammianus Marcellinus, and Eutropius, seated upon the Tigris, at a small distance from Ctefiphon and Seleucia, erected on the opposite bank of that river; though Assembly seems to be of a different opinion. Salakh, or Salacha, was a town of Tur-Abdin, that stood likewife at no great distance from the Tigris, and a bishop's see, as may be inferred from Gregory Bar-Hebraus. The convent of St. Fames here was the feat, or refidence, of the patriarchs of Tur-Abdin, from the year of CHRIST 1364 to the year 1494. The other places taken by the Arabs this year have not been so particularly described by the oriental geographers and historians b.

In the 156th year of the Hejra, Paul, bishop of Tagrit, or The Kha-Tacrit, Zachæus, bishop of Charma, and Jonas, bishop of No-lif returns arda, departed this life. The same year the Khalif Al Mansur from Jerureturned from Jerusalem to Baghdad, and constituted Musa Ebn salem to Mesaab, in the room of Al Abbas, his governor of Mesopotamia. Baghdad. He also ordered the inhabitants of Akula to repair the walls and fortifications of their city at their own expence. Having by treachery cut off Patricius, the lieutenant of the Greater Armenia, he seized upon all his immense treasures, and put them into his own coffers. At such a pitch of impiety did the Arabs, or Moslems, arrive, that they opened a great number of sepulchres in Mesopotamia, in order to discover gold and About the same time, according to Theophanes, 280 heads were brought from Africa into Syria, and exposed to public view, by way of triumphal parade, in several places. The schism amongst the Christians of the Jacobite persuasion in Mesopotamia, some of whom adhered to David, as their patriarch, and others to George, who had been imprisoned by the Khalif at Baghdad, still continued c.

This was followed by a plague, which swept away potamia. the greatest part of the inhabitants of that province. Musica Ebn Mosab, the Khalif's governor, treated the Christians of all denominations, not excepting the religious of every kind, with the utmost rigour and severity, this year; throwing into prison all who could not pay the enormous tribute he demanded of them. Such treatment as this they had likewise met with from the present Khalif, or at least the person he appointed to preside over them, in the heginning of his reign d.

were delivered in the following terms: "I command you," faid he, "to treat publicly your relations with the greatest marks of distinction, since this will reflect no small degree 66 of honour and glory upon yourfelf: but this," added he, 46 I believe you will not do. Increase the number of your se freed-men, and treat them all with kindness, as they will be of great service to you in time of adversity; but this." continued he, "I am apt to think you will not do. Inlarge ec not that part of your capital erected on the eastern bank of the Tigris, as you will never be able to finish it: but this." faid he, 66 I know you will attempt. Never permit any of vour women to intermeddle in affairs of state, nor to have too much influence over your councils: but this," subjoined he, "I know you will not fail to do. These are my last commands, or, if you please, my dying advice; and to "God I now recommend you." Then he took his leave of him, and they were both drowned in tears. From Abdasugya he went to Cufa, and then continued his journey, tho' he grew worse and worse every station, till he arrived at Bir Maimur, that is, the well, or fountain, of Maimun, where he expired, on the 6th of Dhu'lhajja, very early in the morning; and was carried from thence to Mecca, where, after an hundred graves had been dug, that his sepulchre might be concealed, he was interred. He lived fixty-three, and reigned twenty-two lunar years, according to Abu Jaafar Al Tabari, Eutychius, or Sa'id Ebn Batrik, and Abu'l-Faraj. Ebn Batrik makes him to have been fixty-eight years of age at the time of his death. With regard to his person, he had a thin long beard. was tall, lean, and of a swarthy complexion. He is also said to have tinged himself with something that gave him a darkish hue, and to have changed the colour of his grey hairs every month with two thousand drachms of musk. As to his dispofition, he was of a most sweet temper in private, and could bear even with the impertinences of boys; but when he appeared in public, arrayed in his royal robes, even all the fenior part of his subjects stood in awe of him. He was a prince of vast prudence, integrity, and discretion, and of a very winning and amiable conversation. He was also magnanimous and brave, and extremely well versed (having improved his natural genius by long experience) in all the arts of government. But these good qualities were not a little sullied by some of a contrary nature. For, he was covetous to such a degree, that several very ridiculous stories have been told of him. He was likewise, on some occasions, truculent and cruel, of a herce aspect, loaded some of his subjects with irons on bare suspicion, and butchered others of them: with greediness and pleasure. He lest behind him, in his treasury, 600,000,000

600,000,000 dirbéms, and 24,000,000 dinârs. We are told by Abu Jaafar Al Tabari, that he paid his cook, by affigning him the heads and legs of the animals dreffed in his kitchen for his own use; and that he obliged this servant to procure all the fuel and veffels he had occasion for at his own expence. The following story of him is too remarkable to be passed over in silence here. Whilst he remained in a private station, and before he was elevated to the fovereign dignity of Khalif, he ranked amongst his most familiar friends one Azhar Baheli, a man of great merit, and confidered as one of the most authentic doctors in all points relating to traditions. This person observing that Abu Jeafar, when settled upon the throne, did not vouchfase to enter into any particular converfation with him, as formerly, he refolved to present himself before him at one of his public audiences; which he accordingly did. As foon as the Khalif perceived him, he demanded of him what he wanted there. Azhar answered, that he was come to congratulate him, and to rejoice with him, upon his elevation to the Khalifat. Abu Jaafar immediately ordered him a purse with a thousand dinars in it, and then dismissed him with the following words: "Don't give yourself the " trouble to come here any more." Notwithstanding which, the following year, Azbar presented himself again before him. The Khalif looked upon him with a very four countenance, and asked him what brought him thither? Azbar replied, 44 I was informed that your majefty was greatly indisposed, and se came hither, as one of your most faithful flaves, to inquire se after your majesty's health." Upon which, Abu Jaafar ordered him another purse with the same sum in it; and said to him roughly at parting, " Don't come to teize me here se any more for the future." But this did not hinder Azhar from appearing before him again, the following year. The Khalif, as foon as he saw him, faid to him, in great wrath, 46 Will you never ocase to importune me?" Axbar answered, "Formerly I never reneised any thing but civilities from 46 your majesty; I come therefore now to learn what has oc-45 cassoned such an alteration in your conduct." To which the Khalif answered, "As the civilities you mention had no manner of foundation, so they left behind them not the " least impression in my mind; because, by not seeing you 46 as I used to do, I have contracted a habit of not seeing you " at all." In fine, Al Marfir dismilled him, without giving him any thing. This story has been handed down to us by Yafai, who tells us, that the Khalaf, by the patience and liberality exhibited on this occasion, deviated from the general course and tenor of his conduct; as he was, for the most part, both very fordid and avaricious, and of a hafty and paffionate temper.

He ordered a tax to be levied upon the people of Cûfa of a dawanek, or obele, a small inconsiderable brass coins a head, to defray the expence of digging a ditch, or intrenchment, round the town, for the fecurity of the place; for which reason, he was surnamed, by way of contempt, Abu Dawanek, the father of the dawanek, or obole, by the inhabitants of that

Some of the eastern writers relate, that a dysentery, or bloody-flux, put a period to this Khalif's days, and that he lars relat- died at Mecca; though the latter notion, however positively ing to him. afferted, was undoubtedly a mistake. Khondemir reports, that, a few days before he was attacked by the malady that carried him off, he found four Arabic verses inscribed upon a wall, which gave him great uneafiness; the purport of which was to the following effect: "O Abu Jaafar, the time of your death is come! Your days are determined, and "God's irrevocable decree is arrived. Confult as many ause gurs, foothfayers, diviners, and aftrologers, as you pleafe; 46 your time is foon to expire, and the thread of your life to be cut by the distemper that is to prove fatal to you." These verses mentioned astrologers, because the Khalif, who was himself well versed in the knowledge of the stars, had always fome philosophers and mathematicians about him. According to Abu Jaafar Al Tabari, Al Mansar discovered, written upon the wall of a caravaniera, or inn, four other veries in Persic, the sense of which was as follows: "The kingdoms and riches of this world are not given, but only lent us. Let no one, therefore, think himself sure of them, or value 66 himself too highly upon account of them. Whoever fixes 46 his heart upon them, and places his chief confidence in them, will be covered with shame, when he is obliged to return them to him from whom he received them." Some authors inform us, that this Khalif's governors of Egypt exacted fuch enormous fums of money, by way of tribute, of the people of that country, not sparing even the poorest artificers and meanest mechanics, that they were reduced to the extremest poverty, and forced to feed upon dogs and dead bodies. Al Mansûr and Constantine Copronymus, the Greek emperor, are both faid to have died within the course of the same year. The former understood the Mohammedan law better than most of his age, having been instructed therein by some of the most celebrated Moslem doctors, whom he greatly honoured, and did not think it beneath him to be looked upon as their scholar, even after his elevation to the Khalifat. Notwithstanding the aversion that reigned between the houses of Al Abbas and Ommiyab, Al Manfur frankly owned that the Kbalifs of the former family had three advantages over him; first, in finding such a general, and governor of a province, as Al Hejaj; secondly, in being served by such a secretary as Abd'al Hamid; and, thirdly, in meeting with such a Muedhdhin, or crier, as Al Baalbeki. This Khalif's counsellors were Abu Atiya Al Bâbeli, Ayûb Al Marzabâni, whom he put to death for assuming to himself too much power, and his servant Rabi. The captains of his guards were Abd'al Jabar Ebn Abd'alrahmân Al Azdi, Ebn Caab Ebn Masa Al Tamini, and Al Mosaiyeb Al Zabiri; his judges Abd'allah Ebn Mohammed Ebn Safwan, Sharik Ebn Abd'allah, Al Hafan Ebn Amara, and Al Hejaj Ebn Artab; his chamberlains Rabî, Ifa, Al Hasib, his servants, Abu'l Khatib Marzūk, and Al Rabî, his freedmen. His brother's fon, Ibrahim Ebn Yahya Ebn Mohammed, said the usual prayers at the time of his interment. The first day of his reign was Monday, and the last Saturday. The most illustrious actions of this prince, according to some of the oriental historians, were the conquests of Armenia, Cilicia, and Cappadocia; to which others add the erection of the famous city of Baghdad. We are told by Ebn Shohnah, that, when he took his final leave of his son Al Mohdi, he made use of the following terms: " I "was born," my fon, "in the month of Dhu'lhajja; I " was proclaimed Khalif in the same month; and I am " strongly inclined to believe that I shall die in it; for which " reason, I am now endeavouring to persorm my last pil-" grimage, in order to be rendered a proper object of the di-" vine mercy."

as the next apparent heir of the crown, of all then present: which having done, he dismissed them, and, soon after the conclusion of that ceremony, communicated to them the news of Al Mansar's death. He also dispatched a courier to Al Mohdi, with advice of that event, and of the first step that had been taken at Bir Maimûn in his favour. Upon the arrival of the courier at Baghdad, then the residence of this prince, he was unanimously proclaimed Khalif by the inhabitants of that city. This courier was Monara, one of the late Khalif's fervants. Some of the eastern writers inform us, that Omm Mûsa, Mohammed Al Mohdi's mother, was the daughter of Al Mansar Ebn Abd'allah Ebn Sahar Al Hamvari, or of the tribe of Hamyar. Isa Ebn Mûsa, as soon as the news of Al Mansar's death was impatted to him, began to entertain thoughts of fetting up for himself at Cufa, where he then resided; and, in order to facilitate the execution of his scheme, fortified himself in that city. But Al Mohdi, having been apprized of his intended defection, fent Abu Horeira, with a detachment of 1000 horse, to bring him to Baghdad; which being done, Al Mohdi not only prevailed upon him to recognize his authority, but likewise persuaded him to relinquish his right to the succession, in favour of his fon Mûsa Al Hâdi, for the sum of 10,000, or, according to some of the MS. copies of Abu'l-Faraj, 10,000,000, dinars. Soon after the new Khalif's accession, one Yusef Ebn Ibrahim Al Yazam, declaring against Al Mobdi, assembled in Khorasan a body of troops, in order to dispute the Khalifat with him. This impostor, pretending to act the prophet, seduced a great number of Al Mobdi's subjects at Busa, or Besa, probably the Fesa of Abulfeda, an antient city of Persia, about ten parasangs almost east of Estakr, or Istakbra, where he first set up his standard. The Khalif, therefore, fent an army against him, which intirely defeated him, dispersed all his followers, and brought him bound to Al Mohdi; by whose order he was publickly crucified at Baghdad. According to Abu Jaafar Al Tabari, this Yusef Ebn Ibrahim Al Yazam was governor of Khorasan; tho', if we will believe Abu'l-Faraj, he first set up for a prophet at Bufa, and was overthrown by Yezid Ebn Yezid, one of Al Mohdi's most experienced generals. We must not forget to observe, that Al Mansur's name at length, with his whole surname annexed to it, was Abd'allah Ebn Mohammed Ebn Ali Ebn Abd'allah Ebn Al Abbas Abu Jaafar Al Mansar; though the first part of his name, Abd'allah, has been denied him by Pa-It must also be remarked, that Busa, Besa, or Fesa, was in the earlier times a city of a very confiderable extent g.

It appears from Theophanes, that into the a body of Al Mohdi's troops made an incursion into the im-imperial perial territories, and carried off with them some Mossem pri-territories; foners, that had been confined in a cave called Caufis, the present year h.

THE following year, being the 160th of the Moslem zera, as likethe Khalif sent Isa Ebn Lokman Al Jamjami to govern in wise an-Egypt, in the room of Musa Ebn Ali, dispatched thither for other, the the same purpose the preceding year, whom he thought fit to following The Arab forces, under the command of Othman year. Ebn Kaka, one of the Moslem generals, according to Theophanes, made another irruption into the dominions of the Greek emperor, plundered in a dreadful manner the country through which they moved, and conducted from thence feveral prisoners into the Moslem territories, likewise this year i.

THE next year, being the 161st of the Hejra, the Chri-The Chris flians, if we will believe Theophanes, invaded Syria with an flians inarmy of 100,000 men, and defeated a body of Arabs that wade Sypretended to oppose them; of whom they killed five Emirs, ria. or principal officers, and 2000 men, upon the spot. At this time, several dirhêms came out of the mint erected at Basra; one of which was found in the neighbourhood of Dantzick, on the coast of the Baltick, in the year 1722; a particular description of which has been given us by the learned M. Kehr. This dirhêm exhibits on the anterior part the following words, Bel Bafrata ahdayni wasettina wameaten; that is, At Basra, in the 161st year of the Hejra; and, on the reverse, Moham-medon rasulo-llahi, salla-llaho alayhi wasallama; Mohammed is the apostle of God; may God be propitious to him, and make bim happy! After which come the words, Al Khalifat o-l' Mohdiyyo Mohammed, In the Khalîfat of Al Mohdi, or when Al Mohdi Mohammed was Khalif. With regard to Bafra, it may not be amiss to remind our readers, that this city was built by Athâ Ebn Arâr, at the command of the Khalif Omar, in the 15th year of the Hejra, and consequently cannot be deemed a place of very high antiquity. It is at present a very famous empory of the east, and stands upon a thick flony foil, as the word Basra itself denotes, about a day and 403. Jos. Sim. Asseman. ubi sup. p. 116. Pacius, ad an. However, the hot burning winds, that frequently blow there, are very troublefome to travellers, and fometimes overwhelm them with mountains of fand, driven by the force of these winds out of the neighbouring defarts. The city is inhabited by Jacobites, Nestorians, Catholics, Jews, Mohammedans, and Chaldean Christians, commonly called Christians of St. John, who are pretty numerous here. The Arabs, according to Abulfeda, resorted to a street of Bafra, denominated Mirbad Al Bafra, in his days, from all parts, in order to repeat both their profaic and poetical performances. Bafra has fent out many perfons of profound erudition; some of the principal of which were Al Hariri, whose stile in elegance is supposed to excel even that of the Koran; Hasan Al Basri, who was servant to Omm Salma, one of the prophet's wives, who gave him her own breafts to fuck, whilst his mother was employed in her service, a famous scholastic divine, that kept a school at Basra, and wrote a piece, intitled, Noble Traditions; containing all the principal traditionary precepts of the Moslem law; Abu Ishak Ismael, who penned a treatife concerning the law and statutes of the Korân; Yacûb Ebn Ibrahim, chancellor to the Khalîfs Al Hâdi and Harûn Al Rashid, who composed a piece concerning the qualities requisite to form a Kâdi, or judge; Abu Becr Mohammed, who left behind him a collection of narrations, or antient histories; Helâl Ebn Yahya, who published a piece upon the ecclesiastical laws of the Moslems, relating to mosques and hospitals, founded for the benefit of travellers and ftrangers; and Abu Sa'id Omar, who composed a treatise upon the Arab poetry. There is also at Basra a famous college, or academy, founded by Nezam Al Molk, the Vifir, or Wazir, of Moezaddin Abu'lfetah Mâlec Shah, the third Soltan of the Seljûks of Irán, called the college, or academy, of Nezâm. time, the city we are speaking of is faid to be a flourishing seat of literature, tho' inferior in number of academics to Demashk, or Damascus, and Kairo, or Al Kabirah; the latter of which places, it we will believe a certain writer, contains no less than 12,000 Mohammedan students. Besides Ebn Najjar's history of Baghdad, intitled Tarikh Ebn Najjar Al Baghdadi, there is also another history of this capital, to which we find prefixed the title of Tarikh Baghdad, that is, the history, or annals, of Baghdad, confifting of no less than ten volumes. The Tarikh Al Abbas also mentions it in several places, as do in like manner all the Persian and Arabian geographers. To the learned men produced by this metropolis, already taken notice of, we may add Ahmed Ebn Ahmed Al Baghdadi Khattab Al Hafedh, Mamar Ebn Almothani Al Baghdadi Al Obeidah, Al Imam Mohammed Al Baghdadi, and others; an enumeration of whose names our Hasan, in pursuance of stians; his orders, advanced to Dorylaum in that country, invested it, and attacked it for seventeen days with incredible fury. But finding himself, at the end of that term, greatly distressed for want of provisions, and all his forage consumed, he was obliged to decamp from thence, and retire to Amerium; which town likewise for one whole day he closely besieged. But being informed, that the place was amply furnished with all kinds of provisions and military stores, besides a numerous garifon to defend it, he thought fit to raife the fiege, and return home. The imperial troops were not strong enough to harafs him in his retreat; notwithstanding which, he lost a very confiderable number of men, without the least advantage gained; this unfortunate campaign 1.

that he was present at any of the military operations. On the control, we find it intimated by Theophanes, that he lest the army, and went to Jerusalem, before the opening of the campaign. Harûn, after he had conferred with his father in the plains of Dabek, advanced to Samalek, battered that forters with his catapults, and made himself master of it after 38 days siege; tho, when he entered the place, he found it little better than a heap of ruins. After the reduction, or rather destruction, of this town, Harûn returned home; contenting himself with the glory he had acquired. We learn from Theophanes, that the Khalîf raised a violent persecution against both the Christians and Jews settled at Hems, and in other parts of his dominions, this year m.

ABOUT the same time, there happened another event, that, according to Abu'l-Faraj, not a little embarassed the Khalif's affairs. One Hakem Ebn Hashem, originally of Merû, in Khorasan, who had been an under-secretary to Abu Mostem, the governor of that province, and afterwards turned foldier, passed thence into Mawara lnahr, where he gave himself out for a prophet. He is generally named by the Arab writers Al Mokanna, and sometimes Al Borkai, that is, the vailed, because he used to cover his face with a vail, 'or a gilded mask, to conceal his deformity, having loft an eye in the wars, and being otherwise of a despicable appearance; tho' his followers pretended he did it for the same reason as Moses did, viz. lest the splendor of his countenance should dazzle the eyes of the beholders. He made a great many profelytes at Nakhshab and Kash, deluding the people with several juggling performances, which they swallowed for miracles, and particularly by causing the appearance of a moon to rife out of a well for many nights together; whence he was also called, in the Persian tongue, Sazendeh mah, or the moon-maker. This impious impostor, not content with being reputed a prophet, arrogated to himself divine honours, pretending that the Deity resided in his person: and the doctrine whereon he built this was the same with that of the Gholaites, who affirmed a transmigration, or successive manifestation, of the Divinity through and in certain prophets and holy men, from Adam to these latter days (of which opinion was also Abu Moslem himself;) but the particular doctrine of Al Mokanna was, that the person in whom the Deity had last resided was the aforesaid Abu Moslem, and that the same had, fince his death, passed into him-The faction of Al Mokanna, who had made himself master of several fortified places in the neighbourhood of the cities above mentioned, growing daily more and more powerful, the Khalif was at length obliged to fend an army to re-" Iidem ibid.

duce him; at the approach whereof Al Mokanna retired into one of his strong fortresses, which he had well provided for a fiege, and fent his emissaries abroad to persuade people that he raised the dead to life, and knew suture events. But being ftraitly befieged by the Khalif's forces, when he found there was no possibility for him to escape, he gave posson in wine to his whole family, and all that were with him in the castle, and, when they were dead, he burnt their bodies, together with their cloaths and all the provisions, and cattle; and then, to prevent his own body's being found, he threw himself into the flames, or, as others fay, into a tub of aqua fortis, or fome other preparation, which confumed every part of him, except only his hair: fo that when the besiegers entered the place, they found no creature in it save one of Al Mokanna's concubines, who, suspecting his design, had hid herself, and discovered the whole matter. This contrivance, however, failed not to produce the effect which the impostor defigned amongst the remaining part of his followers; for he had promifed them that his foul should transmigrate into the form of a grey-headed man, riding on a greyish beast; and that, after fo many years, he would return to them, and give them the earth for their possession: the expectation of which promise kept the sect in being for several ages after, under the name of Mobergidites, or, as the Persians call them, Sesid jamehghian, i. e. the cloathed in white, because they wore their garments of that colour, in opposition, as is supposed, to the Khalifs of the family of Al Abbas, whose banners and habits were black. We must not forget to observe, that Al Mohdi removed Al Mansur Ebn Yezid Al Raghbi, who succeeded Wadih Ebn Al Manfür in that post, from the government of Egypt, and substituted Abu Saleh Ebn Abd'allah Al Jawnani in his place n.

THE next year, being the 164th of the Hejra, after Abu Harûn Al Sa'id, Al Mohdi's general, had reduced Al Mokanna's faction Rashid into the obedience of the Khalif, Ibrahim Ebn Saleh Ebn Ali Ebn vades the Abd'allah Ebn Al Abbas was sent to preside over Egypt. The territories same year, the Khalif ordered his son Harûn Al Rashid to pe of the emnetrate into the Christian territories, with an army of 95,000 from Harûn, having entered the dominions of the empress Irene, defeated one of her commanders, that had advanced at the head of her forces to oppose him; tho', according to Theophanes, the Greeks gained the advantage in that action. After this overthrow, Harûn laid several of the imperial provinces waste with fire and sword, spread a terror over the rest, and alarmed even the city of Conflantinople itself. This induced the empress Irene to purchase a peace of the Khalif, by agreeing to pay him an annual tribute of 70,000 pieces of gold; which, at least for the present, delivered her subjects from the courses and depredations of the Arabs. After the figning of the treaty, Harûn returned home, loaded with spoils, and covered with glory. We must not forget to observe, that Al Mokanna, or Hakem, of whom we have spoken so largely above, is denominated Hakem Ebn Atha by one of the eastern historians. It has been remarked by some of the oriental writers, that, one day in the last Arab month of this year, the fun, a little after his rifing, totally loft his light, in a moment, without being eclipsed; when neither any fog, nor any cloud of dust, appeared to obscure him. The frightful darkness, occasioned by this surprizing event, continued till noon, to the great aftonishment of the people settled in the countries where it happened. The fame authors likewise observe, that no account of any prodigy like this has been transmitted down to us by any of the historians of former ages o.

In the 165th year of the Hejra, commencing Aug. 26th, 781, nîfa's seet, the Hanifites, or Hanefites, of whose founder Abu Hanifa Al Nooman Ebn Thabet we have already given our readers a distinct account, made a confiderable figure in and about the city of Baghdad. To what has already been faid of that celebrated Sonnite doctor, we shall here beg leave to add the following particulars. Mâlec Ebn Ans, the author of the second orthodox sect of the Moslems, who was born at Medina, being once engaged in convertation with Abu Hanifa, who was a native of Cafa, told him, that Ali had observed the Cafans to be quarrelfom and seditious; to which Abu Hanifa replied, that the people of Medina were taxed with hypocrify by the Karân: which little raillery, that passed between two such great men, has been taken notice of by one of the more reputeable Mostern writers. Another of them informs us, that, according to the fentiments of this doctor, those points that have been imparted to us by GoD and his prophet Mohammed, are to be received with intire submission; of those that have been handed down to future ages by the COMPANIONS, or cotemporaries, of the prophet, the best are to be chosen; but that with regard to the tenets and opinions of the doctors who followed them, men are at liberty either to admit or reject them, as the persons from whom they come were weak and fallible like ourselves. Hosein Waez, in his commentary upon the Koran, relates, that Abu Hanifa, having once received a box on the ear, faid to the person who had the temerity to give it him, " I could return you injury for injury; but that I will not do; I could carry my complaint to the Khalif, but " fuch a part as this I shall not act; I could at least represent " to God in my prayers the outrage you have offered me, but " against this I shall take care to be upon my guard; lastly, " at the day of judgment, I could demand vengeance of GoD for this violence, but far be it from me to pursue such a vin-" dictive conduct: if that great and terrible day should this "moment arrive, and my intercession could take place, I "would not enter into paradife without you." The principal of his works are the Mesnad, that is, the prop, or support, wherein he establishes all the estential points of Islamism upon the authority of the Korân and the most received traditions; a treatise, intitled, Filkelam, that is to fay, scholastic divinity; and a fort of catechism, or instruction, that bears the title of Moallem, or the master. In the last of these pieces he maintains, that as long as a Moslem continues in the faith, he cannot become an enemy to God, tho' he may fall into enormous fins; that fuch fins cannot destroy the validity of faith; and that grace is by no means incompatible with fin. These and fuch-like propositions induced Vazai to attack his notions; which he did in a book, intitled, Ekhtelaf ABU HANIFA, or the contradictions of ABU HANIFA. The Sonnite doctor, of whom we are speaking, is greatly celebrated by Al Zamakhshari, Korderi, Marghinani, Dainuri, Sobahazmuni, and others, whose authority is of no small weight with the orthodox Moslems. In fine, all the principal eastern historians agree, that Abu Hanifa excelled all the learned Mohammedans of his age, not only in the knowledge of their law, but in the practice of all the duties it injoins; that his life was extremely auftere, and intirely detached from the things of this world, on which account he has always been confidered by the Sonnites as the chief and first Imam of the Moslem law; and that his sentiments have been rejected by none but the Shiites, or followers of Ali, who are looked upon as schismatics by the orthodox Mohammedans. We shall conclude what we have to fay on this head with observing, that Mâlec Shâh, third Soltan of the Seljuks of Iran, erected a superb mausoleum in honour of Abu Hanîfa at Baghdad, and joined to it a college for the use of the youth educated in the principles of his sect, in the year of the Hejra 485, or of CHRIST 1092 P.

One of those terms was, that the Moslem troops should be supplied with provisions, and furnished with all proper accommodations, as long as they remained in the empress's dominions; as also that they should be conducted from thence to the Khalif's territories by some of her subjects, who knew the roads, by the bost way they could shew them, and not that narrow defile limited on one fide by a steep mountain, and on the other by the Sagaris, or Sangarius, 2 noted river of Bithynia, through which the Arab army had marched to the coast of the Propontis, where they had struck a terror into the imperial court. The conclusion of this treaty with Irene is placed by Abu'l-Faraj, who seems in this point to be supported by Theophanes, in the 165th year of the Hejra; tho' that event appears to have been fixed by Abu Jaafar Al Tabari in the preceding year. Had not the empress been intirely governed by her fears, she might have cut Harûn Al Rashid and all his troops to pieces, or starved them to a surrender, fince they were in a very distressed and calamitous fituation when the treaty was figned, as we find intimated by Abu'l-Faraj. Harûn entered Baghdad in the month of Al Moharram, and was attended by a confiderable number of Christians, who had been restored to their liberty by virtue of the preceding treaty. The peace concluded between the Greek empress and the Khalif continued about three years. Soon after Al Rashid's arrival at Baghdad, he was declared the next heir to the crown after his elder brother Mûsa Al Hâdi. About the same time, Al Mohdi caused diligent search to be made after all his subjects who were infected with Zendicism, and put to death as many of them as fell into his hands. Amongst the rest, he ordered Saleh Ebn Abd'allah and Yasar Ebn Yarad to be executed, under the pretext of their having been suspected of favouring those who professed that species of infidelity. But Yasar Ebn Yarad is supposed to have suffered the punishment inflicted upon him, for publishing some fatirical verses upon Al Mohdi and his counsellor Yakûb Ebn Dawd, which have been handed down to us by Abu Jaafar Al Ta-

THE next year, being the 167th of the Hejra, Al Mobdi Ibrahim removed from the government of Egypt Ibrahim Ebn Saleh, Ebn Saleh and appointed Mûsa Ebn Masaab, or Moses the son of Musaab, removed as he is called by Dionysius Telmarensis, who had formerly from the been the Khalif's governor of Mesopotamia, to succeed him. govern-Every part of that prince's vast dominions seems to have enment of joyed an uninterrupted repose, no military operations having been mentioned as happening during the course of it, in any of the provinces of the Mossem empire, by the oriental historians, the present year.

In the 168th year of the Hejra, Musa Ebn Masaab was as-Musa Ebn saffinated in Egypt. This tragical event happened in the month Masaab of Shawal, and was probably occasioned by a tyrannical and assassinate oppressive administration. His deputy Amer Ebn Omar took ed in upon him the government of Egypt, till the arrival of Fadl Egypt, Ebn Saleb Ebn Abd'allah Ebn Al Abbas, who was sent by the and succeeded in Kbalif from Baghdad to succeed Musa Ebn Masaab in his luthe gocrative and exalted post .

When he arrived at Arud, or Al Rud, in the district of Masabdân, one of his favourite mistresses, whom he had commanded to attend him, gave him a poisoned pear, which had been prefented to her by another of the Khalif's concubines, named Hasana, who thought she had too great an ascendant over him. and therefore resolved to destroy her; which, appearing very beautiful to him, he could not forbear eating it, not in the leaft suspecting that any noxious quality was inherent in it. But it had no sooner entered his stomach than he sound himself in most exquisite torture, and in a very short time expired; which greatly afflicted Hasana, tho' she had no intention to hurt him, when she communicated the poisoned fruit to her hated rival. This tragical accident happened on the twentyfecond day of the month Al Moharram; and, after it, the

Khalif was buried near a walnut-tree, under whose boughs he used sometimes to repose himself. He was near forty-three years of age at the time of his death, and reigned ten years, one month, and fifteen days. His son Harûn Al Rashid, who was with him when he expired, said the prayers over him at the time of his interment. Some writers pretend, that, one day, as he was hunting, he purfued a wild beaft into an old ruined house; where, being obliged to make a great effort to pass through a low door, his horse carried him with such force against it, that he broke his back; so that, no affistance being at hand, he expired upon the spot. This Khalif, in imitation of his father Abu Jaafar Al Mansur, is said to have performed a pilgrimage to Mecca, tho' with more pomp than devotion; as he spent in that journey about 6,000,000 dinars. Amongst other things with which he loaded the camels that attended him, he carried such a prodigious quantity of snow, that it served not only to refresh him and all his retinue in the burning fands of Arabia, but likewise to preserve all the delicious fruits he took with him in their natural freshness, and to afford him ice-water to drink, during his abode at Mecca, the inhabitants of which place had scarce ever seen any snow before. Whilst he was there, according to some authors, he inlarged the portico of the Caaba, and issued orders for demolishing many houses at Medina, to give a greater extent to the mosque containing Mohammed's tomb; which was by no means approved of by the superstitious followers of the Moslem law. It was at this time also that a Moslem brought to him one of the prophet's flippers, and received from him for it a present of 10,000 dirhêms; after which, turning himself towards some of his principal courtiers, he said, " Mohammed never faw this flipper; but, if I had refused accepting of it, " the people would have believed that it had really belonged to Mobammed, and that I had despised it; for they are na-"turally prejudiced in favour of the weak against the strong." This prince often changed the governors of provinces, and their ministers, lest some of them should usurp too great 2 degree of power, and even assume to themselves the supreme authority. He likewise restored large sums of money that his father had extorted from his subjects, released a vast number of prisoners, and dispatched most of the affairs of state himself with great diligence and application. He frequently held his bed of justice, in order to punish the violences and oppresfions exercised by the grandees upon the lower part of the people, and to make the latter amends for the losses they had fustained. He appointed persons of great gravity and discre-tion, and such as were extremely well versed in the Mohammedan civil law, to affift in the courts of justice, that, by their Digitized by GOOGLE prefence, presence, they might prevent all illegal decisions. Having one day, by way of reprimand, said to one of his civil officers, How long will you be guilty of these faults? the other very sagaciously replied, As long as it shall please God to preserve your life for our good, so long shall we commit faults, and your clemency will pardon them t.

His first principal counsellor, or prime minister, was Moa-Who were wiyah Ebn Abd'allah Al Ashari; but he did not continue long his princiin that exalted station. After his dismission, he advanced to pal counthat sublime post Yakth Ebn Dawd Ebn Tahmar, surnamed sellors, or Tahamash, a person of great wit and a most charming conver-prime mifation, who was in such high favour with the Khalif, that he nifters. did not only trust him with the management of all his affairs, but likewise permitted him to partake of all his diversions. This excited the envy of the principal courtiers, who entered into several cabals against him, and at last found an opportunity of accusing him to Al Mohdi of favouring the partisans of the Alidæ, or family of Ali, and consequently of being an enemy to the house of Al Abbas. This accusation, tho' it did not gain intire credit with the Khalif, made nevertheless some impression upon him. In order, therefore, to try him, Al Mobdi commanded Yakûb to put to death one of the descendants of Ali, whom, he pretended, he could not permit to live any longer; and, to induce him to obey with the greater alacrity this command, he made him a present of 100,000 dirbêms, and bestowed upon him in marriage one of the most beautiful ladies of his seraglio. Yakûb having communicated to the person destined to suffer the order he had received, he was addressed by him in the following terms: Give me the life which it is now in your power to take away, and you will by that means avoid the confusion which you must necessarily be in at the day of judgment, when you appear before my great ancestor Ali, if you spill my blood, which he regards as his own. These words so sensiby touched Yakûb Ebn Dawd, that he gave the person devoted to destruction the money he had received from the Khalif, and enabled him to make his escape. But this having been discovered to Al Mohdi by Yakûb's new wife, such strict fearch was made after the prisoner, that he was retaken in a short time, and confined in an apartment fitted up for him in the Khalif's palace. After which, Yakûb was summoned to appear, and charged with forwarding his escape; which that nobleman denying, and swearing by the head and life of the Khalif, that he had put the prisoner to death, the Shiite, who had been feized, and put under arrest in the palace, was immediately produced before him. Yakûb, being confounded at this fight, had nothing to urge in his vindication, and was therefore immediately ordered by the Khalif, who was irritated to the last degree at the perjury he had been manifestly guilty of, to prison, where he remained till the fixth year of the Khalîfat of Harûn Al Rashîd. But that prince having released him, he retired to Mecca, and resided there till his death. She, therefore, fent him an infolent meffage; upbraiding him with his past conduct, and wishing that God would soon deliver them from him, by putting a period to his days. To which he replied, that he had never attempted to perfuade the Khalif to undertake the journey she mentioned; that, with regard to the time of his death, the approach of which she so earnestly desired, he knew it was fixed, and at hand; but that nevertheless this was not owing to her prayers, and that as soon as she should be informed of it, she ought to cover her own head with The meaning of the latter part of this answer she did not understand till twenty days after the astrologer's death, when that of Al Mohdi himself likewise happened; but then the eafily comprehended the purport of his prediction, which stood in no need of any farther interpretation. To what has been already observed of this Theophilus Edessenus we shall here beg leave to add, that the stile of his Syriac version of the Iliad is reckoned very elegant and polite by some of the Arab writers; and that he feems to have translated the Odysses, as well as the lliad, into that language, according to Abu'l-Faraj w.

AL MOHDI had another great favourite besides his princi- Al Mohpal astrologer, or rather astronomer, Theophilus Edessenus, and di's physithat was Isa, his physician, surnamed Al Sidalâni, or the apo-cian Isa a thecary, because he was originally of that profession, and did great fanot pretend to any great skill in physic. Al Khizaran, one of vourite. Al Mohdi's best beloved concubines, a native of Medina, being indisposed, sent a maid with some of her urine, to a phyfician, in order to learn the cause of her distemper; giving her a strict charge at the same time not to discover the person from whom she came. The maid went directly to the shop of Abu Koreish (for so likewise was Isa called) and shewed him her lady's urine; telling him, that it belonged to a poor woman, who stood in great need of his assistance. A poor woman! said he; no, this came from an illustrious princess, who is with child of a king. The maid immediately reported this to Al Khizaran, who afterwards made Isa a present of two fumptuous vests and 300 dinars, and promised to procure him admission into the Khalif's family, if the latter part of what he had told the maid should prove true. This vastly astonished Abu Koreish, who publickly declared, that what he had said must have proceeded from a divine impulse, since he spoke at random, and in reality knew nothing of the grand personage by whom the maid had been fent on this occasion. However, Al Khizarân being brought to bed of a prince, afterwards named Mûsa Al Hâdi, who succeeded his father in the Kbalifat, in due time, she communicated the whole affair to the Khalif; who was fo well pleased with it, that he sent for Abu Koreish, made him his physician, tho', upon examination, he found him not to understand much of physic, and heaped many favours upon him. But notwithstanding his good fortune, Abu Koreish, or, if we please, Isa Al Sidalâni, was never honoured with a place amongst the principal physicians by the Arabs x.

As to his person, Al Mohdi was tall, handsome, though he A descriphad a white speck in his right eye, and, like the generality of tion of Al the Arabs, of a swarthy complexion. With regard to his Mohdi's disposition, he was liberal and munificent, or, according to person and others, prodigal and prosuse, as he dissipated in a very short character, time the immense treasures lest him by his sather Abu Jaafar Al Mansûr. He was also magnanimous and brave, and extremely beloved by his subjects, on account of his impartial administration of justice, and the aversion he always discovered to an effusion of human blood. He has likewise been considered by some of the Arab writers as religious and devout; tho' others of them have not been so willing to admit that part of his character. Being once in the mosque at Cufa, and upon the point of beginning the public prayers, one of the rabble said to him, I have not yet performed the ablution, and yet I would willingly join with you in the public prayers. Upon which, the Khalif stopped in the middle of the mosque, till the Arab had washed and purified himself in a proper man-In his pilgrimage to Mecca, he was attended by a person of great fanctity, named Al Mansur Al Hajani, who being with him in the Caaba, when he distributed large sums amongst the people there, the Khalif said, Do you, Al Mansûr, desire nothing of me? The other replied, I am ashamed to desire any thing in the house of God but God himself. Al Mohdi, upon his return from the pilgrimage, found himself so touched by the pious fentiments inspired into him by that devout expression, that he threw himself upon the ground, and addressed himself to the Deity in the following terms: If I, O LORD, am to be punished, I shall chearfully undergo whatever chastisement I deserve; but, O LORD, look upon none of the faithful as thine enemies on my account. After which, he made Al Mansur Al Hajani, for the reproof he had given him, by suggesting, that he ought never to confound earthly with heavenly things, a present of 10,000 dinars. It has been regarded likewise as an instance of this Khalif's liberality, as well as of his inclination to encourage learned men, that he ordered Merwan Ebn Abu Hafas, one of his subjects, for seventy distichs of Arabic verses that he had composed, the sum of 70,000 dirhêms. The following remarkable story, that has been told of him by Ahmed Ebn Mohammed Abd'aljaafar Al Kazwini, may also be confidered in a fimilar light, and is too entertaining to be omitted here y.

A pleasant AL MOHDI, being one day engaged in a hunting-match, adventure strayed from his attendants, and, being pressed with hunger befalls this and thirst, was obliged to betake himself to an Arab's tent khalif. that he discovered, in order to meet with some refreshment. The poor man immediately brought out his coarse brown bread and a pot of milk to the Khalif. Al Mohdi asked him if he had nothing else to give him; upon which, the Arab went directly to setch a jug of wine, and presented it to him. After the Khalif had drunk a good draught, he demanded of the Arab whether he did not know him? The other having answered, that he did not; I would have you know then, replied Al Mohdi, that I am one of the principal lords of the Khalif's court. After he had taken another draught, he put the same question to the Arab as before; who thereupon an-Swering, Have not I already told you that I know you not? Al Mobdi returned, I am a much greater person than I have made you believe. Then he drank again, and alked his landlord the third time, whether he did not know him? To which the other replied, that he might depend upon the truth of the answer the had already given him. I am then, said Al Mohdi, the Khalif, before whom all the world prostrate themselves. The Arab no fooner heard those words than he carried off the pitcher, and would not suffer his guest to drink any more. Al Mohdi. being surprized at this action, asked him why he carried off his wine? The Arab replied, Because I am usraid that, if you take a fourth draught, you will tell me you are the prophet Mohammed; and if by chance a fifth, that you are GOD AL-MIGHTY himself. This gentle wipe so pleased the Khalif. that he could not forbear laughing at it; and being foon rejoined by his people, he ordered a purse of silver, and a fine vest, to be given the poor man, who had entertained him in so hospitable a manner. Upon which, the Arab, in a transport of joy for the good fortune he had met with, faid to the Khalif, I shall henceforth take you for what you pretend to be, even though you should make your self two or three times more confiderable than you have done z.

WE have already observed from an Arab author of good Some other repute, that Al Mobdi died in a village called Al Rud, in the particuterritory, or district, of Masabdan; and that he was buried in lars rethe same place. He also affirms this Khalif to have been but 39 lating to years of age at the time of his death; which runs counter to what has been advanced on that head by other writers. other historian, or rather annalist, informs us, that Madi (for so he calls Al Mohdi) had also the name of Mohammed, and was succeeded by his son Moses, or Musa. The first day of his reign was Sunday, and the last Wednesday. The captain of his guards was Nafr Ebn Nofair Ebn Mâlec Al Khoza'i, and, after him, Hamzah Ebn Malec Ebn Abd'allah; his judges Mohammed Ebn Abd'allah Ebn Alafa and Afiya Ebn Yezid, who exercised their function together in the great mosque at Baghdad; and his chamberlains Salam Abwaft, Fadl Ebn Al Rabia, and Al Hosein Ebn Rashed. SECT. XXIV.

HARUN AL RASHID, Al Mohdi's second son, being with his father at the time of his death, obliged all the people about him, and particularly those who were members of the Mohdi in house of Hashem, to take the oath of allegiance to his brother the 169th Musa Al Hadi, and sent advice of this into all parts of the gear of the empire; upon which, he was unanimously proclaimed Khalif by the inhabitants of Baghdad. Harûn likewise dispatched an express to his brother Al Hadi, then in Jorjan, with an account of what had happened, and advised him to make all possible haste to Baghdad; where, after his arrival, he constituted Al Rabi, or Rabia, his prime minister, or Visir. The same year, according to Abu'l Faraj, he massacred great numbers of his subjects who had embraced Zendicism, because they ridiculed the pilgrims who went in procession round the Caaba. The Arabs, who professed Zendicism, if we will believe Ebn Kassem, were a sort of Sadducees, or rather Manichees, who maintained the existence of two principles, LIGHT and DARKNESS, and permitted marriage to be contracted between the nearest relations. At first, the Zendicees taught, that men ought to preserve themselves from sin, applied their thoughts intirely to the other world, despised the good things of this, and abstained from all animal food. But, in process of time, they introduced the worship of the two principles above-mentioned, denied that the first degrees of confanguinity prohibited marriage, and despised all the other religions of the country where they lived. Amongst others infected with Zendicism, Al Hadi put to death Yacub Ebn Al Fadl Ebn Abd'alrabmân Ebn Al Abbâs; whose daughter Fâtema, aster her father's death, confessed that she had been got with child by him. appears from some of the eastern writers, that Al Hâdi undertook an expedition into the provinces of Jorjan and Mazanderân, or Tabaristân, in his father's life-time; and that he was in the former of those provinces when that prince died. It also may be inferred from some of those authors, that Al Mohdi, a little before his death, sent him with a body of troops in quest of the Zendicees, in order to bring them to condign punishment; which orders he executed with honour, and to the Khalif's entire satisfaction. We must not omit obferving here, that M. D'Herbelot is guilty of a great mistake, when he afferts Al Mohdi, in direct contradiction to all the best Arab historians, to have died at Baghdad b.

Soon after his arrival at Baghdad, Al Hadi removed Al Fadl Ebn Saleh from the government of Egypt, and substituted Ali Ebn Soliman Ebn Ali Ebn Abd'allah Ebn Al Abba's in his room. The courier difpatched by Harûn Al Raspîd to his brother Al Hâdi, after his father's death, was Salmat Al Wasif, Al Mobdi's freed-man. The person who headed the rebels of Mazanderan, or Tabaristan, was Madar, the lord of Hormuz, or Hormax, It has been already observed, that the mother of Al Hadi was called Kbizarân by Abu'l-Faraj. She was the daughter of Atâ, one of Al Mehdi's servants, and has been denominated Hinzaran by Abu Jaafar Al Tabari . SOON after his accession, Hosein Ebn Ali Ebn Hasan re- Hosein

belled against Al Hadi, and caused himself to be proclaimed Ebn Ali Khalif at Medina; the inhabitants of which city declared Ebn Haopenly for him. From thence he marched to Mecca, and put fan rebels to the sword all the pilgrims there known to be members of against the house of Al Abbas. This revolt, nevertheless, cost the fa- bim. mily of Ali very dear. For the Khalif, having defeated Holein, cut off his head, as well as those of a great number of his adherents, and deprived his family of all the pensions and appointments that they had enjoyed by a particular privilege. Hosein had the character of a valiant and very liberal prince. He is said to have distributed 40,000 dinars, which the Khalif had one day given him, amongst the citizens of Baghdad and Cufa, and afterwards to have retired to his house at Medina in a furred vest only, without so much as a shirt under it. Before he took up arms against the Khalif, he ordered a proclamation to be made, whereby he manumitted all the flaves who should desert their masters, and take on in his service. By this

Al Hâdi dies.

THE next year, being the 170th of the Heira, Mufa Al Hadi, finding himself now settled upon the throne, formed a design to exclude his brother Harûn Al Rashid, notwithstanding the good offices he had done him, from the succes-His view herein was to advance his own fon Jaufar to the Khallfat, who was not yet arrived at the age of puberty. But Yahya Ebn Khâled Ebn Barmac, a person of great reputation for his prudence, and who filled the important post of Visir, endeavoured to dissuade him from carrying such a design into execution, by representing to him, that the Moslems . would not be fatisfied with a Khalif, who could not perform divine service in the mosque, conduct them in their pilgrimage to Mecca, and march at their head against an enemy. The Khalif pretended to be convinced by his reasoning, and to approve of his advice; but he gave Harthamah, a person in whom he could intirely confide, private orders to kill his brother Haran, and Yahya his Vifir. For that purpose, he kept him one night concealed in his palace. But, about midnight, Harthamah heard the voice of Khizaran, the Khalif's mother, calling him by his name, and bidding him come fee Al Hadi dead upon his bed. That prince died suddenly of a cough, which seized him after he had drank a glass of water. He was jealous of his brother Harûn, and the more so, as their mother had discovered a greater affection for the latter than the former on feveral occasions. But the prevented his project from taking effect, by giving him a subtle poison that carried him off by coughing and sneezing. Assadi, a Persian poet, composed a distich upon this tragical event, wherein he Says, that the blood of two brothers is the same, as being formed of the same milk, and that the brother who sheds this is a bomitide of his mother as well as of his brother. We are informed by an Arab writer, that when Yahya attempted to persuade Al Hadi not to alter the order of succession, he told him, that if he prevailed upon the people to violate their engagements to his brother Harûn, this would give them a mean opinion of public faith; but that their veneration for fuch engagements would be heightened by a contrary conduct; that the noblesse, of whom he named a confiderable number, would never come into fuch a scheme; and that consequently this would pave the way to his son Jaafar's exclusion from the Moslem throne. Some of the Arab historians relate, that he first endeavoured to destroy his mother, by sending her a poisoned goose; but that. this not meeting with success, she soon after smothered him with a pillow, as the attended him in a fit of fickness. Be that as it will, he died at Baghdad, or rather Isabad, a place a little without the city, on Friday the 14th day of the latter Rabi, after he had reigned one year, two months, and twentytwo days. He was buried near the spot where he died, and his brother Harûn Al Rashîd performed the funeral service over him. He is faid by some authors to have been, at the time of his death, twenty-four, by others twenty-five, and,

WHEN Al Hadi commanded Harthamab to assassinate his Al Hadi's brother Harûn Al Rashîd, and Yabya his Visir, he assigned the mother, following reason for that order, viz. because the latter was his according. declared enemy, and had, by his feditious discourses, at- to some of tempted to alienate the affections of his subjects from him, as the Arab well as used his utmost endeavours to engage them in favour writers, of the former. He also commanded him, after that double acceptory execution, to put to the sword all the descendants of Ali that death, could be found in any part of his dominions, and then, with a body of his troops, to surprize the city of Cufa; to which, after he had drawn from thence all the partizans of the house of Al Abbas, he was to set fire, and reduce it intirely to ashes. Harthamah would have excused himself from being concerned in so bloody a scheme, by alledging, that he had not a number of troops sufficient to execute such a grand design. But the Khalif threatened him with death if he did not comply with his orders, left him abruptly, and retired into the private apartments of his palace; from whence a few moments after arrived the news of his expiring suddenly in the manner already related. We are told by Abu'l-Farej, that Khiazaran, who governed with an arbitrary fway, having one day preffed Al Hâdi, with an unusual warmth, to grant her a favour she had promifed to obtain for one of her dependents, which he refused to do, she went off in a heat; declaring she would never for the future put up any petition to him. Upon which, he faid to her, in an angry tone, "Keep within your doors, 44 and mind your own buliness; if I should hereafter be in-66 formed, that any of my officers apply to you for favours, I " will order his head to be cut off. How comes it about, et that my courtiers attend your levee, from morning till ec evening, in such crouds? What is the meaning of this?

"Have you not a wheel and a distass wherewith to employ 46 yourself, or a book to put you in mind of your duty, or, " lastly, a house to reside in?" This inraging her to the last degree, she instantly vowed revenge; and accordingly ordered the maids she sent to attend him, in a fit of sickness that foon enfued, to suffocate him, as related above. As foon as he was dead, she commanded Harthamah to apprize her younger son Harûn of what had happened, that he might have an opportunity of immediately afferting his right to the Moslem throne. As to his disposition, he was magnanimous and brave, as well as liberal on fome occasions; tho' he has not been represented by any of the Arab writers as very profuse of his favours. He one day repeated an Arabic verse, and defired Yusef Al Sekail, a pretty noted poet, to produce some others of the same sort; which he did, and received for a reward no more than ten dirhêms. However, we are told by another author, that Merwan Ebn Abu Hafedh, a very celebrated Arab poet, having once presented some of his pieces to him, this prince, who was a good judge of fuch performances, as evidently appears from some of his poems still extant, discovered fuch beauties in them, that he was extremely pleased, and faid to him, Chuse for your trouble, by way of recompence, either to receive immediately 30,000 dirhèms, or 100,000, after you have gone through all the delays and formalities of the exchequer. The poet answered pleasantly, Give me 30,000 now, and 100,000 hereafter. Which repartee was so well taken by Al Hâdi, that he ordered the intire sum of 130,000 dirhems to be immediately paid him. The captain of his guards was Abd'allah Ebn Hazem Ebn Hozaimah Al Tamimi, and, after his abdication of that post, Abd'allah Ebn Mâlec Al Khozá'i; his counsellors Rabî Ebn Yûnas and Omar Ebn Al Rabî; his judges Abu Yusef Yakûb Ebn Ibrahim, a person intimately acquainted with Abu Hanifa, who went, as we may term it, the western circuit, and Sa'ad Ebn Abd'alrahman, who went the eastern; and his chamberlains Al Rabi and Al Fadl, his fon. in that post thirteen years. He is said to have been born, elected patriarch, and died, on the same day of the month. The church at Alexandria enjoyed an uninterrupted repose during the time he presided over it. He was very charitable, and distributed amongst the poor of that city a vast quantity of corn, when a grievous famine raged there. At Antioch died, in Al Hâdi's reign, Dawd, or David, bishop of Dara, who had by violence intruded into the patriarchate there; which enabled George, the lawful patriarch, who had been incarcerated at Baghdad many years, to exercise his patriarchal function at Antioch, in the same manner as before the commencement of the aforesaid schism. George was succeeded by a person named Syriacus, or Cyriacus, a man of uncommon fanctity and austerity of life. The first day of Al Hadi's reign was Thursday, and the last Friday; and the inscription of his seal, God is my LORD. It has been already remarked, that the followers of Abu Hanifa acquired a great degree of reputation, by being taken under the protection of Abu Yulef, his chief justice, in the Khalifat of this prince 8.

SECT. XXV.

A L HADI's death was no sooner known than Harûn Al Al Hâdi Rashid was faluted emperor of the faithful, in the night is sucbetween the 14th and 15th of the latter, according to Abu ceeded by Jaafar Al Tabari, or, if we will believe Eutychius and Abu'l- his brother Faraj, the former Rabi, by the inhabitants of Baghdad; and Harûn Al those of the provinces soon followed their example. Al Rashid. was at this time about twenty-two years of age, and a great favourite of his mother Khizaran, who not a little contributed to his accession. One of the first things he did was, to order fome divers to fearch for a ring given him by his father, worth 100,000 dinârs, that, to prevent its falling into his brother's hands, he had thrown into the Tigris; which being found, without much difficulty, he was highly pleased. The night that Al Hadi died, Khozaima Ebn Hazem rushed into his son Jaafar's bed-chamber, dragged him out of bed, and threatened immediately to cut off his head, if he did not instantly acknowledge Harûn Al Rashîd for his sovereign; which, to save his life, he was glad to do. As faafar's recognition of the new Khalif's authority was attested by some Moslems of distinction, that Khezaima had brought with him for this purpose; the fervice done Harûn Al Rasbîd, on this occasion, proved extremely acceptable to that prince. Yabya Ebn Khâled Ebn Barmac, being informed of Al Hadi's death, came to Al Rashid to acquaint him with the news, foon after his brother expired; and, before his departure, another of the new Kbalif's friends arrived, to congratulate him upon the birth of a son, called first Abd'allab, and afterwards Al Mamun, who, after his brother Al Amin, ascended the Moslem throne. that the same night was famous for the death of one Khalif. the accession of another, and the birth of a third. Al Rashid. had likewise another son, named Mohammed, and afterwards Al Amin, born in the month of Shawal this year; who, tho he was younger than Al Maiman, succeeded his father in the Khalifat. This young prince's mother was Zebeida, the daughter of Jaafar, the son of the Khalif Abu Jaafar Ai Manfûr. Al Rashîd called Yabya Ebn Khâled Ebn Barmac his father, and, for his close and faithful attachment to him, constituted him his prime minister, or Vifer 1.

Harûn was apprized of his brother's death, and consequently of his own exaltation to the Khalîfat, he gave himself up intirely for some time to the reading of the Korân. As the night of Al Hâdi's death was so remarkable for the relation it bore to three Khalîfs, it has been denominated by some of the Arabs, the night, or rather the day, of the family of Hâssem. It appears from Abu'l-Faraj, that Al Rashid, being extremely troubled with the head-ach, commanded Yahya Ehn Khâled Ehn Barmac, his Visir, to send for Bakhtishua, the son of George above-mentioned, from Naisabûr; whom, after his arrival at Baghdâd, he presented with a sumptuous vest, besides many other things of great value, and made him the chief of his physicians, the present year i.

THE following year, being the 172d of the Hejra, com- The westmencing June 11th, 788, the Khalif Al Rashid appointed his ern Khayounger ion, Al Amîn, his successor in the empire; and, after lif dies. him, fettled the right of succession upon his elder son, Al Mamún. He also made the latter of those young princes the prefect of Khorafan, and all the adjacent regions, extending as far as Hamadan; and committed to Jaafar Ebn Yabya Ebn Khâled Ebn Barmac the care of his education. About the fame time, the daughter of the king of the Khozars, or Khazarites, known likewise by the name of the Kbakan, being brought to Fadl Ebn Kbåled Ebn Barmac, died at Barthaa; and her attendants returned to her father's court, where they gave out that she was poisoned. This induced that prince to make preparations for a war with the Khalif. Soon after, a body of the Mostern forces made an irruption into the imperial territories, and penetrated as far as Ephefus. Al Rashid also removed Masa Ebn Isa, during the time of this irruption, from the government of Egypt, and substituted Mosema Ebn Yahya in his room; appointing Amru Ebn Mabran collector of the tribute there. But he foon deposed Moslema, and sent Mohammed Ebn Zabar to succeed him. We must not forget to observe, that Abd alrahman Ebn Moawiyah Ebn Hesham Ebn Abd almalec Ebn Merwan, the western Khallf of the house of Ommiyah, died this, and not the preceding, year, as we find afferted by Roderic of Toledo, after he had reigned about thirty-three years, in Spain k.

The next year, being the 173d of the Moslem æra, the Acivil Kbalîf deprived Mehammed Ebn Zabar of the government of war in Egypt, and conferred upon Yezid Ebn Hâtem that honourable Spain. and lucrative post. In the month of September, this year, the Arabs made another irruption into the territories of the Greek emperor, and deseated a Christian army sent by that prince to oppose them. Diagenes, an imperial officer of great merit and bravery, together with several other commanders, and a vast number of soldiers, perished in the action. About this time, a civil war broke out between Hesbâm, Abd'alrahmân's eldest son, who succeeded him in the western Khalîsfat, and his brother Solimân, who presided over the principality of Toledo, in Spain. The armies commanded by those two princes came to a general action near a sortress called Bulche; where, after a sharp engagement, Solimân was overthrown, with very great

The Arabs imperial fleet.

In the 174th year of the Hejra, Al Rashid sent a powerful defeat the navy, with a strong body of land-forces on board, to invade the island of Cyprus; which was met and attacked by the Chrifian fleet, under the conduct of Theophilus, duke or prince of Gibyra, off the Chelidonian promontory. The Christians, after a vigorous action, were intirely defeated, and Theophilus himself taken prisoner. Being brought before the Khalif Harun Al Rashid, called Aaron by Theophanes, and refusing to embrace Mohammedism, he was put to death, by that prince's order, according to this author; which, we must own, to us appears by no means probable, as being directly repugnant to one of the principal Moslem institutions. Soliman, after the blow he had received at Bulche, fled to Murcia, where he resided the greatest part of this year. He also sold to his brother Hesbam his pretentions to the principality of which he had been deprived, for 70,000 dinars; after which, he crossed the sea, retired into Barbary, and was not seen for fome years afterwards in Spain m.

Some good Khalîf's court.

THE following year, being the 175th of the Hejra, the physicians Khalîf sent Mûsa Ebn Isa Ebn Mûsa Al Hâshemi into Egypt, attend the to take upon himself the government there. About the same time, Jaafar Ebn Yahya Ebn Khâled Ebn Barmac being taken extremely ill, the Khalif sent his own physician Bakhtishua to attend him; who having cured him, Jaafar chose the doctor's fon Gabriel for his physician, and made him many very valuable presents. Gabriel soon after cured Jaafar of another. disorder, by which he acquired no small degree of reputation. One of Al Rashid's concubines stretching out her hand, in yawning, it immediately grew stiff, and remained extended in such a manner that she could not draw it back. Nor could the application of all forts of liniments and unquents to it, as prescribed by the most able physicians of the court, relieve her. Gabriel, therefore, being recommended by Jaafar to her, he waited first upon the Khalif, and defired him to command her to appear publickly at his levee; which being done, he immediately approached her, and began, before the whole circle of courtiers, to undress her. This threw her into such confusion, that the made a violent effort with her whole body to prevent him; and, in the hurry and surprize this occafioned, feized upon the garment he feemed to be going to take off with the part affected: upon which, turning to the Khalif, he immediately cried out, "O emperor of the faithful, she is cured." Then she was ordered to move her hand upwards and downwards, backwards and forwards, and in all directions, several times; after which, she found the use of it perfectly restored. This not a little pleased Al Rashid, who thereupon made Gabriel a present of 500,000 pieces of money. He also desired to know what might be the cause of so strange and unaccountable a disorder. To which Gabriel replied, that, during the time of coition, a thin humour, being agitated by the motion and extension of heat, attending this, had diffused itself over all parts of her body, and, upon the fudden cellation of that motion, was congealed in the interior part of the nerves; which had obliged him to make use of the foregoing artifice, in order to dilate the heat, dissolve the humour that was congealed, and restore a perfect soundness to the limb whose use had been lost. This answer wonderfully pleased the Khalif, and procured the doctor that prince's perpetual esteem. At this time, Al Rashid had likewise for his physician Yohana, or Yabya Ebn Masawiyah, a Syrian, of the Christian religion, who, at the Khalif's request, interpreted, or explained, the writings of the antient physicians, and served him and his fuccessors in the same capacity till the reign of Al Motawakkel. He was greatly honoured at Baghdad, and composed several physical treatises in a very elegant stile. He likewise sounded a fort of school, or gymnasium, there, wherein he instructed his scholars, or young students, who were very numerous, in every branch of literature, but especially physic. He was a person of considerable humour, and several of his facetious sayings have been preserved by Abu'l-Faraj. Cotemporary with this Yahya was Saleh Ebn Nahala, an Indian, who performed several remarkable cures, and made no mean figure at Al Rashid's court. But for a farther account of this physician, as well as of Gabriel, Bakhtishua's son, our readers may have recourse to the author last-mentioned, who, in that point, will give them full and ample fatisfaction n.

which highly pleased Al Amin's mother Zebeida, the granddaughter of the Khalif Abu Jaafar Al Mansur; who thereupon ordered him many valuable presents. We are told likewise. that Zebeida founded this very year the city of Tauris, in the province of Aderbijan, as her husband had before done another. from him named Harania, on the confines of Cilicia, Syria, and Armenia. About the same time, some disputes, that had arisen between Hesbam, the western Khalif, and his brother Abd'allah, were terminated, by the retreat of the latter, who passed over the sea into Africa; which restored peace and tranquillity to the Moslem provinces in Spain .

Fadl, being arrived in Khorasan, wrote a kind letter to Yahya, and persuaded him to submit to the Khalif; who, upon Fadl's application to him, promised to take him into his protection. Upon which, Yahya disbanded his troops, and went with Fadl to Baghdad; where he at first met with a gracious reception from Al Rosbid, but was afterwards put in irons, and closely confined. The same year, the Khalif removed Musa Eba Isa Ebn Musa from the government of Egypt, and appointed Ibrabim Ebn Saleh Ebn Ali Al Halbemi to succeed him in that post. It may be proper to inform our readers here, that Deylam was bounded on the E. by the region of Tabaristân and the district of Ray; on the S. by the districts of Ray, and Kazzwin, and the province of Aderbijan; on the W. by Aderbijan; and on the N. by the Hyrcanian sea. It is divided into two parts, one of which is mountainous, going properly under the name of Deylam, and the other almost one continued plain, known at this time by the name of Ghilan. The inhabitants of this province are called Delomites by Procopius, and Dilimnites by Cedrenus. But, for a more copious description of it, our curious and learned readers may confult the authors here referred to P.

In the 177th year of the Hejra, the Khalif made Amru The evef-Ebn Mabran governor of Egypt, in the room of Ibrahim Ebn tern Kha-Saleb, whom he thought fit to depose; but, in a month's time, lif Herestored him to his former post. However, Ibrahim seems to sham's have been not a little affected with his difgrace, the reason of exploits in which has not been handed down to us, as he died foon the year after. Abd'allah Ebn Zahar Ebn Almeit, who came after 177. him, was foon removed, and succeeded by Ishak Ebn Soliman Al Hashemi, whom Al Rashid sent to preside over Egypt. the month of September this year, a body of the imperial forces advanced to Tarfus in Cilicia, with an intent to invade the Moslem territories; but were obliged to retire from thence the following month, without accomplishing their design. d'almâlec, one of Hefham's generals in Spain, likewise marched at the head of a formidable army as far as the cities of Narbone, or Narbonna, and Girona, made himself master of them, as well as of all the other places of strength situated between them and the Mokem frontiers, and acquired such a large quantity of plunder in this expedition, that the fifth part of it, which fell to Heshare, amounted to the value of 45,000 dinars. With this that prince finished the great mosque at Corduba, which had been founded by his father; and obliged the Christian inhabitants of the country he had conquered, and many others of their brethren fettled in the neighbouring provinces, to whom he was grown extremely terrible, to carry materials for that purpose to Corduba, where he then resided. Hesbam also erected feveral new mosques, and repaired some old ones that were falling to ruin, in other places. He likewise built the famous bridge at Corduba, that remained as a monument of his magnificence for feveral ages. This prince confulting a skilful astrologer, in order to know the length and fortune of his reign, he was told by the artist, that he should not preside over the Moslems of Spain eight complete years; but that his Khalafat there should be prosperous, and he always prove superior to his enemies. This prediction at first greatly affected Hespâm, who remained filent for some time after it was delivered, though he amply rewarded the aftrologer for the trouble he had given him. He afterwards also applied himself to the exercise of all political virtues, administered justice to the poor with fo much impartiality, and treated the people in general, both Moslems and Christians, that he governed, with such affability and beneficence, that he was almost adored by the whole body of his subjects. He first invaded Galicia in the 175th year of the Hejra, where he then committed dreadful devastations; but, on his return home, was met and attacked by Veremund, or Bermudo, though with what success we are not told by any good author. Some of the Spanish writers, however, inform us, that, after the reduction of Narbone, Girona, and the other places above-mentioned, he made an irruption into Biscay and Asturias, laying waste all the country through which he moved; but that at last he received a signal over-throw from the forces commanded by Asphonsus, or Alonzo, II. who drove him from thence with the slaughter of 70,000 men. It must nevertheless be owned, that this last article has not been so much as mentioned by any of the most authentic Arab historians 4.

THE following year, being the 178th of the Hejra, Al Ra-Some commotions in shid ordered Isbak Ebn Soliman Al Hasbemi to retire from Armenia, Egypt, and made Hazima Ebn Ayan his lieutenant there. We must not forget to remark, that when Musa Ebn Isa Ebn Mûsa Al Hâsbemi was governor of Egypt, he repaired and inlarged the great mosque at Mefr, and put it into the form wherein it remained to the time of Eutychius. It appears from Theophanes, that some commotions happened in Armenia; and that the people of that country delivered the fortress of Camach, or Kamakh, into the hands of the Arabi, the present year '.

Al Rashid The next year, being the 179th of the Hejra, Al Rashid performs a consulted all the principal doctors of the law at Bashdad, to pilgrimage know whether he was obliged to undertake a journey on soot to Mecca, in consequence of a vow he had formerly made.

That prince being in great perplexity and distress, and even almost overwhelmed with the afflictions he found himself obliged to sustain in the Kbalifat of his brother Al Hâdi, vowed to perform the pilgrimage to Mecca on soot, if it should please God ever to deliver him out of those troubles. However, after his elevation to the Kbalifat, many of his courtiers remonstrated to him, that he was under no obligation

We are likewise told, that the roads through which he passed were covered with rich carpets, and a variety of stuffs of very considerable price. About the same time, Al Rashâd also appointed his brother Abd'allab Ebn Al Mobdi, after the dismission of Abd'almâlec Ebn Saleh, to preside over Egypt; but, in a short time, he removed him from that post, and substituted Mûsa Ebn Isa Al Hâshemi in his room?

He went amongst the Arabs by the name of the Imam of the city of the flight, as he was a native of Medina. He was born in the year of the Hejra 90, 93, 94, or 95, (for so much do the Moslem writers differ about the year of his birth) and consequently attained to a very old age. Some of those writers pretend, that he was three whole years in his mother's womb. In his last illness, a friend going to visit him, found him in tears, and asking him the reason of it, he answered, "How fhould I not weep; and who has more reason to weep than 46 I? Would to God that for every question decided by me, according to my own opinion, I had received fo many ftripes! then would my accounts be easier. Would to God I had never given any decision of my own!" Al Ghazâli thinks it a sufficient proof of Mâlec's directing his knowledge to the glory of GoD, that; being once asked his opinion as to forty-eight questions, his answer to thirty-two of them was, that he did not know; it being no eafy matter for one who has any other view than God's glory, to make fo frank a confession of his ignorance. A certain person having once demanded of him whether it was lawful to use a porpoise, or fea-hog, for food, he answered in the negative; and, in support of his decision, observed, that the it was really a fish, yet the name it bore made it pass for a hog, which every Moslem was absolutely forbidden to eat. Nor is this to be wondered at; the imposition of names being, according to a tradition that prevails amongst the Mobammedans, of divine original. It may not be improper to observe, that the doctrine of Mâlec is chiefly followed in Barbary and other parts of Africa. The Mossems of the west are said to have waged war with Alonso II. in Galicia, this year, with very bad success; the forces of that prince having sallied out upon them from the mountains, intirely deseated them, cut many of them to pieces, taken a considerable number prisoners, and driven all the rest out of the province. Soon after which event, Hestam departed this life, in conformity to the foregoing prediction, before he had completed the eighth year of his reign. He was succeeded by his son Haken, who sat twenty six years, ten months, and twenty days, upon the Mossem throne in Spain.

In the 180th year of the Hejra, beginning March 16th, 796, Al Rashid removed Musa Ebn Isa Al Hashemi from the government of Egypt, and made his brother Abd allab Ebn Al Mobdi the lieutenant of that country a second time. He also entered the dominions of the Greek emperor either this or the following year, with a formidable army, took the city of Thebasa in Lycaonia, called Al Sassaf by some of the Arab writers, ravaged the neighbouring territory, in a dreadful manner, and then returned home with an immense quantity of plunder, and without having sustained any considerable loss. This year also, according to Abu Jaafar Al Tabari, died Hesbam Ebn Abd'alrahman, of the house of Ommiyah, and was succeeded by his son Hakem Ebn Hesham in the kingdom, or Khaltfat, erected by the Moslems in Spain. Hakem, or Al Hakem, was a prince of great prudence and refolution, and attended in most of his enterprizes with good success. His guards du corps, or life-guards, confifted of 5000 men, 3000 of which, if we will believe Roderic of Toledo, were renegado's, and 2000 of them eunuchs. Part of them were deftined for the defence of his person, and the other part he placed as a garison in his capital city. He caused justice to be impartially administered to the poorest of his subjects, brought even the greatest to condign punishment for their crimes, and was extremely charitable, liberal, and munificent. We must not omit observing, that the Khalif Harûn Al Rashid excessively regretted the death of Målec Ebn Ans, for whom he always entertained the most perfect esteem. That prince one day defiring Malec to come to the palace, in order

About this time, dirhêms were struck in the mint that had been fet up at Saurai, Sarai, or Sariyah, a very confiderable city of Tabaristan, or Tabrestan; one of them coined there the preceding year having been discovered on the coast of the Baltick, not far from Dantzick, in the year 1722. On one side are seen the following words, In the city of Saurai, one hundred and eighty; i. e. Coined in that city, in the 180th year of the Hejra; which answers to part of the years of Christ 796, and 797. reverse exhibits the following inscription, MOHAMMED is the apostle of God, may God be propitious to him, and make him bappy! In the Khalifat of AL RASHID JAAFAR. Hence we learn (which not a little enhances the value of this dirhém) that the Khalif Harûn Al Rashid was surnamed Jaafar, as well as Abu Jaafar and Al Raftid; which cannot be inferred from any of the Arab historians, nor even any of the oriental writers that have supplied M. D'Herbelot with materials for his very valuable work. M. Kehr imagines, that a great number of those pieces were struck in the 180th year of the Hejra by Al Rashid, before he set out from Baghdad on his expedition against the Greeks, and put into the military chest, in order to animate the foldiery, and induce them to diffinguish themselves in an extraordinary manner; in which, perhaps, he may not be very remote from truth. According to Theophanes, the Arabs received a notable overthrow this year from the Greeks, at no great distance from Epbesus; but the Arab historians have not taken the least notice of this action, of which even the Greek author himself has handed down to Solimân and Abd'allah, who had been driven by their brother Hesham into Africa, having been apprized of that prince's death, and of his fon Al Hakem's accession to the crown, assembled about this time a body of troops, to dispute the western Khalifat with the latter, and made the necessary dispositions for returning into Spain w.

THE next year, being the 182d of the Hejra, Al Rashid year 182. appointed Al Leit Ebn Al Fadl, one of his servants, to preside over Egypt. Not long after, the Khalif sent an embassador, with magnificent presents, to the court of Charlemagne, or . Charles the Great, king of France, and emperor of the west, who was admitted to an audience at a place between Verceil, or Vercelli, and Ivrea, the Vercellæ and Eporedia of the antients, and received with great marks of distinction by that prince. It feems to appear from Theophanes, that the Arabs made an impression, about this time, upon the imperial territories, and penetrated as far as Amorium in Phrygia with a very confiderable force; but they were foon obliged to retire from thence, if we will believe this author, with some prifoners they had taken, and without having effected any thing We are told by Roderic of Toledo, that Soliman and Abd'allah landed with a body of troops in Spain, and fixed their head-quarters at Valencia, in order to drive their nephew Al Haken from thence, about the present year. The Moslem empire confisted now of the extensive provinces of Syria, Palestine, Arabia, Persia, Armenia, Natolia, Media, or Adherbijan, Babylonia, Assyria, Sindia, Sijistan, Khorasan, Tabrestan, Jorjan, Zablestan, or Sablestan, Mawara Inahr, or Great Bukbâria, Egypt, Libya, Mauritania, and others, that rendered it the most formidable and puissant state in the world. Moslems were likewise now in possession of most of the provinces of Spain, together with some part of France; tho' the prince that prefided over them there feems to have been independent on Al Rashid, who might, at this juncture, with great propriety, have been stiled the Khalif of the east x.

to make an irruption into the Moslem territories. These ho- tion into stilities were committed against the Khalîf by the Khakân, in the Khaorder to revenge his daughter's death; who, having been be- lif's territrothed to Fadl Ebn Yabya Ebn Khâled Ebn Barmac, and tories. coming to Bartha'a, to be married to him, died there a natural death: upon which, the retinue that attended her returned home, and gave out, tho' without the least appearance of truth, that the was privately destroyed. This greatly incensing the Khâkân, that prince's forces, by his order, entered Mawarâ'lnabr, put a vast number of the Khalif's subjects in that province to the fword, and carried off above 100,000 of them prisoners. Either this or the following year, one of Al Rashid's generals, called Abimelec by Theophanes, with a body of troops ravaged the provinces of Cappadocia and Galatia: upon which, a negotiation was fet on foot between the Khalif and the empress Irene, for an accommodation between the two powers; but without effect. Towards the close of the present year, Mûsa Ebn Jaafar Ebn Mohammed Ebn Hosein Ebn Áli Ebn Ábu Tâleb, who had been imprisoned at Baghdad, was put to death in the prison where he had been confined, by Al Rashid's order. He left eighteen fons and twenty-three daughters behind him, and was buried in the western, or old, city of Baghdad, About this time, Soliman and Abd'allah affembled their forces at Valencia, and had feveral brisk rencounters with fome parties and detachments of Al Hakem's troops; tho' nothing decisive happened, during the course of it, in Spain v.

In the 184th, or 185th, year of the Mohammedan æra, The Chri-Abimelech made another irruption with a body of light-armed stians detroops into the imperial territories, and penetrated to Man-feated by gana. From thence he sent a detachment to the stables of the Arabs, Stauracius, which carried off the horses there, and one in and Al particular that the empress Irene herself sometimes used. An- Hakem other body of the Arabs fell into Lydia, where they committed obtains a terrible depredations, and returned home loaded with booty. complete A third body of troops of the same nation attacked the imperial forces commanded by Peter, a patrician, put them to flight, and made themselves masters of all their baggage, provisions, and military stores. The Christians suffered extremely in the action; Theophanes seeming to intimate, that a vast number of their men, and amongst them many officers of note, were killed upon the spot. In the 184th year of the Hejra, the Khalif-Harûn Al Rashîd, according to Ebn Shohnah, likewise fent Ibrahim Ebn Aglab into the western part of Africa, to take upon him the government of a tract of very confiderable ex-

Solimân, one of them, was killed upon the spot; and Abd'allab, the other, with great difficulty made his escape to Valencia, where he was shut up by the victor's troops. This memorable battle, fought in the 184th year of the Hejra, if we will believe Raderic, so often cited here, determined the sate of Spain z.

An account of Samar-kand, where fone dirhêms were firuck in 801.

THE next year, being the 185th of the Hejra, commencing January 21st, 801, some dirhims were struck in the mine erected at Samarkand; one of which was found not far from Dantzick, in the year 1722. Samarkand, the capital of Mewaru'lnabr, seems to be the Maracanda of the antients, said by Arrian to be the metropolis of the Sogdians, and is placed by Ebn Hawkel, or Ebn Hawkal, on the fouthern bank of the river Sogd. It has always been esteemed as one of the most renowned cities of Asia, being fituated in a most delightful tract, denominated the cogd of Sumarkand, on a confiderable river, that runs through the town, and twelve paralangs in circumference; at least its walls were of that extent in the time of Solian Mohammed Khowarazm Shah, before it was reduced by Jenghiz Khan. From the charming plain, confidered by the orientals as one of the four Tempe's of Afia, in the fouthern part of which this city is situated, and going under the name of the Sogd, i. e. the plain, or valley, of Samarkand, the province in which it stands was called Sogdiana by the antients. The people of the country have a tradition, that this capital was founded by one of the princes of the tribe of Hamyar, lettled in Yaman, that had the general title of Tobba, or successor, tho' they do not take upon them to determine with any precision the time of its foundation; and, in support of this tradition, they pretend, that an inscription, written in the old Hamyaritic character, was dug up near one of the gates of Samarkand. If this be admitted by the learned, they must likewise allow, that the kingdom of the Hamyarites was formed of several very extensive provinces; the city of Samarkand being, according to Al Berjendi. the geographer, about 1000 parasangs distant from that of Samaa, the metropolis of Yaman. Khondemir and the author of the Leb Tarikh, or Lobb Al Tawarikh, write, that the castle of Samarkand was built by Kishtash, the son of Lorash, Lohrash, or Loborash, king of Persia, of the second dynasty, called the · dynasty of Kay, or the Kaianians; who likewise erected a wall 120 parasangs long, that inclosed the district of Samarkand, and defended it from the courses of the people of Turan, or Turkestan. But, notwithstanding this, there is some reason to believe that this city was founded by Alexander the Great; at least if we will pay any regard to the authority of Yakat Ebn Abd allah, the Syrian geographer. Some authors relate, that the Moslems first made themselves masters of Samarkand, under the conduct of Katiba Ebn Moslem, in the 88th year of the Hejra, and not the 85th, as we find afferted by M. D'Herbelet; but others believe, that they first reduced that place in the 93d year of the Mohammedan zera, the very year in which Tarif begun his conquests in Spain. It fell afterwards into the hands of the Soltans, or Khans, of Khowarazm, and was taken and pillaged by Jenghiz Khan in the year of the Hejra 617. But Timur Beg, or Timur Bek, the Tamerlan of the Eurspeans, reftored it, rendered it more flourishing than ever, and made it the feat of his empire in the year of the Hejra 771. After which, it continued to be the residence of his descendants, till they were driven from thence by the Uzbeks, who have remained in possession of it to this day. If Samarkand answers to the Maracanda of the antients, as the affinity between those two names may render something probable, it could not well have been founded by Alexander the Great; fince Maracanda was demolished by that prince, as we learn from Strabe. Adjacent to this city, denominated Samaul Han, Sa-ma-ban, and sometimes Han, by the Chinese, is the little hill Cubac, that supplies the inhabitants with large quantities of stones, out of its bowels, with which the streets of Samarkand are paved. The plain, or valley, in the language of this country Sogd, is, according to forme modern travellers, about eight days journey in length, and stretches itself out from the district of Bokhara to the confines of Al Botom; beginning above twenty parasangs above Samarkand. It is composed intirely of most beautiful gardens and verdant meads; the former of which the neighbouring rivers perpetually refresh with their falutary irrigations. walls of this city, being twelve parafangs in circumference, had formerly twelve iron-gates, a parasang distant from each other, and between every two of them a centry was posted. The tops of these walls were adorned with galleries and towers, which rendered the place likewise more capable of sustaining a siege. The inner or interior city had four gates only, contained the citadel and other public buildings, and was watered by a river, carried through leaden pipes into the fofs or ditch, that entered the town near the gate of Kash In the days of Ramusio, it was as big as Coiro, or Al Kahirah, the metropolis of Egypt, and could at that time fend into the field a body of 60,000 horse. The religions formerly tolerated here were the Christian, as professed by the Nestorians, the Mahammedan, the Magian, and the Sabian; the two last of which have been absurdly confounded by M. Kehr. stands about seven days journey north of the city of Bokbara, and falls short at present of being so splendid as in times past; though it is still very large and populous. 'Tis fortified with strong bulwarks of earth, and its buildings are in much the same condition as those of the city of Bokbara, excepting that more of its houses consist of stone, which is brought from some quarries about the town. The beautiful filk paper made at Samarkand is looked upon to be the best in Asia, and is much esteemed all over the east. The academy of sciences, that flourishes here, is at present one of the most famous seats of literature amongst the Mohammedans. Amongst the learned men produced by this city may be ranked the following: Shams-addin Mohammed Ebn Afbraf Al Hoseini, who wrote some observations concerning the method to be used in disputations, as also concerning figures and the elements of geometry, in Arabic, together with a recention of the commentaries upon the Koran; Abu Ahmed Mohammed Ebn Mohammed Al Omari, who penned a treatise in Arabic upon the art of disputing; Abu'l Kasem, who composed a book upon the deliverance of the mind from error; Mohammed Ebn Mahmud Ebn Mohammed, who published a treatise in Arabic upon the various readings of the Korân; a MS. copy of which work is faid to have been brought out of the east by Signore Pietro Della Valle, a Roman nobleman, and to be still extant at Rome, by Father Marracci; Abu'l Leiths Nasr Ebn Mohammed Ebn Ibrahim, who wrote a commentary upon the Korân, a piece, intitled, Singular cases and allegations of law, Thesaurus Jurisprudentiæ, a beautiful copy of which is preserved in the duke of Sax-Gotha's magnificent library, The instruction of the ignorant, a collection of moral histories, and a treatife bearing the title of Instruction preparatory to prayer; all which were composed and written in Arabic; Rocn-addin Mohammed, a famous lawyer and civilian, as well as the author last-mentioned, who published an Indian philosophical and magical book in Arabic, at Kanuti, or Kanuthi, a city of India, where Soltan Ali Mirza, of the line of Tamerlan, reigned. this piece he prefixed the title of The cistern of life. Najibaddin Mohammed Ebn Ali, who penned a book, intitled, Synopsis medicinæ practicæ, treating of the causes, symptoms, and cure, of all discases; Imâm Dawlat Shâb Ebn Alâo'ddawla Bakhti Shah Al Ghasi, who wrote the lives of twenty Arabic and fix Persian poets. The famous poet Al Nassafi, who composed 2660 diffichs upon all the chapters of the Sonna, likewise died at Samarkand. The celebrated lawyer Abu Atdallub Mobammed Ebn Ismael, born at Bukbara, or Bekbara, the capital of the proper Bukhâria, and from thence furnamed Al Bokhari, who collected the oral traditions of Mohammed, that had been propagated by his followers, and reduced them to a fort of system, fled also from the fury of his enemy into the castle of Khertenk at Samarkand. This piece has always been intitled by the orientals Al Sabib Al Bokbâri. antient, elegant, and rare, MS. copy of it may be seen in the public library at Leipsick, said to have been written in the year of our LORD 1398. The language spoken at Samarkand is a dialect of the Perfic, tho' the Arabic and Mongalico-Tartarian tongues are likewise there very well understood. Tartars of Bukhâria, or the Uzbeks, now in possession of Samarkand, which was taken from the descendants of Tamerlan by their ancestors, under the conduct of Shaibek Khân, in the year of our LORD 1517, are very fond of learned men, especially those that come amongst them from foreign parts, and greatly admire the calligraphy of the Persians. This M. Kehr learned from M. Justus Samuel Scharschmid, who had been chaplain to a regiment at Terki, and frequently conversed with the Tartars of Bukharia. The Uzbeks inhabiting this tract are faid to be extremely handsome; for which reason, Arabshab, in his history of Timúr, calls the men moons, and the women funs. They are vastly clean and neat in their attire; and their turbants are looked upon by the people of Aloppo as the finest and most elegant of any in the east. The Bukharian merchants refort in great numbers to the marts of Syria, and import into that country very confiderable quantities of most excellent filk, gold, and other valuable commodities; taking in return cloth, iron, and English tin. The district of Samarkand also supplies Persia, and the territories of the Great Mogul with pears, apples, raisins, and melons, which it produces in surprizing plenty, of a most exquisite and de-licious taste. As the province of Mawará'lnahr has no particular Khân, the castle of Samarkand salls insensibly to ruin. When the Khân of Great Bukhâria comes in the fummer to pass some months at Samarkand, he usually incamps in the meadows near the town. The river here, which falls into the Amû about the 92° of longitude, would be of prodigious fervice to the place, by opening a communication with the neighbouring countries, if the inhabitants had but the industry to make it navigable. Samarkand stands about seven days journey of Khojandah, a city of Mawara'lnahr, situated upon the Sibûn, or the Jaxartes, in a northern direction, and five east of Ofrushanab, one of the principal cities of Mawara'lnabr. Hence it came to pass, that Arabshah placed it between two rivers, that is to fay, the Jihûn and the Sihûn, or the Oxus and the Jaxartes. Its latitude has been determined by Ulugh Beigh.

This dirhem, therefore, seems to have been struck by the citizens of Samarkand in honour of Al Amin, who had before been declared his father's immediate successor, and was this very year acknowledged to have arrived at his majority, according to the custom of the orientals, when he was fifteen years old, and of age to govern the empire; as may very naturally, and without the least torture or violence, be inferred from the inscription preferved on this remarkable coin. As the inscription is written in the Cufic character, the dirhêm under consideration may not improbably have been one of the same fort with those that had Cufic letters inscribed upon them, and were found, according to Arabsbah, in the ruins of old Samarkand. Be that as it will, this dirhêm apparently takes notice of a fact that has not been clearly and explicitly mentioned by any of the Mossem historians b.

After this, he is said, by Abu his three Jaafar Al Tabari and Khondemir, to have divided the go-Jons. vernment of his extensive dominions amongst his three sons in the following manner: To Al Amin, the eldest of them, he affigned the lieutenancy of the provinces of Syria, Irâk, the three Arabia's, Mesopotamia, Assyria, Media, Palestine, Egypt, and all that part of Africa conquered by his predecesfors, extending from the confines of Egypt and Ethiopia to the straights of Gibraltar, with the dignity of Khalif; to Al Mamun, the second, that of Persia, Kerman, the Indies, Khorafan, Tabreftan, Cableftan, and Zableftan, or Sableftan, together with the vast province of Mawara'lnahr; and to his third fon Al Kasem, Armenia, Natolia, Jorjan, Georgia, Circassia, or Tcherkassia, and all the Moslem territories bordering upon the Euxine sea. With regard to the order of succession, it has been already observed, that Al Amin was to mount the throne after his father, Al Mamun after him, and then Al Kasem Al Mutaman. About this time, Al Hakem forgave his only furviving uncle Abd'allah, permitted him to reside in the city of Valencia, fettled upon him a pension of 1000 dinars a month, engaged to make him an annual present of 5000 more, graciously received his sons, and gave one of them his own sister . in marriage; by which means, peace and tranquillity were intirely restored to the Mostem conquests in Spain c.

Others say, that the Khalif being so vastly fond both of Jaafar and his own sister Abbasa, that he could not long be absent from either of them, in order to enjoy their company and conversation together with the less inconvenience to them, he gave her in marriage to him; permitting him to look upon her as much as he pleased, but in-

joining him never to touch her. Notwithstanding which injunction, Jaafar, being once drunk, according to Abu Jaafar Al Tabari, or rather both of them being young, as is observed by Abu'l-Faraj, lay with her, and got her with child. After the expiration of the usual term, she was brought to bed of twins; which Jaafar sent to Mecca, in order to avoid the fury and resentment of Al Rashid. But the Khalif being foon acquainted with what had happened, ordered "fanfar's head to be cut off, sent his brother Al Fadl, and his father Yabya, to prison at Al Rakka, where they remained till the day of their death, and commanded his fifter Abbasa, who had likewise been confined, together with her two children, to be thrown alive into a well, which was afterwards filled up; tho' he is faid to have shed tears a little before this command was carried into execution. Others relate, that the Khalif ordered Jaafar to be beheaded, because he had built a house that cost him 20,000 dinars; which his master considered as an evident proof of his having embezzled the public money; and, laftly, others affirm, that Al Rashid having taken a dislike to the house of Barmac, and being asraid of Jaafar and his father Yahya, as having imparted to them all his fecrets, he found himself obliged to treat them in the foregoing manner. But whatever was the motive to this furprizing conduct, Jaafar was executed in the palace by Masrûr on Saturday, in the month of Al Moharram, by the Khalif's order, when he had scarce completed the 37th year of his age. Nor could his mother, tho' she had been Al Rashid's nurse, prevail upon the Khalif to release her husband Yahya, and her other son Al Fadl, who had been Harûn's counsellors during the space of feventeen years, from their confinement; he perfifting inflexibly in his intention to depress that once favourite family. which was now become the object of his aversion, and having written to all the governors of provinces to confiscate the effects belonging to every member of it, that should be found in any part of his dominions. It may not be improper to inform our readers here, that the Barmacidæ, or Barmecidæ, called by the Arabs Baramaca, or Barameca, were one of the most illustrious families of the east, being originally descended. according to some authors, from the antient kings of Perfia; tho', if we will pay any regard to the fentiments of Al Zamakhkari, they deduced their origin from the city of Balkh. This writer relates, that the first of this family erected the flately and magnificent mosque at Balkh, called Neu Bahar; which name, in Perfic, fignifies new spring, or new garden; and that they constructed this noble edifice upon the model of the temple at Mecca. with rich damask, and surrounded the whole with 360 chapels, into which the pilgrims, of whom there was a vast concourse here, usually retired, in order to perform their devotions. As the sounders were the proper intendants, or keepers, of this temple, and considered that post as inseparably connected, by the right of patronage, with their family, they assumed from thence the name of Barmac, or Barmec, and ever afterwards retained both the title and the name. A certain author, however, of considerable note in the east, has not scrupled to deduce the appellation of Barmac from a different source d.

THE first who gave a very remarkable lustre to this family, That fawhich most eminently distinguished it from many others that mily highly had before made a much more considerable figure, was the effectued in . aforesaid Yahya Ebn Khâled, named at length Abu Ali Yahya after-Ebn Khâled Ebn Barmac, a person endued with all civil and ages; military virtues, and chosen by the Khalif Al Mohdi for governor to his fon Harûn Al Rashid. He had four sons, Fadl, Jaafar, Mohammed, and Mûsa, who by no means degenerated from their father's virtues, but raised the glory and reputation of their house to the highest pitch. It may not be amis to remark, that, after this illustrious family had been abandoned by fortune, and fallen under the Khalif's displeasure, the people had a more lively fense than ever of the important fervices the members of it had done them. The exalted merit and excellent qualities of those great men then appeared in a stronger light than even when they were in the zenith of their power; infomuch that, in after-ages, they found almost as many historians to celebrate their virtues, and write their lives, as did the greatest conquerors and most powerful princes of the east . -

THE elevated fentiments their cotemporaries entertained of and by their rare and uncommon merit, in some measure appears their cofrom the following remarkable story, which has been handed temporadown to us by a Persian historian. The Khalif Harûn Al ries. Rashid, after he had disgraced the house of Barmac, forbad his subjects ever to mention that family, upon pain of death, on any occasion. But, notwithstanding this, an old man, named Mondir, placed himself one day upon an eminence, that served him for a sort of pulpit, opposite to one of their houses, then deserted, where he entertained all that passed by

with a detail of the finest and most amiable actions of those great men; making upon them a panegyric in form. The Khalif, being apprized of his boldness, ordered the man to be brought before him, and condemned him to die for treating with such contempt his prohibition. Mondir received his fentence with pleasure, and only desired leave to speak two words to the Khalif before his execution. This being granted, the two words he mentioned were drawn out into a long discourse; in which he insisted upon the obligations he was under to the family of Barmac with such force, that the Khalif heard him without impatience, was touched with his words, and did not only give him his life, but likewife made him a present of a very rich gold plate, that he himself used. the most surprizing part of the old man's conduct is still behind. Having received this valuable present from the Khelif's own hand, and being, according to the eaftern custom, prostrate on the ground, he faid, by way of acknowledgment, to his munificent benefactor, See here a new favour that I have received from the house of Barmac! Which words were so remarkable, that they afterwards pailed into a proverb, current in every part of Asia, according to the report of the same bistorian f.

Mohammed Ebn Yahva.

Tho' almost all the members of the family, of which we have been giving our readers here some account, as well as their domestics, and other dependents, were involved in the one of the common destruction, yet Mohammed Ebn Yabya did not meet members of with the least molestation, nor receive even the slightest injury this fami- in the minutest particular. From whence it appears, that his by, escapes-conduct gave no manner of umbrage to the Khallf, and confequently that he was not affected by the cause, whatever it might have been, that produced the foregoing alteration in that prince's disposition towards the race of Barmac. With regard to Yahya himself, he is said by some authors, to have died in prison at Al Rakka, in the year of the Hejra 196, and, by others, in the 193d year of that zera. As for Jeafar, his son, after Masrur had struck off his head, his body was cut in pieces, and a part of it fixed upon every one of the gates of Baghdad. The head also, by the Khalif's order, was exposed to public view on the bridge over the Tigris, in the neighbourhood of that city 8.

Al Rashid to accept

THE same year, that is, the 187th of the Hejra, Al Rashid forces Ni. received a letter from Nicephorus, soon after he had been adsephorus vanced to the imperial dignity, commanding him to return all the money he had extorted from Irene, though this had been secured to him by the last treaty concluded with that of a peace princess, or to expect soon to see an imperial army in the upon bit heart of his dominions. This infolent letter to incenfed the own Khalif, that he immediately affembled his forces, and ad-terms. vanced to Heraclea; laying the country through which he moved waste with fire and sword. For some time, also, he kept that city straitly befieged; which so terrified the Greek emperor, who was afraid left the Arabs should over-run all the imperial provinces in Asia, that he submitted to pay an annual tribute to the Khalif. Upon this, Harûn granted him a peace, and returned with his army to Al Rakka. But a hard frost foon after happening in those parts, Nicephorus took for granted that the severity of the season would prevent Harûn from making him another vifit, and therefore broke the preceding treaty. Of which the Khalif receiving advice, he instantly put himfelf again in motion, refumed the military operations, and, notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather, forced the emperor to accept of the terms prescribed him, and to pay the tribute that had formerly been imposed upon him. After which, he retired out of the Christian territories, and fent Abmed Ebn Ismael Al Hashemi as his lieutenant into Egypt. It appears from a Persian historian, that Nicephorus, before hostilities commenced, made Harûn a present of several excellent (words, all which the Khalif cut in two with his famous fword Samfamah, as if they had been fo many radiflies, in the presence of the Greek embassador, who brought them. This Samfamah was a fword that had fallen into Al Rashid's hands amongst the spoils of Ebn Dakikan, one of the last Hamyaritic princes of Yaman; but is faid to have belonged originally to a valiant Arab, named Amru Ebn Maadi Carb, under whose name it generally went amongst the Mossems. By the present of the above-mentioned swords, Nicephorus gave Harûn plainly to understand, that he was more disposed to come to blows with him, than to pay him the tribute that had been exacted of Irene, whom he fucceeded in the empire. Some of the eastern writers inform us, that the Khallf. upon this provocation, immediately entered the enemy's frontiers, advanced to Heraclea, took that city, and even flew like an eagle to the very gates of Constantinople itself. famous fword above-mentioned has been taken notice of by Ahmed Ebn Yusef and Al Jannabi, in their history of the Hamyarites, as well as by other authors. There did not appear the least flaw in the blade, after the proof Harûn had made of it; which clearly evinced the strength of his arm, as well as the goodness of the sword. It is faid, that Amru Ebn Maadi Carb once gave this fword to a certain prince, who complained that it did not produce the defired effect; upon which, that fuccessful expedition i. THE same year, as appears from one of them found on the coast of the Baltick in the year 1722, feveral dirbems were struck at Balch, Balkhe, or Balkh, a city of Kherafun, or rather of Great Bukharia, situated in the extremity of that province, at no very great distance from the source of the Jiban, the And, or the Oxus, upon a fine river, fometimes denominated by the orientals the river of Balkb. The Persian historians attribute the foundation of this city to Kay-umarraz, the first king of Persia, and say that he gave it the name of Balkb, because he met his brother upon the spot where it stood, after he had been lost a long time; balkbiden, or balgbiden, in the Persian language, signifying to receive and embrace a friend. The first kings of Persia, who resided in the province of Media, or Adherbijan, considered this city, which was in Bactria, as one of their principal frontiers on the side of Scythia; and Loborash, Lorash, or Lobrash, having resigned his crown to his son Kishtosh, or Hydaspes, made it the place of his retreat, and was afterwards killed by Afrafiab, the king of Turkestan. Hence it came to pass, that Yakût Ebn Abd'allah, of Hamath in Syria, afferted Balkh to have been founded by this Lobrásp about the time that Nebuchadnezzar destroyed Jerusalem; though there seems to be no soundation for fuch a notion. Some of the oriental writers make those two princes to have been the same person; and others pretend, that Lobrasp conferred the government of Chaldea upon Nebuchadnezzar, whom they therefore consider as his viceroy, or lieutenant, there. The latter take Lohrasp and Beloch, or Balokh, in the catalogue of Affyrian kings, to have been in reality the same prince, and suppose the last name to have been applied to him, because he fixed his residence at Balkh. Both the name and fituation of this place clearly evince it to have been the Ballra of the antients. For, the city of Ballra. called likewise Zariaspa by Pliny and Strabo, was situated under mount Paropamisus, a part of mount Taurus, or Caucasus, on this fide the Oxus, according to the old geographers. And that the city of Balkh is seated in a plain about four parasange from a mountain, and has its suburbs washed by the river Debash, the Battrus of Curtius, Pliny, Polyanus, and Strabo, which, after it has irrigated the gardens and fields in the neighbourhood of this place, discharges itself into the Ama, or the Oxus, about twelve parasangs from Balkh, we learn from Ebn Hawkal, who had himself very attentively viewed the situation of this city. Nor can any thing be more common amongst the orientals than the promiscuous use and permutation of the letters L and R; from whence it will sufficiently appear, that Bactra and Balkh, Balkhe, or Balch, are words extremely fimilar, if not altogether the same name. The notion here advanced may also be rendered still more probable by several additional confiderations, with which we are supplied by Sharlf Al Edrisi, or the Nubian geographer, Abulseda, and other eastern writers. We say nothing here of the reduction of Battra by Semiramis, 600 years before the death of Lorasp, or Lohrasp, mentioned by Diodorus Siculus; as this historical article intirely depends upon the authority of Ctesias, whom we have elsewhere demonstrated to be a fabulous writer. The fertility of the soil in the territory of Balkh, which, according to Abulfeda, was the metropolis of Khorasan, bleffed with great plenty of water, and producing large quantities of sugar-canes, likewise very well answers to the surprizing fruitfulness of Ballria, in conformity to the description of that country handed down to us by the antients. The district of Balkh is moreover faid to produce hyacinths and rubies, very beautiful to behold, several of which have found their way into Europe at different times. Some of the eastern authors relate, that Lobrasp's general Raham was no other than Nebuchadnezzar, who subjugated Palestine in the days of the prophet Jeremiah. We are told, that Kishtash, or Hydaspes, was crowned at Balkh in the days of the famous Zoroastres, or Zerdusht, at whose instigation he became a convert to Magism, and erected many fire-temples in his kingdom. We are likewise informed, that this monarch afterwards removed from Balkh, and fixed his residence at Estakhr, or Istakhra, the antient Persepolis, in the province of Fars, or Farsistan, that is, Persia properly so called; and that he reigned not only over Persia and Turkestan, or the regions situated beyond the Caspian sea and the Oxus, but likewife the whole kingdom of Habasha, Habessinia, or Ethiopia.

Be that as it will, after a feries of long and bloody wars between the oriental Turks and the Persians, the latter, under their princes of the second dynasty, are said to have made Balkh the capital of their empire, as its situation enabled them to dispute more easily with the former the raffage of the Oxus. The latter kings, however, of the second dynasty, and those of the third, resided constantly at Estakhr, or Istakhr, in the province of Fars, and Tuster, or Susa, in that of Khûzestân, the Susiana of the an-Those of the fourth dynasty chose to settle in Irâk, where they built the city of Al Madayen, upon the eastern bank of the Tigris, in the neighbourhood of Ctefiphon and Seleucia. But, notwithstanding this, Balkh always remained the capital of Khorasan, and was actually so, when it was taken by Aid allah Ebn Amer, in the 27th year of the Hejra, or of CHRIST 647, and not by Ahnaf Ebn Al Kais, as we find afferted by M. D'Herbelot, in the Khalifat of Othmân. Some of the Khalifs of the family of Al Abbas, as well as the Seljûkian princes, and those of the race of the Samani, having resided in other cities of Khorajan, as Nijabar and Merû; the Mogul and Tartar princes also, descended from Jenghiz Khân and Tamerlan, having chosen Herât for their capital; Balkh, Nisabûr, Merû, and Herât were reputed royal cities, and assumed every one of them the title of capital of Khorasan. Nevertheless, Balkh enjoyed the peculiar privilege of being stiled Kobbat Al Islâm, the metropolis of Islamism, and extended its jurisdiction over the territories of Badakhshan, or Balakhshan, Khotlan, and Tokharestan; which undoubtedly rendered it, in some respects, the most opulent, famous, and conspicuous city of the vast province in which it flood. The established religion here is Mohammedism, tho' there may possibly be even at present some few Mogians, whose sacred rites are performed in the old Perfic language, are termed Pehlawi, or Peh'lewan, amongst the Uzbeks. That the Christian religion was not intirely unknown at Balkh, in the 8th century after CHRIST, appears likewise from an antient monument of stone, dug up at Si-ngan-fu, the capital of the province of Shen-fi in China, in the year of our LORD 1625, with an infcription in Chinese, and another in Syriac, upon it; a copy of which is preferved in the Vatican library, amongst the Chinese books presented by Father Couplet to Innocent XI. The Chinese inscription contains the names of seventy misfionaries fent out of Assyria, or Chaldea, and not Palestine, as the Latin translator has fallely remarked, into the empire of China; amongst which we find an historical memoir in the Syriac language, and Estrangelo, or round Chaldean, character, to the following effect: " In the days of the father of fathers " Mar Ananjesu, the catholic patriarch, Adam, the presbyter, " suffragan, and pope, of the Chinese, in the year of the Digitized by GOOQ & Greeks

"Greeks 1092 (of CHRIST 781) and Mar Jazedbuzid, the presbyter and suffragan of the royal city of Chumdan, or "Khumdan, the son of the blessed Millessus, presbyter, born 46 at Balach, or Balukh, a city of Adatchuristan, or Adatkhûristan, erected this monument of stone, upon which is infcribed the dispensation of our Saviour, and the predica-"tion of our fathers to the emperor of China." Hence it appears, that feveral Christian missionaries visited China even in the eighth century, in order to convert the Chinese; and that the city of Balkh was then called Balach, or Balakh. To which we may add, that Abulfeda is intirely in the right, when he afferts that Balch, or Balkh, is an Arabic contraction of Balah, Balach, or Balakh, as may be very naturally inferred from this inscription; and consequently, that Dr. Hyde is abfolutely in the wrong, when he finds fault with the Arab historian for that affertion, and affirms, that the metropolis of Khorasan was never called Balach, or Balakh. This capital had likewise the name of Bilahj given it by Al Firauzahadi, or Al Firûzabâdi, and that of the city of Abraham by the Persians, probably, as is infinuated by Dr. Hyde, because they pretended to be of the Abrahamic religion, and frequently performed a folemn pilgrimage to Balkh, which was confidered by them as facred on that account. Dr. Hyde thinks, that the words Bactra and Bactria were derived from Bokhara, and not from Balkh, by the antients; but, for the reasons above affigned, we are by no means disposed to come into his opinion. This author informs us, that Lohorafb, Lorafp, or Lobrasp, erected a most magnificent fire-temple at Balkh, denominated by him, from the name of his fon, Adur-Kishtash, or Adur-Gushtasp, in which he deposited all the immense treafures he was mafter of. The same author likewise imagines, that, from its founder, or rather restorer, Lobrasp, or Labrasp, this city received the name of Laraspe, or Laraspa, supposed by him to have been corrupted by the Greek copists, or transcribers, into Zariaspe, or Zariaspa; in which, perhaps, he may not be very remote from truth. We must beg leave here farther to observe, that Adam, the deacon, the son of Jazedbuzid, the suffragan, Mar Sergius, the presbyter and suffragan, Sabarjesu, the presbyter, Gabriel, the presbyter and archdeacon, as likewise the ecclesiarch of the cities of Chumdan, or Khumdan, and Sarag, or Sarug, and the emperor of China himself, whose name was written in Chinese characters. are all mentioned in the aforesaid Syriac inscription. But, for a more particular account of this, our readers must have recourse to Sig. Assemani's notes upon Gregorius Bar-Hebraus, who, in that point, will give them full and ample fatisfaction k.

Balkh.

THE language spoken at Balkh is that most elegant dialect ther par- of the Per/u called Deri, which fignifies aulic, or belonging to the court; it being the dialect chiefly used by the king and relating to nobility of Persia, and that which principally obtains at the Persian court. The word Der, from whence Deri is derived, denotes a gate, or port, as well as the court; from which ambiguity proceeds the expression of the Ottoman Port, so common in Christendem, equivalent to that of the Ottoman court, the court of the Grand Signor, or the court of the Othman Soktân. The language stiled by the Persians Deri, or aulic, which, according to Ebn Fakbr-addin Andsbu, the Indo-Persian, who lived above 200 years ago, in the preface to his work, intitled, Farbangh Jibanghiri, written in Persic, was spoken here in the days of the Persian kings of the second dynasty, some of whom resided at Balkh. 'Tis no wonder, therefore, that this most elegant dialect should be called the language of Balkb, the language of Bâmiyân, a very antient city, which is supposed to have stood upon the spot oecupied afterwards by Balkh, or at a small distance from it, and the language of Miril-Shahjan and Bokhara. Mobammedans believe, that either the Arabic or the Persian Deri will be the tongue spoken in paradise. They also pretend, that, when God speaks gently and mildly to the Cherubim about his throne, he uses the latter, but when in a roughet and more authoritative manner, the former of those languages. Amongst the learned men produced by the city of Balkh may be ranked the following: Jamash, a Persian philosopher, cotemporary with the famous Zerdusht, who wrote a treatife

The author of a geographical treatife, that bore the title of Takwim Al Belad, who is always cited by Ebn Al Wardi, and other oriental geographers. under the name of Al Balkhi. Niobammed Ebn Emir Khoand Shah, or rather Khowand Shah, commonly called by the European writers Mirkhond, who composed a great historical work, intituled, Rawdhat Al Safa, was likewise surnamed Al Balkhi by the eastern historians. Mohammed Ebn Okail, a celebrated compiler of history, and another learned man famous for his skill in geography, called Al Balkhi, were both originally of this city. Abu Ma'shar, an astrologer; Abu Khâtem, the translator of the Indian author Shanak upon fishes; Rashid, a celebrated poet; Anwari, a famous poet and aftronomer; besides many other learned men, that we cannot enumerate here, are faid to have been natives of Balkh. With regard to the fate this place has at different times met with, our readers will not be displeased to find the following particulars. Balkh, with the whole province of Khorasan, fell under the dominion of Ismael Al Samâi, or Ismael Al Sammâni, said by some to be descended from the famous Babram Chubin, the first prince of the Sammânian family, according to Ebn Shohnah, towards the close of the third century of the Moslem æra. In the year of the Hejra 432, or of CHRIST 1041, Togrol Beg, or Togrol Bek. a Turkish prince of the Seljukian dynasty, conquered the whole province of Khorafan, and possessed himself of the city of Balkh. In the 618th year of the Moslem zera, answering to the year of our LORD 1221, this city was taken by the Tartars, or Moguls, under the command of Jenghin Khan, who caused all the inhabitants to be conducted without the walls, and massacred without Digitized by GOOGIC pity. In the 771st year of the Hejra, or of our LORD 1369, Tamerlan belieged Sultan Hosein, the last prince of the family of Jenghiz Khin, in Balkh, and obliged him to furrender the place; which his fuccessors kept in their hands, till they were driven from thence by the Uzbeks, under the command of Shaibek Khân, in the ninth century of the Hejra, and the fifteenth of the Christian æra. It was afterwards redeemed by Shih Ismael Sufi Shah, but finally wrested out of the hands of the Persians by the Uzbeks, who remained masters of it almost to this day. We are told, that it was lately the subject of almost perpetual wars between the Persians and the Uzbeks, in the same manner as Baghdad was between the former of those nations and the Turks, and the city of Kandahar between the Shah of Persia and the Great Mogul. It was not long since the residence of a Khan of the Uzbeks, who possess the southern part of Great Bukharia. Its district must be allowed to be but small, in respect of the territories of the Khan of Bukbâria; but as this produces very considerable quantities of filk, of which the inhabitants make stuffs, and is extremely fertile, and well cultivated, the Khan drew lately a very fair revenue from thence. His subjects were the most civilized of the Mohammedan Tartars of Great Bukbaria, to which the advantageous trade carried on between them, the Persians, and the subjects of the Great Mogul, nor a little contributed. The town of Balkh, at present the most considerable of any posfessed in those parts by the Mohammedan Tartars, is large, fair, and populous; and its buildings are for the most part of stone or brick. The fortifications consist of bulwarks of earth, fenced without with a strong wall, high enough to cover those employed in the defence of those fortifications. As this place is the refort of all the bufiness transacted between the Indies and Great Bukhâria, has a fine river passing from the S. S. E. through its suburbs, which is of vast service to the town, and, in time of peace, all foreign merchants, and other travellers, have free liberty and permission to manage their affairs in it, trade flourishes extremely at Balkh. The aforefaid river falls into the Amû about the 380 30' north latitude, upon the confines of Great Bukharia and Khowarazm. Khân's palace, or castle, is a large edifice, built after the oriental manner, and confifts almost intirely of marble, of which there are very fine quarries in the neighbouring mountains. The jealoufy that has long subsisted between the neighbouring powers preserved, till very lately, the Kban of Balkh in a state of independency, and not a little forwarded the extenfion of the trade carried on by his subjects. But he was at last obliged to submit to the Persian forces, under the command of Riza Kouli Mirza, detached by his father Nadir Digitized by Google

Shâh against the Uzbeks, in the year of our Lord 1737, and finally to Nadir Shâh himself, in the year 1739, upon his return from his Indian expedition. We shall conclude our account of this city with observing, that the longitude of Balkh has been determined by Ulugh Beigh, or Olugh Bek, to be 101°00', and its latitude 36°41'; though, according to the more accurate determination of the later astronomers, it stands in longitude 92°20', and latitude 37°10'.

THE anterior part of this dirhem exhibits the words Be- Descrip-Balkha thsamanen wathsamanina wameaten; that is, In Balkh, tion of the 188, or struck at Balkh in the 188th year of the Hejra, or of coin. CHRIST 804. The reverse has preserved the following inscription originally impressed upon it: Mohammedon rasúlo ... llahi wamala namiyyétehi . . . l'Emîro l' Mamûno Abd'allahi . . . bno Emîri l' Momenîna aleya walioyy'amadi l' Moslemîna Yahya; i. e. Mohammed is the apostle of God, and the plenitude of all his creatures: The prince Al Mamûn Abd'allah, the son of the prince of the faithful, is the high supporter of the pillars of the Moslems: Yahya, or John. Hence we learn, that dirhêms were coined this year at Balkh, in honour of Al Mamûn, who had been called to the succession after Al Amin, by one Yahya, who feems to have been at least the governor of that city, if not of the whole province of Khorafan. The title of the plenitude, or nobility, of all creatures, here implies, that Mohammed was the most noble and excellent of all created beings; and that this was one of his fingular properties, and a prerogative peculiar to him, who was believed by his followers to have created Adam and all other creatures, to have been the first prophet in the order of creation, and the last in the order of misfion, to have been the prince and lord of all the fons of Adam, to have had the angels Gabriel, Michael, Izrafil, or Israfil, and Azrail, for his Vifirs, we are informed by some of the most celebrated Mostem authors m.

For a farther account of that expedition, we must be gleave to refer our readers to what has been already observed on this head from Al Makin and Abu Jaafar Al Tabari .

Harûn inwades Phrygia the following year.

THE following year, being the 189th year of the Hejra, Harûn Al Rastid removed Abmed Ebn Ismael Al Hâsbemi from the government of Egypt, and substituted in his room Ebn Zeneiba; whom he foon after deposed, and conferred the post become vacant by his amotion on Hasan Ebn Jamil Al Azdi. About the same time, a body of the Khalif's forces penetrated into Phrygia, overthrew an imperial army fent to oppose them, and retired into the Mostem territories without having sustained any confiderable loss. It appears from a dirhém found on the coast of the Baltick in 1722, that the mint set up at Balkh sent out some more of those pieces this year, or at least in the year of the Hejra 187. This coin teems to have been struck in honour either of Al Amin or Al Mamin, one of the Khalif's fons, or rather of the latter of those princes, whose name it exhibits, according to M. Kehr. On the first side are observable these words, Be-Balkha, tes'en wathsamanina wameaten, At Balkh, in the year 189; or Be-Balkba, fæ'ben wathfanánina wameaten, At Balkh, in the year 187. After the words, Mohammed is the apostle of Gon, on the reverse, another name of the Moslem prophet, wa'alakeratabo, and his attendant, occurs; which implies, that he was united with the Deity in such a manner, that the divine and human natures in him were inseparable. The other part of the inscription is the same with that preserved on the reverse of the dirhim coined at Balkh the preceding year; tho' the Custo letters, of which those inscriptions are composed, as to their forms, admit of some variation.

In the 190th year of the Hejra, commencing November The Kha-27th, 805, Harûn Al Rashid marched into the imperial pro-lif medervinces with an army of 135,000 men, besides a great number takes an of volunteers, and others who were not inrolled amongst his expedition troops. He first laid siege to Heraclea, took it, and reduced it against the to ashes; after which, he made him elf master of several Greek other towns. He is faid to have carried with him from He-emperer raclea no less than 16,000 prisoners; and, after the conclu-army of fion of this expedition, to have made a descent on the island 135,000 of Cyprus, the people of which country he pillaged and plun-men. dered in a dreadful manner. This success so intimidated Nicephorus, the Greek emperor, that he immediately fent the tribute due to Harûn, and concluded a peace with the Khalîf upon the terms he thought fit to prescribe; one of which was, that the city of Heraclea should never be rebuilt. About the fame time, or rather whilst Harun was employed in the aforefaid expedition, Rafe' Ebn Al Leith revolted against the Khalif at Samarkand, and affembled a confiderable force to support him in his defection; which probably induced the latter to grant the Greek emperor so speedy a peace; tho' that prince's troops were by no means in a condition at this time to make head against him. It seems likely, from one of them found near Dantzick in 1722, with the words tes'ina wameaten, i. e. 190, upon it, that the Khalif caused a large number of dirhims to be now struck, in order to defray the expence of a pilgrimage to Mecca, which he performed the following year. The citizens of Toledo, at this time, rebelled against the western Khalaf, Al Hukem, in Spain. But that prince sent his son Abd'alrahmân, then only fourteen years of age, with an army against their city; who, by the assistance of one Ambrez, governor of Saragefa and Huesca, who betrayed them. after they had admitted him into the town, found means to enter the place, without the trouble and fatigue of a fiege, put 5000 of them to the (word, after he had decoyed them to an entertainment, and intirely extinguished the rebellion that had begun to shake Al Hakem's throne. We are told by Theophanes, that the greatest part of a body of light-armed troops, sent by the Greek emperor into Syria, to act against the Khalif

ment of Khorasan, probably because he was not sufficiently attentive to the motions of Rafe' Ebn Al Leith, and appointed Hazima Ebn Ayan to succeed him in that post. The new lieutenant had no fooner entered upon the government of the province affigned him, than he fent his predecessor, who had exercifed unheard-of tyranny upon the people of Khorafan, in chains to Harûn Al Rashîd. The Khalîf also deprived of his office Khasîb, whom he had constituted collector of the revenues of Egypt, the preceding year. It must be here observed, that Theophanes places the last-mentioned irruption of the Arabs into the imperial territories in the present year. informs us, that Harûn advanced to Tyana in Cappadocia at the head of an army, raised in Syria, Palestine, and Libya, of 300,000 men, seized upon that city, and erected a mosque there; that he also made himself master of Heraclea, Thebasa, called Safsaf by Abu Jaafar Al Tabari, Malacopæa, Sideropalus, and Andrasus, the Androsia of Ptolemy, and detached a body of 60,000 men to ravage all the neighbouring districts. Afterwards he penetrated to Ancyra, took a narrow view of that fortress, and then returned home; having laid waste the circumjacent territory with fire and sword. This rapid progress of the Arabs obliged the emperor Nicephorus to send embassadors to Harûn to treat of a peace; which was at last granted by the Khalif, upon condition that he should pay an annual tribute of 30,000 pieces of gold, with his own effigies upon them, and 3000 more with that of his fon; as also that the fortresses ruined by the Mossems should never be refortified or repaired. But the Arabs were scarce got out of the imperial dominions, when Nicephorus ordered those towns to be rebuilt, and strengthened with new fortifications; of which the Khalif being apprized, he immediately returned with a powerful army, repossessed himself of Thebasa, made a descent upon the island of Cyprus, being affisted therein by a Arong fleet, which forwarded the operations of the landforces, demolished many churches there, and carried off a vast number of Christians with him into captivity. Such repeated success could not but intimidate Nicephorus, who thereupon was glad to conclude a fresh treaty with the Khalif, upon the same terms with that he had violated before. Soon after, Harûn undertook a pilgrimage to Mecca, with his three sons, and distributed vast sums of money amongst the poor of that city, as well as Medina, before his return to Baghdâd. We must not forget to remark, that the rebel Rase Ebn Al Leith made a formidable progress in the conquest of Khorasân the present year q.

THE following year, being the 192d of the Hejra, be-The Khaginning November 6th, 807, Harûn marched against Rafe' lif sends Ebn Al Leith, who pretended to dispute the Khalifat with his for Al him. The general rendezvous of his forces was in the plains Mamûn of Rakka, from whence he advanced at the head of them to against Baghdad. Having supplied the troops with every thing neces-bim. fary at that place, he continued his march to the frontiers of Jorjan, where he was seized with an illness which grew more violent after he had entered that province. Finding himself, therefore, not able to pursue his route, he resigned the command of the army to his fon Al Mamun, appointed many experienced officers to ferve under him, ordered him to march directly to Merit in quest of the rebels, and retired himself to Tûs in Khorasan, twelve parasangs of Nisabûr, not Tuster in Khûzistân, the antient Susa, as we find salsely afferted by M. Kehr. Before the Khalif affembled his forces at Rakka, he deprived Hasan Ebn Jamil of the government of Egypt, and sent Mâlec Ebn Daham to Mest to succeed him in that post. We are told by Khondemir, that the Khalif saw in a dream at Rakka, before he departed from that place, a hand over his head, full of red earth, and at the same time heard the voice of a person pronouncing these words, See the earth in which Harûn is to be interred. Upon which, he demanded where he was to be buried? and was instantly anfwered by the same voice, At Tus. This greatly discomposing him, he communicated the dream to his chief physician Gabriel, the fon of Bakhtishua, a Christian, who told him, that this ought to give him no manner of concern, as dreams were only phantoms produced by the fumes which the humours of the body fent into the brain; and that the expedition to Khorasan, in order to extinguish the rebellion of Rafe? Ebn Al Leith there, he was upon the point of undertaking, had given place to this imagination. To which the doctor added, that no better remedy could be thought of to dislipate his chagrin, than to purfue fome favourite diversion that might draw his attention another way. The Khalif, therefore, by his physician's advice, prepared a magnificent regale for his principal courtiers, which continued feveral days. After this, he put himself at the head of his troops, and advanced to the confines of Yorjan, where he was attacked by the distemper that proved fatal to him. This increasing, he found himself obliged to leave the army, and retire to Tus; where the prediction communicated to him in his dream was fulfilled, as will foon more clearly appear. In the month of September this year, according to Theophanes and Cedrenus, the Arabs made a descent upon the island of Rhodes, committed dreadful depredations there, and at last retired into their own dominions with an immense quantity of spoil. About the same time, as may be inferred from the date preserved on one of them found on the coast of the Baltick in 1722, some dirbins were struck at Mohammedia, a city of Kermân, famous for the great number of learned men it has produced. The words that determine the place where, and the time when, this piece was coined, are, Bel-Mohammediyyata eth snatayni wates'ina wameuten, i. e. In Mohammedia, or struck at Mohammedia, in the year of the Hejra 192, of CHRIST 807, or rather 808. As Mohammedia was not at a vast distance from Tûs, and our dirhêm exhibits the name Al Amîn, it seems to have been coined in honour of that prince, a little before his father's decease. As Al Amin was likewise at this time carrying on his military preparations, in order to attack his brother Al Mamûn, then commander in chief of the Khalîf's forces in Khorasan, these pieces might have been struck to enable Al Amin to undertake the projected expedition, immediately after Al Haran's death; or they might have been coined by the inhabitants of Mehammedia, not only as an instance of their homage and loyalty to Al Amin, but likewise with a view of making a considerable present to that prince. At least this is the opinion of M. Kehr. The language spoke at Mohammedia is the Persic; which is not to be wondered at, as this city is almost situated in the very heart of Persia. Other dirhems were likewise coined this year at Bagbdad, as appears from two of them discovered with the former in 1722. We must not forget to observe, that M. Kebr is inconsistent with himself, when in one place he affirms Tas to have belonged to Person, and in another to the province of Khorasan; and that Mehammedia stood in longitude 90° 00', and lat. 31° 45. THE 193d year of the Hejra, beginning October 25th, Harûn Al 808, was famous for the death of the Khalif Harûn Al Ra-Rashid's find, who departed this life the third of the latter Jomada at death, and Tas; being then, according to Eutychius, forty-fix, or, if character. we will believe Abu Jaafar Al Tabari and Abu'l-Faraj, fortyfeven, or, lastly, as others will have it, forty-eight years of age. Upon his arrival at Tas, to which place the violence of his diftemper obliged him to retire, he fent for his physician, Gabriel Ebn Bakhtishua, and said to him, "Do you re-" member, Gabriel, my dream at Rakka? We are now ar-46 rived at Tûs, the place, according to what was predicted " in that dream, of my interment. Send one of my eunuchs to fetch me a handful of the earth in the neighbourhood of "the city." Upon which, one of his favourite eunuchs, named Mafrar, was immediately dispatched to bring a little of the foil of the place to the Khalif; who foon returned, and brought a handful of red earth, which he presented to Haran with his arm half bare. At the fight of which, the Khalif instantly cried out, "In truth, this is the earth, and "this the very arm, that I faw in my dream." Whereupon his fpirits failing him, and his malady increasing, he died three days after this frightful fight, and was buried in the same place, where a stately monument was afterwards erected in honour of the Imâm Ali Ebn Musa Ebn Jaafar, called by the Persians the Imam Riza, going under the appellation of Mashhad Riza, or the sepulchre of Riza, at this day. Some authors relate, that both these princes were interred at Senabad, a village about a parasang distant from Tus; and that Sawri Ebn Al Motez, who prelided over the districts of Nisabûr and Tus in the days of Mahmud Gazni, adorned the spot where Harûn and Riza lay inhumed with many superb and magnificent buildings. Which place has fince been so beautified and inlarged by the later Persian kings, that Tus, with which this is now immediately connected, was at least very lately esteemed the metropolis of Khorasan. Nor did the territory of Tus make a mean figure 500 years ago, fince we are told by Yakût Ebn Abd'allah Al Hamathi, that it then contained about a thousand villages and towns. It appears from Abu'l Faraj, that Bashir Ebn Al Leith, Rafe' Ebn Al Leith's brother, was brought to the Khalif in chains, when that prince was at the point of death; who, at the light of him, declared, that if he had had only time enough left him to fpeak two words, he would say, Kill bim; and immediately ordered him to be cut to pieces in his presence; which being done, he foon after expired. Harûn sat about three-andtwenty years upon the Moslem throne. As to his person, he was tall, corpulent, and of a fair complexion; he had thick bushy hair, which had begun to grow grey, a handsome face, and a black beard: his head he took care to have shaved as often as he performed the pilgrimage to Mecca. With regard to his disposition, he was a person of such singular humanity, that, in this point, he could scarce be paralleled by any of his predecessors, of great liberality, especially to poets, being excesfively fond of the Arab poetry, and even capable of writing verses himself, magnanimous and brave, and so devout, that he is said to have gone eight or nine times on pilgrimage to Mecca, whilst he was Khalif. He spent a considerable time in prayer every day, except when he was fick, and, during the performance of his devotions, according to Abu Jaafar Al Tabari and Abu'l Faraj, made an huncred incurvations. He also distributed every day a thousand din hims amongst the poor, and carried with him an hundred learned men to Mecca; and when he did not go thither himself, he took care to furnish three hundred perfons with proper accommodations for such a journey. None of the preceding Khalifs had so great a number of counsellors, judges, learned men, and poets, in his palace, as Haran Al Rashid. Al Asmaghi relates, that, on a certain day, he found Al Rashid all in tears, upon discovering a passage in the poetical works of Abu'l Ababia, that he applied to himself, and seemed to interpret as a prediction of his death. The distemper that attacked him with great fury and violence at Tûs is faid to have been the bloody flux, which at last proved fatal to him. The first and last day of his reign was Saturday. His first counsellors were Yahya Ebn Khâled Ebn Barmac, and his two fons Al Fadl and Jaafar; after whose dismission, he took Al Fadl Ebn Al Rabî. He is said likewise afterwards to shave delivered the privy feal to Ali Ebn Baktar. Ismael Ebn Sabih also served him in the capacity of prime minister to the day of his death. His judges were Nuh Ebn Daraj and Hafas Ebn Ayat, in the eastern parts of his dominions; and, in the western, Al Hosein Ebn Al Hasan Al Awfi, and afterwards Awn Ebn Abd'allah Al Masudi. We are likewise told, that Mobammed Ebn Sama'a, Sherik Ebn Abd'allah, and Ali Ebn Harmala, prefided over the courts of judicature during some part of his reign. The captains of his guards were Al Kasem Ebn Nasr Ehn Målec, Hamzah Ebn Hozem, and Hafed Ebn Omar Ebn Al Shojair; and his chamberlains, Bashar Ebn Maimun, his fervant, Mohammed Ebn Yahya Ebn Khâled Ebn Barmac, and Fadl Ebn Al Rabî. The infcription of his feal was, Greatness, and power of God. From what has been already observed, it sufficiently appears, that this Khalif was extremely fond of learned men, and cultivated himself at least some of the sciences. He obliged Mâlec, the author of the samous book intitled Mawtha, to write an explication of that piece; who, when the Khalif would have shut the door of the chamber wherein that explication was made, boldly told him, that knowledge was of no manner of service to the great, except they communicated it to those of a lower degree. But, in order to have an adequate idea of the state of learning in the Mossem empire during this Khalif's reign, and persectly to understand on what soot he set the sciences, we must be gleave to refer our curious readers to the history of Tawadûd Khatûn and Harûn, as well as the works of divers antient authors, that he caused to be translated into Arabic; a detail of which may be met with in the Bibliotheque of M. D'Herbelot.

IT has been observed by some of the oriental historians, Harûn that Al Mohdi made his son Harûn a present of a most beau-finds a tiful ruby-ring, which he wore himself, as an earnest of the ring that fuccession, to which he was called after his brother Al Hadi; be had and that the last of these princes, immediately after his acces- thrown fion, sent a eunuch to demand it, as of right belonging to into the This unreasonable demand so incensed Harûn, that, in Tigris. the eunuch's presence, he pulled it off his finger, and threw it into the Tigris, where it remained till Al Hadi's death. But no fooner had he taken possession of the Khalifat, than he commanded some divers to search for it; casting a lead-ring, in order to direct them, from the same part of the bridge where he stood before, when the eunuch demanded Al Mohdi's ring of him, into the river. The divers were fo fortunate on this occasion as to find the thing fought for, without any difficulty or toil; which accident was confidered as a certain prognostic of a happy and auspicious reign. One of these authors relates, that the famous Saladin, in the year of the Hejra 560, loft a ruby-ring, of almost inestimable value, which was as luckily found again as this of the Khalîf Harûn Al Rashîd t.

fician, and fettled a pension of 100,000 dirhems upon him ". WHEN Abd allah Ebn Al Mohdi, the Khalif's brother, was favourite prefect of Egypt, he made a present to Harûn of a most beautiful damsel, of whom that prince was passionately fond. This girl being once extremely ill, and the court-physicians not being able to procure her any relief, the Khalif found himself obliged to apply to his brother for a doctor from Egypt. a allah, upon this application, fent him the patriarch of Alexandria, who had great skill in physic, and who soon cured her of her distemper. This so pleased the Khalif, that he ordered all the churches that had been taken away from the Melchites in Egypt to be restored them, and gave the patriarch a large fum of money for the cure he had performed. This patriarch, whose name was Balâtian, or Balatianus, died in the forty-seventh year of his patriarchate, and was succeeded by one Estat, or Eustatius, at Alexandria, in the sixteenth year of the Khalifat of Al Rashid. Which Eustatius was originally a flax-dreffer; but finding a treafure accidentally in the place where he beat his flax, he became a monk in the monastery of Al Kosair, was at last made the head of his convent, and built the church of the Two Apostles, together with a bed chamber for the bishop. He lived, after his advancement to the patriarchate of Alexandria, only four years; and, after his death, one Christopher was elevated to that high dignity; who, having been afflicted with a pasalytic disorder, appointed a certain bishop, named Peter, to discharge the duties of his function for him. He continued, however, in that sublime post, tho' very infirm, two-andthirty years. In the eighth year of Al Rashid's reign, Theodoritus was constituted patriarch of Antioch, and presided over the Christians there seventeen years. We are told by Sa'id Ebn Batrik, or Eutychius, that there was so remarkable a solar eclipse, as should seem, at Alexandria, after evening-prayer, in Harûn's reign, that the stars appeared, and the people were struck with terror, infomuch that they fell down upon their knees, and implored the divine protection. the Khalifat of Al Rashtd, we must be gleave to refer our readers to the writers mentioned here; as a detail of such eccle-stattical affairs would by no means be compatible with our present design w.

A CERTAIN writer relates, that Harûm being one day told Harûn's that there was a fool at Baghdâd, who pretended to be God, conference he fent for him, in order to converse with him, and discover with a whether he was really a fool or an impostor. At his first ap-fool at pearance, the Khalif said to him, "A man was brought before Baghdâd. "me some days ago, who made himself a fool, and had a "mind to rass for a propher sent by God. I commanded

66 mind to pass for a prophet sent by God. I commanded 46 him immediately to be carried to prifon, and from thence 66 brought to his trial; after the conclusion of which being condemned, he had his head struck off." The food, having heard these words, replied, "You acted on this occasion as became one of my faithful fervants; that wretch never received the gift of prophecy from me, nor had he ever any order or mission on my part." The author, who has handed down to us this story, adds, that, according to the principles of the Mohammedans, one who is besides himself, and has loft the use of his reason, can say nothing but what is true; since it is God who speaks in him. On the contrary, he who pretends to be a prophet, and to be fent by God, when he really ie not for is an impostor, and can utter nothing but lies. The greatest part of the Moslems believe, that sools are agitated by the spirit of God, and of course reverence them as saints stansported by the divine love; and, in conformity to this sentiment, as M. D'Herbelet has rightly observed, it is a saying not uncommon in these western parts of the world, that truth

This Khalif, being in Egypt, said once to his courtiers, He apcourtiers, "The king of this country formerly boasted him-points an elected feel to be God; I therefore, in abhorrence of such pride, Ethiomintend to confer the government of it upon one of the pian save meanest of my slaves. EBN KASSEM has remarked, that the strong castle of Safsaf in Natolia, called by the Turks at this day Belejek, was taken from the Greeks by the Khalif Harûn Al Rashid, who obliged the emperor Nicephorus to pay him tribute, as we have already observed; but that this was retaken from the Arabs by the Greeks, who kept possession of it till the time of Othman, the fon of Ortogrol, the founder of the Othman, or Ottoman, empire 2.

well upon his guard. On such occasions as these, Haran used to fay to him, "You are more learned than I; but I have more sense and prudence than you." This sage's name at length was Abu Sa'id Abd' almâlec Ebn Koraib Al Almâi. He was born in the year of the Hejra 122, and died in the 215th, or 216th, year of that æra, when the Khalif Al Mamun sat upon the Moslem throne. He excelled in the art of grammar and eloquence, was extremely well veried in the most authentic traditions, and had a perfect knowledge of the Korân. These fine qualities so indeared him to the Khalif Harûn Al Rashid, that he did not think it beneath him to take him for his master. But the scholar was resolved to give the first lesson, and that fuch a one as was worthy his high rank and capacity. He ordered Asmai never to offer to teach, or instruct, him in public, and not to be too forward, or officious, in giving him his advice in private; to stay till he was asked his opinion, and then to content himself with giving a clear and precise answer to the questions put to him, without any superfluous additions; above all things, to take care not to attempt preoccupying him in favour of any of his notions, or exacting of him too high a regard for his authority; not to dwell too long on the histories and traditions he should relate to him, without his particular permission; to bring him back with softness, and without any hard words, to the paths of justice, if he should ever depart from thence in his decisions; principally to point out to him the things that were most proper for the discourses he was to make in public, in the mosques and other places; and, finally, never to talk to him in obscure and mysterious. terms, such as were not easily to be understood. This doctor was fomething under a middle fize, of great vivacity and penetration, and had a mind capable of the vastest undertakings. He was the author of many pieces; the principal of which were Offul Al Kelam, The foundations of scholastic divinity, and Fabhat-wa- Al- Naderat, Rare and curious things. We must not forget to observe, that Isa Ebn Jaafar said the funeral service over the Khalîf Harûn Al Rashîd, at the time of his interment; and that Al Hasan Ebn Al Tabtah was governor of Egypt, in the room of Mâlec Ebn Dâham, whom he removed a little before his death, when he expired c.

SECT. XXVII.

T TPON the arrival of a courier from Tar with the news After Al Rashid's of Al Ralbid's death, his Ion Mohammed Mufa Al Amin death, his was proclaimed Khalif, or emperor of the Moslems, at Baghdad. This happened about twelve days after his father's dehammed cease, tho' he had been declared Khalif at Tus the very morn-Mûfa Al ing Al Rashid died. His mother was Zebeida, the daughter Amîn is of Jaafar Ebn Abu Jaafar Al Mansur. He was at Baghdad proclaimea when his father expired. Al Mamun, this prince's brother, had been called to the succession after him, by an express declaration which Harûn, in order to render it the more authentic, had caused to be hung up in the Caaba. He had likewise been indulged by his father with the perpetual government of Khorasan, together with the command of all the troops cantoned in that province. Notwithstanding which, Al Amin, after his accession, formed a design to exclude him from the Khallfat, deprived him of the furniture and moveables of the imperial palace in Khorafan, which had been left him by Al. Rashid, and, in open violation of his father's will, and the former declaration of that prince, which had been renewed a little before his death, ordered the forces in Khorafan to march directly to Baghdad. This not a little incenfed Al Maman, who thereupon expostulated with Al Fadl Ebn Al Rabi, the general of those forces; but without effect; he punctually obeying the orders he had received from the new Khalif. However, Al Mamin took care not to be wanting in his fidelity to his brother. He obliged the people of Khorafan to take the oath of allegiance to Al Amin, and reduced to reason some feditious spirits that had actually excited a considerable body of the inhabitants of his province to a revolt. The new Khalif caused dirhems to be ftruck immediately after his inauguration, as has been rendered probable by M. Kehr; two of which, with the words thfolathfen wates ina wameaten, an hundred and ninety-three, upon them, were found near Stegen, on the coast of the Baltick, the 2d of June, 1722 d.

AL AMIN being extremely addicted to drunkenness and gaming, and thereby become incapable of all manner of applibis brothercation to business, chose Al Fadl Ebn Al Rabi for his prime Visir, from the and intirely abandoned to him the government of his domisuccession. nions. Fadl was a very able minister; though, fearing Al

Mamûn's resentment, if ever he should ascend the Moslem throne, for the ill offices he had formerly done him, he gave his master very bad advice, and such as in the end proved the total ruin of them both. He told him, that his brother Al Mamûn had gained the affection of the people of Khorasán by the good order and police he had established in his government; that his unwearied application to administer justice to those over whom he presided, had so attracted their esteem, that the forces of the whole province were intirely at his devotion; that his own conduct had by no means been relished by his subjects, whose minds were almost totally alienated from him; and that, therefore, he had only one part to act, which was, to deprive his brother of the right of succession that had been lest him by his father, and transfer it to his fon Mûsa, though then but an infant. Khallf, unhappily for himself, followed the counsel of his prime Visir, ordered Al Maman's name to be omitted in the public prayers on Fridays, and in the discourses made afterwards to the people by the Imam, which the Moslems call Khotbah, and declared Mûsa, tho' still in his tender years, the presumptive heir to the crown. After which degradation of Al Maman, Al Amin furnamed Mûsa, at that time not above five years old, Al-Nâtik Billah, Al-Nâtik Belhak, or rather Al-Nâtik B'lhak, i. e. one who reasons and discourses in a manner agreeable to God, or according to truth. But several of the Moslems, after Mûsa had been proclaimed his father's immediate successor, by way of ridicule, nicknamed him Natha Billah, that is to fay, one who, by the grace of God, begins to speak. The Khalif also sent for his other brother from Mesopotamia, the government of which province his father Harûn had conferred upon him; and recalled Al Mamun to court, under the pretext that he wanted his affiftance in his councils. This unparalleled treatment so irritated Al Mamûn, that he was resolved to come to an open rupture with his brother, in order, if possible, to frustrate his wicked designs. In-Read, therefore, of going to Baghdad, as Al Amin had commanded him, he cut off all communication between his province and that capital; pretending, that, as his father Harûn had affigned him the lieutenancy of Khorasan, he was responsible for all the disorders that might happen during his absence there. He also coined money, and would not suffer Al Amin's name to be impressed upon any of the dirbems or dinars struck in his province. Not content with this, he prevailed upon Rafe' Ebn Al Leit Ebn Sayar, who had been for some time in open rebellion against the Khalif, to join him with a body of troops; whose example was soon after followed by Harthema Ebn Aafan; which put him in possession of all the vast territory of Khorasan. Here he bore an absolute sway, officiated in the molque A a 2

mosque as Imâm, and from the pulpit constantly harangued the people. Al Amîn, about this time, removed Al Hasan Ebn Al Tabiāb from the government of Egypt, and appointed Hâtem Ebn Hartbema Ebn Aasan to succeed him in that post. He likewise coined a large number of dirbéms at Bagbdâd, to enable him to carry on the war against his brother Al Mamûn with vigour; one of which, with the words arba'en wates'ina wameâten, an bundred and ninety four, upon it, was discovered near Stegen, in 1722. Theophanes seems to represent the new Khalif as a very weak prince; and intimates, that a civil war, between him and Al Mamûn, which occasioned a vast essurant foon after his accession. These were the principal transactions, if not the only events of any éclat, that happened in the Moslem empire, during the year of the Heira 194°.

Before his departure, Zobeida, as we are told by Abu'l-Faraj, Al Amin's mother, and mother-in-law to Al Mamûn, intreated that general to consider the latter as her own son, or at least the son of Harûn Al Rashîd; and, if he resused to obey the Khalîs's orders, three days after they had been imparted to him, to bring him in silver chains to Baghdâd. Authors, however, differ about the number of forces employed by Al Amûn in this expedition. Some make them to amount to the number above-mentioned, others reduce them to 40,000, and, lastly, others assert, that Ali Ebn Isa set out from Baghdâd with only of Ray. Ali, seeing so small a number of troops, was transported with joy, and promifed himself an easy victory over them; not confidering that these were all choice men, and the flower of Al Mamun's forces. He, therefore, walked about carelesly in his camp, without any manner of precaution. Which being observed by Dawd, surnamed Siyâh, or, as some of the manuscripts of Abu'l-Faraj have it, Shah, one of Thaber's subalterns, he, with a small party, surprized Ali in his camp, cut off his head, and immediately brought it to Thaber Ebn Hosein; who instantly dispatched a courier with it to Al Mamun, then at Merû, the capital of Khorafan. The courier made such haste, that he arrived at Mera in four days time, tho' that city is near 400 leagues distant from Ray, presented the head to Al Mamun, and brought him the news of a victory obtained by his general over the enemy without striking a stroke; the Khalif's troops betaking themselves to flight, as soon as it was known that Ali had been affaffinated in his camp. is the relation of Al Mamûn's first instance of success handed down to us by the Persian historians. But the Arab writers relate this affair in a different manner. Al Maman, according to them, joined Harthema Ebn Aafan with Thaber in the command of his forces, and ordered them to attack Ali, then posted on an advantageous spot of ground, about five parafangs from Ray. Upon which, those generals, in pursuance of their orders, marched up to Ali Ebn Isa's camp, gave him battle, and intirely defeated him. For some time, Ali's right and left wings behaved well, and forced those of Thaher and Harthema to give way; but Al Maman's main body having broke that of the Khalif in such a manner, that the troops which composed it could never afterwards rally, and then fallen upon the two wings which had so pushed those of Thaber and Harthema in the beginning of the action, Al Amin's troops could not fland their ground, but were forced to betake themselves to a precipitate flight. And what increased the general confusion, on this melancholy occasion, was the death of All Ebu Isa himself, who was killed by an arrow let fly at him by the aforesaid Dawd Siyâh, in the heat of the action; which absolutely obliged victory to declare in favour of Al Mamûn's troops. Ali's head was afterwards cut off, and fent as a present to that prince, who amply rewarded Thaher and Harthema for the important fervices they had done him. If we will believe Abu'l-Faraj, Ali thought himself so sure of an easy victory, that he told his men they had nothing farther to do, in order to obtain it (or, as the Arabic text of that author expresses it, to break Thaher to pieces like a tree) than to march over the hill of Hamadan. Hence it appears, that however the preceding accounts may vary in other respects, they seem to Ааз

agree in this, that the dispersion of the Khalif's forces, as well as the loss of Ali, was in a great measure, if not solely, owing to a want of precaution in that general; who could by no means be induced to think, that the enemy would have the courage to attack him, or even dare to look him in the face. But however this may be, whether Ali was surprized, or overthrown by the bravery and resolution of the enemy, this disaster proved of fatal consequence to Al Amin's affairs *.

Al Mamûn affumes the title of Khalîf.

AL MAMUN, having received advice of the death of Ali Ebn Isa Ebn Mâhân, his brother's general, and the intire defeat of the army under his command, assumed the title of Khalif, ordered Al Amin's name to be omitted at the time of divine service in his turn, and made the necessary preparations for carrying the war into the very heart of the Moslem dominions. For this purpose, he divided his forces into two bodies, and commanded both of them to march into Irâk by different routes. One of them obeyed the orders of Thaher, who directed his march towards Abwaz; and the other those of Harthema, who took the road of Holwan; both of them proposing to meet in the neighbourhood of Baghdad, and, after their junction, to form the fiege of that city. In the course of their march this year, Al Mamin's troops defeated a body of the Khalif's forces, and reduced the city of Hamadan, together with several other places of strength, without any considerable loss. In the mean time, Al Amin removed Hâtem Ebn Harthema Ebn Aafan from the government of Egypt, and Substituted Hâyar Ebn Al Ashab in his room. According to Abu Juafar Al Tabari, Thaber, with the body of troops under his command, took post in the territory of Holwan, incamped there, and fortified his camp, to secure it from all insults of the enemy, towards the close of this campaign h.

Some dirhêms coined at Samarkand. We must here beg leave to observe, that it seems to appear from a dirhêm coined at Samarkand the preceding year, and found on the coast of the Baltick in 1722, not only that some of those pieces were then struck in the mint erected there, but likewise that Al Maman assumed the titles of Imâm, protector of the pillars of Islamism, and one by friendship united with Mohammed, at that time. From whence we may inser, that he probably caused himself to be acknowledged Khalis in Khorasân at least a year sooner than that event is said to have happened by the Arab historians, if not immediately after his father's deceale. This, if admitted, may ferve to correct those writers, and perhaps give us to understand, that the Khalif Al Amin had some other motives to a war with Al Mamûn befides those they have suggested to us. The words preserved by this dirhêm are fo remarkable that we must not pass them over in silence here. On one side it exhibits bemedinati Samarkanda sænatan arbaa wates'ina wameatan, i. e. I' momenina, i.e. Mohammed is the apostle of GoD, with whom is united by friend-Thip the Imam Al Mamun, the protector of the pillars of Islam-11m, Abd'allah, the son of the prince of the faithful. This piece feems likewise farther to intimate, that a considerable number of dirbems were coined by the people of Samarkand, with Al Mamun's name upon them, on account of Rafe Ebn Al Leit Ebn Sayar's declaration for him, and as an instance ... of their loyalty to him; if it will not evince that prince's first victory to have been gained in the year of the Hejra 194; tho' it has been placed by the oriental historians in the following year. In either of which cases it must be owned, that the antient coins of the Arabs may, on some occasions, illustrate matters of history, as well as those of politer nations. With regard to the word Imam, it may not be amis to remind our readers, that it properly dehotes the fame person as the Latin Antiftes, or rather, for the most part, one that presides over ecclefiaftical affairs i.

Abu Mûsa Al Amîn, the son of Harûn Al Rashid, who at that time fat upon the Moslem throne. Hence it appears, that some dirhêms were struck at Mohammedia, in the year of the Hejra 195, probably with a design to enable Al Amin to pay the troops he had then in those parts on foot; as likewise that the people of this district, at least, were intirely in the interest of that unfortunate and indolent prince, when those pieces were coined. For a more particular explication of the legend and inscription preserved by the dirhêm now in view, we must beg leave to refer our curious readers to what has been published on this head by M. Kebr, an author to whom we own ourselves obliged for several hints and observations, that can by no means be judged unworthy a place in the work we are at present upon k.

The farther pro-Mamûn's Grms.

THE following year, being the 196th of the Hejra, Al Mamun, who now openly disputed the Khalifat with his brogress of Al ther, failed not to improve the great advantages he had gained. He fent an express to Thaher, commanding him to pursue his march with the utmost expedition, and reach, if possible, the frontiers of Irâk, before Al Amîn could send any formidable army into the field. That general, therefore, upon the arrival of the express, made the necellary dispositions for immediately opening the campaign. But he had no fooner moved out of his winter quarters, in order to recommence the military operations, than he received advice of the approach of two armies, confishing each of 20,000 men, that were advancing to give him battle; but, by the affiftance of his emiffaries and spies, he found means to sow the seeds of discord and dissension between Ahmed Ebn Marid Al Shaibani and Abd'allah Ebn Hamid Ebn Kahtaba, who commanded them; so that, instead of acting in conjunction against the common enemy, as they ought to have done, they turned their arms against one an-This enabled Thaher to make himself master of Holwân, which he took by capitulation, and then marched directly to Ahwaz. Here he attacked a body of the Khalif's forces; but being weakened by the loss of a detachment he had left in garison at Holwan, under the command of Harthema Ebn Aafan, who had joined him before his arrival at that place, nothing decifive happened on either fide. indolence and supineness of Al Amin had hitherto been one of the principal causes of the surprizing progress of Al Maman's sims in so short a time, and given such offence to the people of Raghdad, that they were universally disposed to an infurrection. Of which unaccountable negligence, the following most remarkable instance has been mentioned by some of the

When a courier arrived from the army, with the bad news of Ali Ebn Isa Ebn Mâhân's death and defeat, and imparted it to the Khaltf, he found him fishing, and so little concerned at what had happened, that he faid to him, Don't disturb my diversion; for Kuthar, my freed-man, bas taken two large fishes, and I none at all. Being, therefore, become odious to the citizens of Bagbaad, by such an infamous neglect of public affairs, they unanimously entertained thoughts of withdrawing their allegiance from him. To which they were farther excited by Al Hasan Ebn Ali Ebn Isa Ebn Maban, person of great power and authority in the army, after his arrival from Rakka at Baghdad. They, therefore, deposed him on the eleventh day of the month of Rajek, incarcerated him and his mother Zebeida, and took the oath of fidelity to Al Maman; though afterwards repenting of what they had done. they drove Hajan out of the city, took Al Amin out of prifon, and placed him again upon the throne. They also, in a little time, seized Hajan, and brought him to the Khalif, that he might receive the reward of his late treasonable practices and instigations. That prince, however, did not only forgive him, but likewise, after having supplied him with large sums of money, carriages, horses, arms, and all forts of military flores, sent him to command the troops posted in the neighbourhood of Holwan. But he had no sooner reached the opposite bank of the Tigris, than he took to his heels, in order to make his escape. Of which Al Amin being apprized, he immediately sent a detachment in pursuit of him; which at last coming up with him, after a brave defence, cut him to pieces, and brought his head to the Khalif. Two of his fervants also that attended him, and in conjunction with him behaved with fuch unparalleled resolution, that they several times repulsed the above-mentioned detachment, met with the same fate 1.

In the mean time, Thaber Ebn Hosein made a most rapid Thaher progress with the troops under his command. Having adtakes several towns, and attacked a body of the Khaliss's forces ral towns, posted there, as has been already observed, he obliged them which to retire; though the action by no means ended in their interesting the deseat. However, it so intimidated the commandant of Egypt, Syria, that he thought fit to surrender that fortress to him. Hejâz, and Yataed the conquest of that place. After which, he marched with his army to Al Madâyen, almost within sight of Baghdâd; declare for the inhabitants of which town opened their gates to receive him, upon the flift news of his approach. The rapidity of these conquells, and Al Minin's infamous administration, excited the people of Beypt, Syria, Hejaz, and Yaman, unanimoully to declare for Al Mamun, who was thereupon immediately proclaimed Khülef in all those provinces. All things thus apparently tending to a revolution, that prince took upon him to conflitute feveral governors of provinces, and in particular appointed Ayad Ebn Mohammed to preside, in the room of Hatem Ebn Harthema Ebn Aafan, which he deprived of the government of that country, over the people of Egypt. allo made the proper dispositions for improving the wast advantages he had gained, and even for putting an end to the war in which he found himself engaged the following campaign 27.

To furnish the powers engaged in this war with proper supplies, large quantities both of dirhems and dinars were probably wined in several of the principal cities of the Mollom empire, the present year. That some dirhems were struck at Ispahan, A descrip or Tryaban, the eapital of Persu, we learn from one of them found near the coult of the Baltick in 1722. This city; called by the orientals Isfehan, Isfaban, Esfahan, Asfehan, Ifbehan, Afbehan, Spuhan, Suffinan, and Esbahana, seems to be the Afpa of Ptolemy, placed in Parthia by that geographer, though he umens it and the adjacent places a greater latitude than the eaftern aftronomets and geographers; most of whom place Mpublin in latitude 320 25', and longitude 86° 40'. Conjecture is not a little countenanced by the affinity of names, as Spahan, Asfehan, Isfahan, Ifpahan, &c. Hiust be allowed very deducible from Afpa; tho' Al Bieri feems to derive those names from Ispah, in the plural Ispahan, which in Arabic denotes militia, troops, &cc. because, according to him, the Parthians assembled all their forces, drawn out of Persia, Kerman, and Abroaz, at this place. Some of the oriental writers have ranked Ispaban amongst the cities belonging to the fourth climate; tho', if we will believe Hamdalla, it has a better title given it to the third by its fituation. It stands in a very extensive plain, surrounded by mountains, and has eight di-Arices appertaining to it, that contain about 400 towns and #Illages. The fertility of the foil, the mildness of the scafons, and the fine temperature of the air, all conspire to render Ispahan one of the most charming and delightful cities in the world; for which reason, Ismael Suff; the first prince of the last royal family of Persia, that lost all its power and influence in that country by the dethroning of the late Shah Hofein. when he came to it, gave it the title of Dar Affultana, or the royal feat. Shah Abbas also, his great grandson, was so taken with its pleasant fituation, that he fixed his refidence there. After which, this city was adorned with a fuperb edifice, called by the Persians Dawlat-khana, the royal palace, a spacious market-place, a stately mosque, a noble garden divided into four parts, an extensive hippodrome, and a royal park, or place, where wild beafts were kept, confilling of 1000 acres of ground. It foon likewife received fuch farther accessions of grandeur, as enabled it to lift up its head above all the other cities of Persia. The three principal suburbs annexed to are, Abbas-abat, denominated likewise the mansion of the Taurisians, built by Shab Abbas, and belonging to the people of Tauris; Julfa, inhabited by a colony of Armenians, called by some New Julfa, there having been an antient city going under the lame name in Armenia, upon the Araxes; and Ghebr-abad, or, as the Arabs pronounce it, Kebr-abad, the street of the Magians, occupied intirely by the professors of Magism, or the antient religion of the Persians. The river Zenderoud, having its source on mount Dimawand, separates the city of Ispahan and Abbasabad from Julfa and Ghebr-abad; besides which, another river, called Abi Kuren, by means of a passage made for it through mount Dimawend by Shah Abbas, formerly watered part of the neighbouring tract, and united its streams with those of the Zenderoud. Some authors relate, that there are, or formerly were, two other fireets, or suburbs, belonging to Ispahân; and that the Persians have a common saying amongst them, importing, that this city is half of the world. The district of Ispahan, which is in Al Jebal, or the Persian Irâk, is bounded on the east by Khûzestan; the Susiana of the antients, whose metropolis Tufter, situated in a plain, answers to the Susa of Herodotus, Pliny, and Strabo, and the Shusban of Scripture; and on the fouth by the town of Semîram, that stands at almost an equal distance from this capital and Shir az. the metropolis of Fars, Farsistan, or, as the antient Persians pronounced it, Pars. At first the spot on which Ispahan stands was occupied by four towns, or streets, going under the names of Kirân, Kosher, Jubara, and Derdeshta, built by Tahmurath, furnamed the Demoniac, because he was supposed to have vanquished and bound the devil; and Jamshid. Persian writers pretend, that Kaykobad, the founder of the Kayanian dynasty, was the first king of Persia who fixed his residence here, where he chose his sepulchre; though, according to them, it did not long enjoy the prerogative of capital of that kingdom. Others relate, that the Jews, after their dispersion over Asyria, and some of the neighbouring provinces, being drawn hither by the falubrity of the water. built a small town near another, named Jiey, which was afterwards greatly inlarged, and became a city of very confiderable note. Hence it came to pass, that Yakût stiled Ispahân the larger city of the Jews, in order to distinguish it from Jiey, two miles diffant from it, that had also received the denomination of the Jewish city, or rather the lesser Jewish city; and hence a probable reason may be assigned why the Persians and Armenians should affirm, that Ispahan had antiently the name of Just. Some authors maintain, that the word Ispahân, or Sipahân, denoted cavalry; and that it was applied as a name to the city so called, because the antient kings of Persia affembled their cavalry, in which the principal strength of their armies consisted, here. The greatest part of the Perfian historians attribute the foundation of Ispahan either to Hushenk, or Houshenk, or to Tahmurath, two Persian kings of the dynasty of Pishdad. It lost its title of capital of Persia by the translation of the royal feat, in the days of the Khofri's, first to Sula, afterwards to Estakbr, or Istakbra, the antient Persepolis, and lastly to Al Madayer upon the Tigris. However, in process of time, it recovered this; for Jalaloddin Malec Shab, one of the Seljûkian princes, quitted Khorafan and the Arabian Irâk, where his predecessors had seated themselves, in order to fix his residence in this city. Nevertheless, it was afterwards obliged to leave this honour, upon the decline of the Seljukian dynasty, to Shiraz, which the Modbafferian, or Mothafferian, Soltans of Persia had made the capital of their dominions in the days of Tamerlan; tho' after Ismael Sust had seated himself upon the Persian throne, it grew more flourishing than ever, and was not only made by his descendants the metropolis of Persia, but likewise one of the most magnificent cities of Asia; especially after Shah Abbas I. had joined to it the suburbs, or streets, abovementioned, and established there several colonies of Georgians, we shall here beg leave to lay down the following particulars. mencement This city was distinguished, no less for the magnificence of of the reits buildings, than for the vast tract it inclosed; the circum-bellion in ference having been ordinarily computed at twenty-four miles, 1721. including its gardens and fuburbs. It was fituated in a plain to the north of the Zenderoud, which separated it from Julfa and Ghebr-abad, as already observed. The source of this river is distant only three days journey: there are various accounts concerning the course of it; but it is agreed to be of very small extent. Abbas the Great caused a chanel to be cut through the mountains, thirty leagues distant; by which means the waters of the river Mahmoud Ker, called by fome of the eastern geographers Abi Kûren, as has been above remarked, were conveyed into the Zenderoud; which renders it, according to a very curious modern traveller, as wide and deep, upon the melting of the snows in the spring, as the Seine is in the winter at Paris. This work, which was carried on by some thousands of men, was finished in sourteen. years time, at an immense expence. There is a communication between the two banks of the river by different bridges. The largest and finest was that of Julfa: it was 360 geometrical paces in length, and thirteen in breadth; the two extremities of it were flanked by four round towers, with a covered gallery, which ranged on both fides the length of the bridge; the whole decorated with the richest ornaments of Persian architecture. It was joined by two causeways, made with a gentle descent to a double row of trees, above 3000 paces long. This delightful alley was lined with terraffes and plane trees: it was called Toherbag, or four gardens, and bordered with gardens belonging to the king. The length of it was terminated by a large pavilion towards the town, and on the opposite side by a building, in the royal garden, called Hazar Jerib, or thousand gardens. The town, or suburb, of Julfa. on the one side, and that of Abbas-abad on the other, stretched along the Zenderoud. From the bridge of Julfa to the bridge of Abbas-abad was about a mile and a half. The last received its name from the neighbouring suburb, and served as a communication to the western extremity of the town. The bridge of Barbaroui, which was less distant than that of Abbas-abad from the bridge of Julfa, was the third met with descending: like the latter, it was lined with galleries, and not so much inferior to it in architecture as in length. About a mile further, advancing eastward, was the bridge of Shiraz, or Shiras, so denominated, because it was the road-way from Ispahân to that city; and near it was the village of Cheerestân. The city of Ispahân, or Isfahân, was then in its highest pitch of splendor, and esteemed the largest, if we except some of the cities of China, and most magnificent in Afia, with 600,000 inhabitants, exclusive of those crowds who had fled thither for shelter from different parts of the open country, and were reckoned near 100,000 fouls. Julfa was a town lituated only a mile and a half fouth of Ispahan, on the south banks of the river Zenderoud, or fresh river; on the side of which it extended almost three The Armenians having revolted against the Turks, in the reign of Abbas the Great, and submitted to that prince, he removed part of the inhabitants of Armenia into different provinces of Persia. Those of the antient Julfa, a town on the banks of the Aras, or Araxes, were transported to Ispaban, from whence they afterwards removed, and fettled in this place; to which they gave the name of their former refidence. The people who had been drawn from Erivan, Shirvan, and the lower Armenia, had settled in the other suburbs of Ispahan; but Abbas, defirous of improving this new colony, obliged them to remove to Julfa, together with some Perfees of the neighbourhood of Kerman and Yezd; by which means, four new quarters were formed. Most of the Perses took occasion to retire from thence; so that of 1500 families, which were at first computed in their quarter, there remained only 300, all composed of artificers and labouring-But the Armenians, being an industrious active people, applied themselves to commerce, and, by their care, this colony foon arose to a sourishing condition. They were greatly encouraged by Abbas, and some of his fuccessors, infomuch that Julfa had the appearance of a republic, founded in the midft of a foreign nation. But the Persian court at length, forgetful of its own interests, grew tired of favouring them; and, in Shah Hofein's reign, their privileges, which had fuffered fome diminution under his predeceffors, fell into contempt. This was the lituation of the Armenians at Julfa, whole colony there, by fuch conduct, was reduced to a pretty low ebb, when the furprizing revolution happened in Perfia, in the year 1722; of which, together with its dreadful consequences, the world has been but too well apprized. However, if we will believe a very celebrated modern author, who was himself upon the spot, the inhabitants of Julsa amounted to 30,000 fouls, had thirteen churches, and above an hundred priests, and paid the Persian court 200 tomans yearly for the free exercise of their religion, not many years before that tragical event happened. Abbas abad is fituated to the west of the city, and derived its name from Abbas the Great, its founder, and has always, at least for the most part, been inhabited by Mohammedans. Ghebr-abad was intirely occupied by the Magians, or Perfecs, of whose religious tenets we have already given a full and ample account, who are faid to have retained the same habit and attire that were used in the days of the antient Rersian kings, and to have amounted lately to about 600 families, confifting only of labourers and farmers. Some of the streets were broad, handfome, and of a very confiderable length; fuch were many of those that composed Abhas-abad, some of those that formed. the town of Julfa, and a few of those belonging to Ghebr-. abad; but others of them were narrow, crooked, aloft, and arched, to the great conveniency of those walking in them. Others of them again, the extremely narrow, as well as turning and winding many ways, were of an incredible length. and resembled so many labyrinths. The broad and handsome. Areets were frequently beautified with trees planted in them. with fountains and canals in the middle of them. At a small: distance from the town there were likewise public walks, adorned with rows of plane-trees on each fide, ways paved with stone, fountains, and cisterns. There were also above an hundred caravaniera's, for the use of merchants and travellers, many of which were built by the king and prime nobility of Persia. The ground was plain and even, except in that part of the city bordering upon the river, which seemed a little lower, and approaching nearer a fort of descent, than. the rest. As very little rain fell here, the streets of Ispaban. were frequently full of dust; which circumstance rendered this place disagreeable, during a considerable part of the year. However, in order to remove this inconvenience, or at least to make it more tolerable, the citizens often watered them inthe fummer-time, and whenever the weather was warmer than. The natives admired a castle in the eastern part of the town, which they took to be impregnable, and called, Kalabi-beruk, that is, the citadel of benediction, The public money, and most of the military stores, were said to be kept here; for which reason it went amongst some by the name of Tébbekhoneb, the armory, or magazine. The building was itfelf extremely rude, and the penthouses belonging to it resembled a human note. The baths and caravantera's, or inns, of lefter note in this city were almost innumerable, tho' there was but one. public hospital, which was capable of containing a pretty large. number of infirm people. Most of the public buildings were rather neat than magnificent; tho' the great Meidan, or marketplace, called by the Persians Meidan-beforg, the royal palace, and: the alley denominated Toher-bag, adjoining to it, made a very grand appearance. The Meidan-beforg was 660 paces long, and: 212 broad; and was fituated in the fouth-west part of the city. The antient Meidan, or market-place, going under the name of Meidan-kohoneb, was 300 paces long, and 100 broad; and hadits situation likewise in the south-western quarter of the town.

The former Meidan inclosed the royal mosque, called the mosque of the Imam Al Mohdi; the building denominated Kaiferieb, where all forts of foreign commodities were exposed to fale: and the mint stiled by the Persians Serraab-khoneb, where the current money of the kingdom was coined. Besides the native Persians, there were, according to Dr. Kempfer, who resided some time here, in Ispaban, not many years since, above 10,000 Indians, all supported by trade; 20,000 Georgians, Circassians, or Cherkassians, and Tartars of Dagestan, or Lesgees; a considerable number of English, Dutch, and Portuguese, together with a few of the French nation. The Capuchins, Discalceated Carmelites, Jesuits, Dominicans, and Austin Friars, had likewise their convents here; though they found it impossible to make any converts in this place. The mosques and public colleges amounted to above an hundred, when Dr. Kampfer was in this city. It may not be improper to observe, that Ispahan has produced an incredible number of learned men, amongst whom the following feem to merit our principal regard: Abu Ismael Tograi, a celebrated poet, and privy-counsellor to Al Mâlec Mas'ad Ebn Mohammed Ebn Mâlec Shâb Al Seljûki; whose fifty-nine verses, ending in LI. were published by the learned Dr. Pocock, at Oxford, in 1661. Shams-addin Mabmûd Ebn Abu'l Kâsem Al Ásbâri, who wrote a commentary upon the Koran, and annotations upon Al Beidawi's commentary on that book, besides several other treatises of good repute. The first of the pieces here mentioned is said to contain every thing valuable in the Kesbaf of Al Zamakhsbari. Kâsem Ismael Al Esfabâni, who composed a piece, intitled, Targhib wa-Tarbib, i. e. concerning the things that are to be fought after, or avoided. A copy of this is to be feen in the French king's library. Sharf-addin Abd'al Mo'men Shakerûn Ebn Hebatallah, who wrote a piece, intitled, Athbak adbfdbfebeb, i. e. Golden leaves, containing the lives of some of the most pious Mohammedans. Abu'l Faraj Ali Ebn Hosein Al Esfahani, who published a treatise upon the morals of travellers, as likewise the life of Jahedh, of the family of Barmac, and a piece exhibiting the conduct of the most illustrious men of Persia. Abu'l Kâsem Hasan Ebn Mobammed, who penned a book, intitled, Akblak Ragheb, i. e. The manners and disposition of a curious person. Abu Naim Ahmed Ebn Abd'allah, who wrote a treatife containing his fentiments of the qualities of a fincere friend; wherein he gave a true portrait of many perfons who deserved that character. Mohammed Ebn Ibrahim, who wrote upon the forty traditions. Kamal-addin Al Esfabâni, a celebrated poet, who obliged his countrymen with an elogy upon Soltan falal oddin, and some other works held in good efteem. history of the city of Ispahân. Omad Al Khattâh Abu Abd'allah Mohammed, who compiled a history to which he prefixed the title of The splendor of Syria. He likewise drew up certain annotations and questions upon the Sonna. Abu Thâher Abmed Ebn Mohammed Salesi Al Essahâni, who drew up a piece, intitled, The forty traditions applied to travellers. Abu Zakaria Yahya Ebn Abd'allah Al Essahâni, sometimes called Ebn Mandah, who wrote the history of Ispahân, and the circumjacent region. Kawâm-addîn, Dawd Al Essahâni, and many other eminent writers, whose names and works we are not permitted so much as to mention by the limits prescribed us here o.

SINCE the fatal period above-mentioned, the suburb of Julfa Some fara has been almost totally abandoned by the Armenians, who in-ther parhabited it in very confiderable numbers before. The govern-ticulars ment of Ispahân, twenty-four leagues long, and as many broad, relating to comprehending the districts of Tchi, Marbin, Kieraridge, Ka-Ispahan. bab, Baraan, Perhavar, Elkhan, and Roundester, some of which were formerly well peopled, appeared a few years fince little better than a defert; most of the inhabitants of that fertile and delightful tract being fled or dispersed. Multitudes of them had taken a precarious refuge in the mountains of Loristân, or Laristán, a particular territory lying between Ispaban and Tuster; whose lands were left untilled, and their houses mouldered into ruins. In short, all the distresses of an unfuccelsful war, or the invalion of a barbarous enemy. could not have plunged the people of Ispahan into greater mifery than the victories of their tyrannical king, Nadir Shab, who feemed more follicitous to humble his own fubjects than his enemies. M. Kehr gives us to understand, that the name Ispahân was deduced from the word Sabahan, Sabians, " because," says he, " many Sabians, Magians, or fire-wor-66 shippers, have their habitations in this city." But nothing certainly can be farther fetched than this; as the Sabians and Magians, whom he here absurdly confounds, are two very different fects; the former paying an adoration either to the stars, or the angels and intelligences which they suppose reside in them, and govern the world under the Supreme Deity; and the latter thinking fire worthy of divine honours. though the Magians, or Perfees, with whom, according to him, Ispahân abounds, might at first have settled here in great numbers; yet this can by no means be allowed to hold true of the Sabians, who were by far more numerous in other parts of the east than in Persia, where Magism principally, if not folely, prevailed. Nor has Ispahan, at least, for several ages, abounded with Magians, or Persees, as this author pretends, in support of his hypothesis; that sect having been, ever since the reign of Abbas I. confined to the suburb of Ghebr-abad, as has been already observed. The latitude of Ispahan has been defined by Dr. Kampfer to be 32° 40'; whereas this city has been placed by Nassir Eddin, or Nassir Khoaja Al Tusi, and Ulugh Beigh, or Olugh Bek, in latitude 320 25' P. tion of the pahan was a town of confiderable note, in the earlier times of Mohammedism, though it made a much more considerable mentioned figure in later ages, the aforesaid dirhem itself, exclusive of what might be collected on this head from the eastern writers, is a sufficient proof. This dirhêm exhibits the words Bemedinati Esbahana setten wates' ina wameuten, i. e. In the city of Ispahân. 106; and on the reverse, Mohammed is the apostle of Gon, all direction is from God. The last of which expressions is apparently equivalent to the following affertion, God alone is the true leader and director. As the two Arabic terms in the inscription importing this may either be read Lellahi sarifatan, or Lellahi sarimaton, for saramaton, they may either be rendered All direction is from God, or In God is strength; the last of which versions makes the words perfectly equivalent to the following aphorism of the Mohammedans, Lâ haula wala kuwata élla bellahi, i. e. There is no strength or fortitude but in God. As neither the name of Al Amin, nor that of Al Mamûn, occurs on this dirhêm, we cannot certainly fay by which of those princes partisans it was coined. However, as Thâher Ebn Hosein reduced Abwaz, as well as Waset and Al Madayen upon the Tigris, and obliged the province of Fars to submit to Al Mamûn in 196, the city of Ispabân must undoubtedly have opened its gates to that prince's troops the same year 9.

THE next year, being the 167th of the Hejra, Al Mamun's Al Maforces, under the command of Thaher Ebn Hosein and Han- mun's thema Ebn Aafan, appeared upon the banks of the Tigris, in forces the neighbourhood of Baghdad, and formed the siege of that form the capital. As the Khalif Al Amin himself was shut up in the fiege of place, and it had a numerous garifon, the belieged made a Baghdad. vigorous defence, and destroyed the enemy abundance of men. The besiegers, however, played upon the town incesfantly with their catapults, and were in their turn not a little annoyed by the garifon with the same fort of military machines. The latter likewise made continual sallies, and fought like men animated by despair, though they were always at last beaten back into the town with considerable loss. In fine. the fiege continued through the whole course of this year; during which, the greatest part of the city called Asker At Mobdi, or the camp of Al Mohdi, erected on the eastern bank of the Tigris, was either demolished or reduced to ashes by Al Mamun's troops. The citizens also, as well as the garifon, were reduced to the last extremity by the length and violence of the siege. The subjects of Al Hakem seem to have enjoyed this year a profound tranquillity and repose throughout the whole extent of the Moslem dominions in Spain r.

In the beginning of the 198th year of the Hejra, com- Al Amîn mencing September 1st, 813, the Khalif Al Amin, having afastibeen deferted by his troops, as well as the principal men of nated. Baghdad, who had kept a private correspondence with Thaber Ebn Hosein, found himself obliged to retire to the old town on the western bank of the Tigris, called the city of Abu Jaafar Al Mansûr. However, he did not take this step before the citizens of Baghdad, intimidated by Thaher Ebn Hosein, had formally deposed him, and proclaimed his brother Al Maman Khalif. Thaher, receiving advice of this, caused that town to be immediately invested, planted his catapults against it, and at last starved it to a surrender. Al Amin, being thus reduced to the necessity of putting himself into the hands of one of Al Mamun's generals, chose to implore the protection of Harthema Ebn Aafan, whom he judged to be of a more humane disposition than Thaher Ebn Hosein; which having obtained, he imbarked in a shallop, or small vessel, upon the Tigris, in order to arrive at that part of the camp where Harthema was posted. fign, which he imagined, if carried into execution, would eclipse the glory he had acquired, laid an ambuth for him, which he had not the good fortune to escape. Upon his arrival in the neighbourhood of Harthema's tent, Thaher's foldiers rushed out upon him, sunk his boat, drowned all his attendants, and incarcerated him in Ibrahim Al Talhi's house. Here he was foon after maffacred by fome of Thaber's fervants, who cut off his head, and carried it in triumph to their malter; by whose order it was the next day exposed to public view in the streets of Baghdad. Thaher afterwards fent it to Al Mamun in Khorafan, together with the ring or feal of the Kbalifat, the scepter, and the imperial robe; at the fight of which, that prince fell down on his knees, returned thanks to the ALMIGHTY for his good fuccefs, and made the courier who brought them a prefent of a million of dirhims .

Some of the eastern writers relate, that Al Amin, a little before his death, imagined himself in a dream to fit upon a very high thick wall, and faw, as he thought, at the fame relating to time Thaker sapping its foundations. Nor did he appear to delift from that operation, till the wall he undermined was abfolutely levelled with the ground. This had fuch an effect upon Al Amin, as the Arebs are naturally superstitious, that he resolved never to deliver himself up to the mercy of that general. Other prognoffics likewife, according to the oriental historians, preceded this prince's death. Finding a moth in his cloaths the very day he was killed, as foon as he faw it, through an unaccountable impulse, he cried out, God deliver me from every great misfortune that may happen! Ibrahim Ebn Al Mobili being one night along with him, a little before the furrender of old Baghdad, called the city of Al Manfar, in the golden palace there, he fent for one of his finging girls, named Da'f, to entertain them with fome of her fongs. After they had exhibarated themselves with a few glasses of wine, the fung some verses taken out of the works of the celebrated poet, Al Nabigba Al Ja'di, that have been preferved by Al, Makin; which he could not forbear confidering as prefages of his approaching fate, and which obliged him to speak with a figh the following words: When destiny defeats our projects, we ought to look upon as useless all precantions. The fame night, which did not precede this prince's murder above two or three days, Ibrahim Ebn Al Mohdi and the Kbalif heard a voice clearly and distinctly pronouncing these words, from the neighbouring bank of the Tigris, The subject of your consultation is determined; which, being afterwards repeated, threw the latter into fuch an excels of inquietude and grief, that he immediately fell out of his feat. We are told by Apu'l-Faraj, that Al Amîn was supplied with the vessel in which he attempted to escape out of Thaher's hands, by Harthema Ebn Aafan himself, who attended him therein; that Thaher's men, who gave chace to them in little boats, attacked them with stones and naphtha, and at last sent their shallop to the bottom of the river; that Harthema was with much difficulty faved, being dragged out of the Tigris by the hair of his head; that the Khalif was taken with only an old ragged mantle over his shoulders, his breeches on, and a turbant upon his head, at no very great distance from Basra; that he was incarcerated in a house, to which Thaher's soldiers conducted him, till midnight; and that several Persians, sent by Thaher for that purpose, then entering the room wherein he was confined, with drawn scymitars in their hands, immediately dispatched him, and cut off his head, which was foon after carried by a courier to Al Maman in Kherafan. The aforesaid tragedy was acted either on the twenty-fifth or twentyfixth day of the month Al Moharram, before Al Amin had completed the thirtieth year of his age, and after he had reigned four years and about seven or eight months. He had a handsome face, little eyes, and thick bushy hair. He was tall, fat, extremely robust, and of a fair complexion. Some of the eastern writers have represented him as vastly liberal, tho' at the fame time as rash, imprudent, cruel, intirely attached to his pleasures, and indolent to the last degree. As a farther instance of his infamous supineness, it may be observed, that he and his freed-man Kûthar were playing at chefs, without the least apprehension of any impending danger, when Al Maman's forces pushed the siege of Baghdad with so much vigour that the city was upon the point of being carried by affault. Soon after his accession, he purchased for large sums of money great numbers of eunuchs, who were brought from all parts of his dominions to Baghdad, constantly attended him day and night, and had, together with his free women, of whom he was likewise extremely fond, the principal share of . his favours, Nay, he is faid to have divided all his jewels, besides many other things of inestimable value, amongst them. He also commanded the different provinces of the empire to fend to his court all fuch persons as were the most expert at chess, and other games then in vogue amongst the Arabs, allowed them pensions, and spent the most considerable part of his time amongst them. THE same day that Al Amin was assassinated, the people of He is fur-Bagbdad proclaimed his brother Al Mamun the second eceded by bis brother time Khalif. His mother was Marajel Al Badagheisia. At the time of Al Amin's death, Thaher Ebn Hosein occupied the Al Maeastern, and Harthema Ebn Aafan, the western part of Baghmûa. Hamîd Abd'al Hamîd Al Tûsi was posted also with a body of troops at a place about four paralangs from that city. Soon after his accession, the new Khalif removed Thaher Ebn Hoselm, whom he appointed to preside over Syria and Mesopetamia, from the government of Irak, and substituted Al Hosein Ebn Sahal in his room. He likewise deprived Ayad Ebn Mahammed of the lieutenancy of Egypt, and fent Al Motalleb Ebn Abd'allah Al Jera'i to succeed him in that post; but this governor being soon deposed, Al Abbas Ebn Masa Ebn Isa Al Hâshemi was dispatched to Egypt, to take upon himself the direction of affairs there. About the fame time, the new Khalif, whose name at length was Abu'l Abbas Al Mamun Abu Jaafar Abd'allah Ebn Harûn Al Rashîd constituted Al Fadl Ebn Sabal his Visir; or rather, according to the Persian historians, conarmed him in that exalted charge, to which he had advanced

THE following year, being the 199th of the Hejra, com- Mohammencing August 21st, 814, the new Khalif, who resided still med Ebn at Merû in Khorafân, was alarmed with the news of commo-Tabâtiba tions brought him from feveral parts of the empire; the most rebels dreadful of which was that excited by Mohammed Ebn Ibrahim against Ebn Ismael Ebn Ibrahim Ebn Al Hasan Ebn Al Hosein Ebn Ali the Kha-Ebn Abu Tâleb. commonly called Mahammed Elm Talâila · Ebn Abu Tâleb, commonly called Mehammed Eln Tabâtibâ, at Cufa. The people of that city being incensed at Al Maman, for permitting Al Fadl Ebn Sabal, his Vifir, to manage all things folely by his own authority, were eafily prevailed upon by Mobammed Ebn Tabâtiba to espouse the interest of the house of Ali, or, as they termed it, that of the prophet himself. Mobammed, therefore, found it no difficult matter to affemble a considerable body of the malecontents; the command of which he gave to Abu'lfaraya, an officer who had ferved under Harthema Ebn Aafan, the preceding year. This officer, not thinking himself rewarded according to his merit, left Harthema in difgust, retired to Cufa, and took the oath of allegiance to Mobammed Ebn Tabátiba, as the prophet's lawful fuccessor, there. Being now at the head of his new master's forces, he drove Al Hajan Ebn Sahal's deputy from Cufa, and in several engagements deseated the troops sent against him by the Kbalif's governor of Irák. This enabled him to advance to Bafra, which he possessed himself of without any considerable loss. By these signal advantages, Mohammed Ebn Tabatiba's forces, under the conduct of Abu'lfaraya, began to grow formidable, and to give no small inquietude to the Khalif; especially since the scene of action, as well as the neighbouring tract now wholly occupied by the rebels, was fituated at fo small a distance from the city of Baghdad itself w.

It feems to appear from Roderic of Toledo, that the people Rebellions of Calaborra, the Calaguris of the antients, rebelled likewise, in various about this time, against Al Hakem, the western Khalif, in parts of Spain. them to a sense of their duty. It may also be inferred from Theophanes, that one usurper made himself master of Damascus, with the territory appertaining to it, another ravaged Palestine, a third set up for himself in Egypt, and a fourth in the western part of Africa, the present year. But we shall content ourselves with barely mentioning these rebellions here, as no clear and distinct account of them has been handed down to us by any of the Arab historians x.

THE next year, being the 200th of the Hejra, was remarkable for feveral material occurrences that happened in it. beheaded, Hasan Ebn Sahal, the governor of Irak, having finished his and there-military preparations for reducing the rebels of that province bellions in to the obedience of the Khalif, sent Harthema Ebn Aafan with a powerful army against Abulfardya; who, after the death of Mohammed Ebn Tabatiba, had caused the authority of Mohammed Ebn Mohammed Ebn Zeid Ebn Ali Ebn Al Hofein Ebn Ali Ebn Abu Tâleb to be recognized by the troops under his command. Abu'lfarâyâ, finding himself not able to make head against the Kbalif's forces, fled to Cufa, and even abandoned that city upon their approach. After Harthema Ebn Hafan had possessed himself of the place, and taken the inhabitants under his protection, he sent a detachment in pursuit of Mobammed Ebn Mohammed Ebn Zeid and Abu'lsaraya, who had made their escape; which foon came up with them, took both of them prisoners, and conducted them, by Harthema's order, to Al Hasan Ebn Sabal, the governor of Irak. Several of their accomplices likewise, who were taken at the same time, attended them, under the fame escorte, to the governor's resi-After they had been brought before him, and he had had some conversation with them, AlHasan sent Mohammed Ebn Mohammed Ebn Zeid to Al Mamun, then at Merû in Khera-'san; but ordered one of his executioners to cut off the head of Abu'lsarâyâ. Notwithstanding what is infinuated to the contrary by Theophanes, the province of Egypt feems to have enjoyed a profound repose under the administration of Al Motalleb Ebn Abd'allab, who succeeded his predecessor Al Abbas Ebn Masa Al Hâshemi, and Assari Ebn Al Hakem, both this and the preceding year. After the extinction of the rebellion in Irâk. Harthema Ebn Aafan took a journey to the Kbalif's court at Mera; where he accused Al Fadl Ebn Sabal, his Vifer, of concealing from him the true state of his affairs, and advised him to reside at Baghdad, that he might be, as it were, in the centre of his empire, and confequently much nearer the greatest part of his frontiers. On the other hand, Al Fadl, being ap-prized of this accusation, told the Khalif, that Harthema had excited Abu'lfartya to the late revolt, and done him many ill offices in other respects. This so exasperated Al Mamsin, that be commanded Harthema to be first severely drubbed, and afterwards thrown into prison; where he was soon put to death by an affaffin feat thither by Al Fadl for that purpose. About the same time, Abd alkarim, after he had belieged Car laborra in Spain, obliged the people of that place to submit to Al Hakem, the western Khalif, and ravaged the territory belonging to them in a dreadful manner, returned to that prince's refidence loaded with spoil. The calamities attending the distracted state of the Arabs at this juncture obliged many of the Christians, according to Theophanes, to abandon Palestine and Syria, and to take refuge in the island of Cyprus. Ibrahim Ebn Mûsa Ebn Jaafar caused himself to be proclaimed Khalif in Yaman, as did Mohammed Ebn Jaafar at Mecca, the present year. But as neither of these usurpers was long supported in his attempt, the commotions in those parts were appealed without any great effusion of Moslem blood v.

In the 201st year of the Hejra, beginning July 30th, 816, Great Al Mamun called Ali Ebn Mufa Ebn f aafar Ebn Mohammed Ebn comme-Ali Ebn Al Hofein Ebn Ali Ebn Abu Taleb, after his death, to the tiens at succession, gave him his daughter Omm Habiba in marriage, Baghdad. and ordered him to repair immediately to his court at Merû in Khorafan. He also surnamed him Al Radi min Al Mohammed; alluding thereby to his being one of Ali's descendants, and of the family of Mohammed. He moreover commanded his troops to lay aside their black cloaths, such as the members of the house of Al Abbas constantly wore, and to put on others of a green colour, the principal characteristic of the prophet's family, in their room. He likewise wrote to the governors of provinces, to let them know, that he had found none either of the race of Al Abbas or Ali more pious, excellent, or learned, than Ali Eln Mula; and therefore had nominated that young prince to succeed him in the Khalifat. He sent an express to Al Hasan Ebn Sabal, the governor of Irak, in particular, with orders to him to repair forthwith to Baghdad, to oblige the inhabitants of that capital to dress themselves in green, and, to exact of them a recognition of Ali Ebn Musa's right to the fuecession. This step, however, greatly alarmed the members of the house of Al Ablas, who were found the preceding city into confusion; many of the Moslems there absolutely refusing to comply with the Khalif's orders. Nay, the principal officers of the families of Al Abbas and Hashem affembled on this occasion, resolved formally to depose Al Mamûn, and to proclaim his uncle Ibrahim Ebn Al Mohdi emperor of the faithful in his room. It is intimated by some of the eastern writers. that Al Fadl Ebn Sahal, the first officer of the empire, made profession of the sect of Ali, entertained the highest veneration for the family of that Imam, and inspired his master with the fame fentiments; which produced the aforesaid impolitic conduct. It must here be observed, that the Shiites, or followers of Ali, look upon this Ali Ebn Musa as one of the twelve great Imâms, whom they regard as the twelve great pillars of Islamism. However, the measures pursued at this juncture by the Khalif now in view might have proved the total ruin of his affairs 2.

Ibrahim Ebn Al Mohdi Khalîf tbore.

THE following year, being the 202d of the Hejra, the forces cantoned about Baghdad, excited to this revolt by the friends of the houses of Al Abbas and Hashem, withdrew their proclaimed allegiance from Al Mamun, and created his uncle, Ibrahim Ebn Al Mobdi, Khalif. However, the troops commanded by Al Hasan Ebn Sabal, the governor of Irak, persisted in their fidelity to the former of those princes, and even attacked Ibrabim's forces feveral times; tho' nothing decifive happened on either fide. After his inauguration, Ibrahim made a speech to the people; wherein, like others in the same situation, he promised them all the happiness and advantages that their hearts could defire. Upon which, Cufa, with its dependencies, fubmitted to him. Ibrahim's exaltation, and the courage of his faithful subjects in Irâk, hastened Al Mamûn's journey to Baghdad. Upon his arrival at Sarkhas, or Sarakhas (which is undoubtedly the true reading in Al Makin) a town of Khorafân, and not at Baghdâd, as is intimated by some of the Persian historians, he gave private orders to an assassin to murder Al Fadl Ebn Sahal, his Vifer, who had been the chief cause of all the disturbances in the empire, in a bath; and afterwards put the murderer to death, for the perpetration of a crime which he pretended to abhor. This Al Fadl is faid to have been the first Arab who inserted his surname in the letters that he wrote. Al Hakem, however, according to his usual elemency, pardoned the wives and children of those who had been concerned in the revolt. This rebellion is attributed by Roderic to the opulence, luxury, and pride, of the Moslems settled in that part of Spain.

This Ali Ebn Masa has been represented by the Arab writers as a most abstemious and religious youth. His death not a little affected the Khalif, who therefore continued the remainder of the year at Tûs. In the mean time, great commotions happened at Baghdad. The troops there deposed Ibrahim Ebn Al Mohdi. furnamed by them Al Mobarak; who, in order to escape their fury and violence, was obliged to hide himself about the middle of the month Dhu'lhajja, and to remain concealed till Al Mamûn's arrival at Bagbdad. That usurper, whom some likewise call Ebn Shaklah, according to Abu Jaafar Al Tabari, sat upon the Moslem throne at Baghdad almost two whole lunar years b.

THE next year, being the 204th of the Hejra, beginning The far. June 28th, 819, the Khalif Al Mamun entered Baghdad, at mous Al the head of his forces that had attended him from Khorasan, Shafei and were all, in compliance with his former order, dressed in dies in the green. This year was likewise remarkable for the death of the famous Abu Abd'allab Mohammed Ehn Edris, surnamed Al Shafei, the author of the third orthodox sect of the Sonnites. the same day, as some will have it, that Abu Hanifa died, and was carried to Mecca at two years of age, and there educated. He died in Egypt, whither he went about five years before. Some authors relate, that he came to Eaghdad in 195, and performed the pilgrimage to Mecca, from whence he returned in 198, and afterwards took a journey into Egypt. where he had formerly heard that celebrated doctor and Imam, Mâlec Ebn Ans. He is held in the highest repute amongst the Sonnites, for his excellency in all points of learning, and was much esteemed by Ebn Hanbal, his cotemporary, who used to fay, that he was as the fun to the world, and as health to the body. Ebn Hanbal, however, had so ill an opinion of Al Shafei at first, that he forbad his scholars to go near him; but some time after, one of them, meeting his master trudging on foot after Al Shafei, who rode on a mule, asked him how it came about that he forbad them to follow him, and did it himself? To which Ebn Hanbal replied, Hold thy peace; if thou but attend his mule, thou wilt profit thereby. is said to have been the first who discoursed of jurisprudence, and reduced that science into a method; one wittily saying, that the relators of the traditions of Mohammed were asleep, till Al Shâfei came and waked them. He was a great enemy to the scholastic divines, as has been observed by a good author. Al Ghazâli tells us, that Al Shâfei used to divide the night into three parts, one for study, another for prayer, and the third for fleep. It is also related of him, that he never so much as once swore by God, either to confirm a truth, or to affirm a falsehood; and that being once asked his opinion, he remained filent for some time, and when the reason of his silence was demanded, he answered, I am considering first whether it be better to speak or to hold my tongue. The following faying is recorded of him, viz. Whoever pretends to love the world and its Creator at the same sime, is a liar. He also used to say, that, for fixteen years together, he never role from table fatisfied, as imagining that a full meal would disqualify him both for fludy and devotion. We are informed, that when his mother was with child of him, she dreamed that the planet Jupiter fell out of her womb into Egypt, and that a part of it palled from thence into feveral other regions; from whence the interpreters of dreams, whom the confulted on this occasion, inferred, that she should be brought to bed of a son who should first instruct the Egyptians in all kinds of useful knowledge, and afterwards impart the same instruction to other nations. the same subject. His doctrine was held in such high repute amongst the Sonnites in the time of Saladin, that he founded a college at Cairo, or Al Kahirah, in which no other was permitted to be taught. The magnificent mosque and college erected at Herat in Khorafan by Gayatho'ddin, third Soltan of the Gaurian dynasty, was appropriated to the use of the doctors of Al Shafei's feet: and the doctors of the city of Farab, or Fariab, in the Transoxana, according to an eastern writer of good note, were all of the same sentiments. There is a history of these doctors, or followers of Al Shafei, that bears the title of Thabakat Al Shafeiat, in which they are ranged in different classes. The Shafeites were formerly spread into Mawara' lnahr, and other parts eastward, but are at prefent almost intirely confined to Arabia. With regard to the Moslem traditions, it is said that Al Shafei received them from Mâlec Ebn Ans, and transmitted them to Zobari. For, it is looked upon as a point of no small importance by the Mebammedans to know the canal by which those traditions, that deduced their fource from the prophet himself, have been conveyed down to them. We must not forget to inform our readers, that Affari Ebn Al Hakem likewise départed this life in Egypt, over which country he had been fent by Al Mamun to preside, and was succeeded there by his son Mohammed Abunasr, the present year .

In the 205th year of the Hejrd, commencing June 17th, 820, The pronothing very material happened in the Moslem empire, as far wince of as can be collected from the oriental historians. He left behind him nineteen fons and twenty-one daughters, and was succeeded by his eldest son Abd'alrahman, then about forty-one years of age. During some of the last years of Al Hakem's reign, the Christians, animated by the dissensions that reigned in the Moslem part of Spain, took Barcelona and other places, and committed dreadful ravages in their dominions. However, an end being put to those dissensions, Al Hakem was making preparations for war, in order to recover the

As does likewise Thaher Ebn Hofein.

THE next year, being the 207th year of the Mohammedan æra, that renowned general Thaber Ebn Hosein died at Merst in Khorasan, after he had been two years governor of that vast province. He was liberal, prudent, magnanimous, and brave, and had all the great qualities requisite to form a consummate general. He is said, by Abu Jacfar Al Tabari, to have given an Arab poet 300,000 dinars for a few verses he brought him, intended as a panegyric upon some of his heroic actions; and to have told him, that he would have made him still a larger present, had his verses been more numerous. This Thaher Ebn Hosein, according to some of the oriental authors, was the founder of the dynasty of the Thaherians; for a particular account of which, we must beg leave to refer our curious readers to the Persian historians. It appears from Cedrenus, that the Moslems of Spain had landed a body of troops in Crete, defeated the imperial forces fent against them, and made themselves masters of at least a considerable part of places that had been lost, when he was surprized by death. But an accurate and particular account of the Moslem transactions in Spain, during this period, has not been handed down to us by any of either the eaftern or western historians e.

But Abd' alrahman marched against him, dispersed the troops he had affembled, and forced him to betake himself to a precipitate flight; a few days after which defeat Abd'allab expired. The rebellion being thus extinguished, Abd alrabmân ordered Abd'allab's wives and children to be brought before him, and very liberally supplied them with every thing they flood in need of. He likewife ordained, that, for the future, children should always inherit their parents estates and effects; and that these should never devolve to brothers and fifters, or other near relations, and much less to persons of another family, when iffue was left by the deceased, as had Sometimes formerly happened amongst the Moslems in Spain h.

The answer returned by Ibrahim Ebn Al Mohdi not being satisfactory, the centry carried them all three before the officer then upon duty; who ordering Ibrahim's face to be uncovered, his beard immediately appeared. This induced the officer to fend him under an escorte to the Khalif's palace, where he continued till the next morning under arrest; and being then brought before Al Maman, that prince not only pardoned him, but admitted him likewise to his entertainments, and made him a present of ten thousand dinars. As the particulars of the conference held between Ibrahim and the Khalif, on this occasion, have been related at large by Al Makin, we shall not insert them here, but refer our curious readers to that author himself for their farther satisfaction in this matter. This year Al Maman conferred the government of Egypt upon Abd allah Ebn Thåher Ebn Hosein; who, towards the close of it, set out for that country from Baghdad, in order to fix his residence there i.

Ebn Aglab, who had been fent governor into the western parts of Africa by the Khalif Harûn Al Rashid, in the year of the Hejra 184, assumed to himself almost an absolute power in that country, and conquered a large extent of territory for himself and his descendants; over which they presided as sovereign princes about 112 years. Al Mamûn reduces the city of Taima.

On Friday the seventh day of the month Al Moharram, in the year of the Hejra 217, commencing Feb. 7th, 832, Al Mamûn entered Egypt, and soon after attacked the city of Taima, probably the present Tamiea, with all his forces. Having obliged it to furrender, he carried away with him all the inhabitants prisoners; and, towards the close of the month Safar, departed out of Egypt, taking the route of Damascus, where he arrived in due time, without having fustained any confiderable lofs. Soon after his arrival here, he received a letter from a member of the house of Omniyah in Syria, with an account, that Merwan, furnamed Al Himar, had hid a treafure under fome pillars at Hebron: upon which, feveral labourers were fent, by the Kbalif's order, to discover them; who, amongst other things, dug up a great number of chests filled with 10,000 waistcoats, the extremities of whose sleeves were greated in a most filthy manner. For, Merwan having been extremely fond of sheeps kidneys, and a most voracious glutton, he used to tear that part out of the carcases of the animal, when roafted whole, with his own hand; by which means he so smeared the extremities of the aforesaid garment's sleeves, that he could never afterwards wear it. However, he always deposited it in a chest, with others in the same condition, prepared for that purpose, and put on a clean one in the room of it; at least this was the account of the matter given now to the Khalif Al Manuan by the celebrated doctor Al Asmai. Which if we admit, we must of course conclude, that M. D'Herbelet, or rather the author he follows, is guilty of a mistake, when he makes this Asmai to have died in the 21 cth, or 216th, year of the Hejra. The Khalif, if we will believe Abu Jaafar Al Tabari, was so pleased with this piece of intelligence, that he made a present of all those garments to the person he was obliged to for it; who sold them, as curiofities, for a fum amounting to 10,000 dinars q.

Two rebeltions in Egypt.

AL MAMUN undertook the Egyptian expedition, in order to fuppress the rebellion of the Al Bimaidae, or the descendants of FORTY (as the name imports in Coptic) Christians of good note, who made a considerable figure when the Mostems first conquered Egypt. These Al Bimaidae, who were in all likelihood seated at Taima, resused to pay the tribute usually exacted by the Moslems of those who profess the Christian religion: upon which, Al Mamun and his brother Ai Motasem marched against them with an army into Egypt, in the year of the Hejra 217, intirely defeated them, put many of them to the fword, dispersed the rest, and carried away their women and children prisoners to Baghdad. Al Mamun himself, being highly pleased with the success that attended his army in this expedition, made a triumphant entry into Mefr and Al Fostat on the fourteenth day of the month Safar, and departed out of Egypt in the former Rabî, the same year, according to Ebn Batrîk, or Eutychius; the these particulars are passed over in silence by other writers. The Khalif likewise, during his residence in Egypt, the present year, erected a tower, or castle, on mount Al Mokattam, which he called Kobbat Al Hawa, the tower of defire; and permitted two of the gentlemen of his bed-chamber, who were Christians, to build a church, denoaninated first from them the church of the two gentlemen of the bed-chamber, and afterwards the church of the Romans, upon a spot of ground at a small distance from it. He also erected a Mikeas, Mikias, or measuring pillar, in order to determine the gradual increase of the Nile, at Shurat, a place belonging to the village of Banbanúdah, in the country of Al Sa'id, Thebais, or the upper Egypt; and repaired another of those pillars at Akhmim, in the same region, which was gone greatly to decay. Some years before the late rebellion of the Al Bimaidæ, Al Sari, or Assari, Ebn Al Hakem, and his son Mohammed Ebn Al Sari, or Affari, Ebn Al Hakem, had withdrawn their allegiance from the Khalif, and usurped the government of Egypt; but all the commotions there were appealed by Abd'allah Ebn Thaber, or Obeid'allah Ebn Thaber, as he is named by Eutychius, sent into Egypt by Al Mamûn for that purpose, who seized upon all the treasures amassed by those usurpers, and ordered them to be conducted to Baghdad. This Abd'allab likewise obtained a permission from the Khalif to annex the palace of Dâr Al Raml, or Dâr'l Raml, to the great mosque at Mefr. With regard to mount Al Mokattam, we must beg leave to observe, that it consists of a ridge of mountains extending to the eastern part of Al Sa'id, or Thebais; for a farther account of which, as well as of mount Al Teilamon, appertaining to the western part of that tract, our curious readers may have recourse to Yakût Ebn Abd'allah Al Hamathi, Ismael Abulfeda, and the rest of the oriental geographers r.

The Khalîf makes an irruption into the imperial territories.

THE fame year, the Khalif made another irruption into the imperial territories, invested Lûlûa, and pushed the siege of that fortress with the utmost vigour for an hundred days together; but being obliged to return home, he left Ajif, or Ojiaifa, his general, with the greatest part of the troops employed in this expedition, to continue the fiege. That commander was fo little upon his guard, that he was furprized by a party of the garison, who sallied out of the town, took him prisoner. and, after a detention of eight days, fent him back to the Moslem camp. In the mean time, Theophilus, the Greek emperor, advanced with a powerful army to force the Arab general to raise the siege; of whose motions the Kballf being apprized, he haftened with a numerous body of troops to the relief of his forces before Lûlûa. But Theophilus receiving advice, that the whole Arab army, commanded by the Khalif himself, was marching to attack him, he immediately drew off; not thinking it proper at that time to hazard a battle with so potent an enemy. This so intimidated the besieged. that they opened their gates to Ajif, without giving him any farther trouble, and were taken under the Khalif's protection. We must not forget to observe, that the African Moslems landed a body of troops in Sicily the preceding year, and made themselves masters of the city of Messina there. They put Theodotus, the commandant, who probably made a vigorous 'defence, to the fword; and plundered Lipari, called Lipara by the antients, the chief of the Æolian or Vulcanian islands. on the coast of Sicily, about the same time. These advantages so animated them, that they advanced to Panormus, or Palermo, laid fiege to that city, and, without any great difficulty, possessed themselves of it, the present year. It appears from Abulfeda, that the Greek emperor made some overtures for an accommodation to the Khalif, after the reduction of Lalla: and that the terms of peace offered at this time by the Chriflian monarch were rejected by that prince s.

THE object of Al Maman's last expedition into Egypt, acmûn dies. cording to some of the eastern historians, was the reduction of the rebel Aydûs, who had revolted against the Khalîf, and began to grow formidable there; which having effected, he penetrated into the territories of the Greek emperor, advanced to Tarfus in Cilicia, and took fourteen or fifteen towns from the Christians in that tract. Having finished this expedition, he moved at the head of his forces towards Baghdad; and, in his march, incamped upon the banks of the Badandûn, or rather, as some of the oriental writers will have it, near the source of that river. Here he and his brother Abu Ishak Al Motafem one day went into the water; after which, admiring the clearness and freshness of the stream, he could not forbear faying to his courtiers, "Nothing would give a better relish to the water of this river than some of the fresh dates of "Azad." Which words were scarce out of his mouth, when it was told him, that some mules were arrived with a considerable quantity of those dates in the camp. This tallying with the Khalif's present appetite, he are so immoderately of them, and afterwards drank such vast draughts of the water of the Badandûn, that a violent fever immediately enfued, which put a period to his days on the nineteenth, or, according to Abulfeda, the eighteenth, of the month Rajeb, in the year of the Hejra 218. We are told by Abu'lFaraj, that, a little before his death, he deprived his brother Al Kasem Al Mutamen of the right to the succession that had been conferred upon him by his father Harûn Al Rashîd, and declared his other brother Abu Isbak Al Motasem his only lawful heir; tho' this event is: faid to have happened before Al Mamun's last expedition into. Cilicia by other historians. As soon as this affair was settled, he apprized the provinces of it by a letter, figned by himself. and his successor Abu Ishak Al Motasem Ebn Harûn Al Rashid. which he dispatched to the governors of them at their respective residences, with all possible expedition. When he was at the point of death, his physician Ebn Mâsawaib approached him, and another person, who desired him to make a confession of his faith, or to communicate his religious fentiments to the people about him. But his speech failing him, he could only fay, "O thou who never dieft. " have mercy upon me now dying!" After which, he almost immediately expired, and was carried to Tarsus, where his son Al Abbas and his brother Al Motasem buried him in thehouse of Khâkân, one of Harûn Al Rashîd's fayourite eunuchs. Some writers relate, that the aftrologers foretold his death should happen at a place called Rakka, or Arrakka; and that as foon as he was informed by the people about him, that the town, or village, upon the Badandûn, where he lay fick, went by that name, he expected there, in conformity to their prediction, to meet with his approaching fate. The same year in which he died, he ordered Ishak Ebn Ibrahim, the governor of Baghdad, to oblige the judges and masters of traditions to affert the creation of the Koran; and to punish, with the utmost rigour and severity, all who should presume to maintain the contrary opinion. Amongst other delinquents, who incurred the Khalif's displeasure on this occasion, a celebrated Arab historian has mentioned Ahmed Ebn Hanbal, a famous Sennite doctor; and Mohammed Ebn Nub, furnamed Al Masrûb, who were loaded with irons, and sent to the Kha-If's camp; but Al Mamun was surprized by death, upon the banks of the Badandún, before his arrival. His successor Al Mótasem, however, commanded Ahmed Ebn Hanbal to be whipt in a cruel manner. We must here observe, that the Khalif's fon Al Abbas, by his father's order, repaired the city of Tawaba, a little before the last irruption into Cilicia, and inlarged it with fo many additional buildings, that it was a mile square, had three streets and four gates, and was considered afterwards for some time as one of the principal cities in those parts '.

Describ-

AL MAMUN was forty-eight, or, as others will have it, tion of his above forty-nine, years of age at the time of his decease. He person and reigned twenty years, five months, and thirteen days; or above character. twenty-two years, if we suppose his reign to have commenced at the beginning of the siege of Boghdad. With regard to his person, he was of a middle stature, of a fair complexion, though tinged with yellow, and had a long beard of a greyish Some, however, have reprefented him as a person of a comely countenance, with a beard perfectly grey, and of a ruddy or sanguine, or, as others will have it, of a swarthy, complexion. As for his disposition, the eastern writers have painted him as endued with all royal virtues; as full of sweetness, liberal, of great clemency, a consummate general, and thoroughly versed in all the arts of government. He is also said to have applied himself particularly to the speculative sciences, and to have made a very considerable progress in them; which induced him, at a vast expence, to encourage learned men to refort from all parts of the world to Bagbaid. He likewife spent immense sums in purchasing curious books, written in Hebrew, Spriac, and Greek, in order to have them translated into Arabic. One of the aforesaid authors finishes the portrait of this prince with faying, that he was, without contradiction, the greatest and most renowned prince of the house of Al Abbas, a race more fruitful in heroes than any that ever swayed the sceptre amongst the Moslems. Through the whole course of his reign, he favoured indifferently all learned mon of whatfoever religion they were; who, on their part, in return, contributed to the utmost of their power to raise the glory of this monarch to the highest pitch. This they did by the prefents which they made him of their works, collected from all the most rare and curious productions of the learned men of the east, whether Indians, Jews, Magians, or oriental Christians of every sect. He seems to have been most samed for his skill in astronomy, and the accurate observations which he made. He used to say, "If "men knew what an excess of clemency there is in me, I should be perpetually visited by the most notorious offenders." Abulfeda relates, that this Khalis heaped his favours upon the descendants of Ali, and restored to them the territory of Fadak, or Fidak, that formerly belonged to their common mother Fâtema, of which, by the tyranny of his predecessors, they had been so long and so unjustly deprived u.

BEFORE we conclude our account of this Khalif, we must beg Some acleave to observe, that the master appointed him by his father count of Harûn Al Rashêd was the famous Abu'l Hasan Ali Ébn Hamzah Kassai, Al Bahaman Ebn Abd' allah Ebn Fir az, a Persian by nation, but ex- Mamûn's tremely well veried in all kinds of Arab literature. This doctor mafter. was a slave of the Asadites, and surnamed Kassai, or Kossa, from the decisions he had made against luxury, and in favour of sumptuary laws. He was so excellent a grammarian, that he baf-Red in a dispute Sibilieb, the Persian, who was before esteemed the best grammarian of his age. The Khalif Harûn one day meeting Koffa, asked him in a very civil manner how he did? To which he answered, with a good deal of wit and elegance, 66 If I had never received any other fruit from my studies than 46 the favour you do me to think of me, that would be fufficient to make me happy." Another day, Koffa coming to the door of Al Mamûn's apartment, in order to instruct him, as usual, that prince, who was then at table with his friends, fent him a distich upon the leaf of a myrrh-tree, importing, " that there was a time for study, and a time for of diversion, and that he was then entertaining his friends." Which Koffa answered by a tetraffich on the back of the same leaf, couched in the following terms: "If you could once "perceive the excellency of knowledge, you would un-66 doubtedly prefer the pleasure arising from thence to that "which you at present taste; and if you knew who was now 44 at your door, you would immediately get up, come to him, and prostrate yourself on the ground, to thank and praise 66 God for the favour he vouchfafes you." The young prince had no sooner read this than he left his companions, and waited upon his master with the utmost deference and respect. This doctor was the author of a book, intitled, Nafais Alarais

Al Mamûn the Sonnites for falling into the errors of the Motazalites.

AL MAMUN, notwithstanding his amiable qualities and rare intellectual endowments, had the weakness to fall into the blamed by errors of the Mótazalites, and was blamed by the more severe doctors of the law for not being fufficiently orthodox in the religion of the Mobammedans. The same doctors by no means approved of his introduction, or rather improvement, of philosophy and the other speculative sciences, amongst the Moslems. For, the Arabs had not yet accustomed themselves to read many books befides those relating to their religion. They did not begin even in earnest to cultivate astronomy before the reign of this Khalif, who was himself a great proficient therein *.

Some farther particulars lîf.

AL MAMUN's first prime minister, or Visir, was Fadl Ebn. Sahal, furnamed Dhi'l Riyasatain, as has been already obferved; after whose tragical exit, his brother Hasan Ebn Sarelating to hal, Omar Ebn Sa'id, Abmed Ebn bu Khâled, and Abmed Ebn this Kha- Yufef, successively filled that sublime and important post. Some, however, maintain, that he was his own prime minister, after Fadl Ebn Sahal's death; which, in our opinion, very well accords with what has been related of this Khalif by the eastern historians. The first captain of his guards was Zoheir Ebn' Masaiyeb Al Dobbi, who was succeeded by Thaher Ebn Al Hosein, of whose exploits we have already given our readers a full and ample account. Ishak Ebn Ibrahim had also for fome time affigned him the command of that corps. chamberlain, whilst in Khorasan, was Al Hosein Ebn Aby Sa'id. and afterwards Ali Ebn Abu Saleh, Abd'alhamid Ebn Shabib, Mohammed Ebn Sâleh, Ismael Ebn Mohammed Ebn Sâleh, and others who have not been named by the oriental writers. His judges were Mohammed Ebn Omar Al Wasidi, Mohammed Ebn Omar Ebn Abd'alrahmân Al Mahrûmi, Bashar Ebn Al Walid. and Yahya Ebn Actem; the last of whom, by some point of ill conduct, incurred the Khalif's displeasure. The first day of Al Mamûn's reign is faid to have been Monday, and the last Wednesday. The symbol, or inscription, of his seal was, Ask of God, and he will give you. Some of the Christian writers inform us, that Mark, the Jacobite patriarch, died at Alexandria in the Khalifat of Al Mamun, and was succeeded in the patriarchal see there by one James, who presided over those of the facobite persuasion ten years and eight months, In this patriarch's time, the monasteries, that had been taken from the Christians, were restored, and re-occupied by the monks, who had been formerly driven from thence. He was a person of uncommon fanctity, and, if we will believe some of the aforesaid authors, restored to life again the son of one Makara, a person of great distinction, belonging to Nabrúh; who was so affected with this illustrious miracle, that he diftributed the third part of his substance amongst the poor, and built at his own expence a church in Jerufalem solely for the use of the Egyptians resorting to that place. In this Khalif's time, Dionysius, the patriarch of Antioch, took a journey into Egypt, in order to have a conference with Abd'allah, or Obeid'allab, EbnThaber Ebn Al Hosein there, and abode for some time in the facebite patriarch's house. In Al Mamun's Khalifat, a grievous famine likewise raged at Ferusalem, which seems to have been occasioned by vast swarms of locusts, that devoured all the fruits of the earth, and even every thing green, in the neighbouring tract. The extreme scarcity of provisions, or rather the total want of them, at this juncture, drove almost all the Moslems from the holy city; which gave Thomas, the patriarch, an opportunity of repairing the roof of the church of the Resurrection there. For this purpose, he purchased the trunks of fifty tall cedars and firs, which were imported from the island of Cyprus. The expence of this reparation, which was very confiderable, was wholly defrayed by one Bocam, a rich native of Bûtah, or Bûrah, in Egypt. The patriarch made use of forty beams, or rafters, on this occasion; that number having been suggested to him by forty martyrs, who appeared to him in a dream, and seemed to support the roof that was upon the point of falling down. After the return of Abd'allah Ebn Thâher to Jerusalem, in his way to Baghdâd, the Christians were accused of having inlarged, and made an addition to, the aforesaid roof; upon which, Abd'allab fent for the patriarch, ordered him and many others to prison, and threatened to have them all publickly whipped, if, upon inquiry, he found the Moslems capable of supporting their acculation. However, by the intervention of an antient Mobammedan, on whom he bestowed a sum of a thousand dinars, and engaged to supply him and his posterity, as long as any of them should remain, with the same monthly allowance of provisions that the priests and deacons themselves were furnished with, out of the revenues of the said church, for his assistance in this affair, Thomas pacified Abd'allah Ebn Thaher, escaped the ignominious pupishment with which he had been threatened, and obtained the absolute approbation of all the principal Moslems then residing in 'ferufalem of what had been done. After Thomas's death, which happened in the seventh year of the Khallfat of At Mamin, one Basilah, who had received his education from his predecessor, succeeded him in the patriarchate of Jerusalem, and continued in that see twenty-five years. One Ayûb, or Job, seems to have been constituted patriarch of Antioch, in the first year of Al Maman, according to Eutychius; but this does not tally with what has been observed of Dionysius, the patriarch likewise of this see, as that author makes Ayub to have presided over the church there no less than thirty-one years. As Al Maman was convinced, that the improvement of the mind ought to be the principal object of a wife man's attention, and was much preferable to the pursuit of those pleasures in which the vulgar, as well as others placed in more exalted stations, do for the most part take their chief delight, he did not only treat with the greatest marks of distinction those learned men whom he invited to Baghdad, but likewise spent as much time in their company as the affairs of state would permit, encouraged his subjects by his example to read the books they both translated and wrote, and even constantly attended their disputations. The principal aftronomers that flourished in his days were Habash Al Merwazi, an inhabitant of Baghdad, who wrote three books of aftronomical tables, or calculations, intitled, Al Send Hend, Al Momtaben, and Al Shab; Ahmed Ebn Kethair Al Fargâni, or, as others call him, Mobammed Ebn Ketir Al Forgani, known likewise amongst the Europeans by the name of Alfraganus, whose book, intitled, Elements of aftronomy, with Golius's version and notes upon it, is held in considerable repute amongst the learned; Abd allah Ebn Sahel Ebn Nübakht, a person famous for his skill in astronomy, and much esteemed by the Khalif; Mohammed Ebn Mûsa Al Khowarazmi, whose astronomical tables, intitled, Al Send Hend, were reckoned sufficiently exact; Mashallab, the Few, for his uncommon skill in abstruse literature, looked upon as the phænix of his age, who flourished in the Khalifat of Al Mansur, and died after Al Mamun's accession to the throne; and Yahya Ebn Abu'l Mansar, of whose skill in aftrological matters we have an inftance handed down to us by Abu'l Faraj. The most celebrated physicians in Al Maman's days, some of whom he employed in translating into Arabic a confiderable number of those physical treatises purchased of the subjects of the Greek emperor by the Khalif, were Yabya Ebn Batrik, Al Mamen's freed-man, who had a happy talent at translations, with regard to his hitting upon the true sense and meaning of his author, tho' he did not write elegant Arabic, and was better versed in philosophy than physic; Sabel

Ebn Sabar, surnamed Al Kawfaj, who lived at Ahwaz, and consequently wrote in the dialect of Kbûz, or Kbûzestân; Yahya Ebn Mâsûa, who likewise made a very considerable figure in his profession; Jurgis, or George, Ebn Bakhtishua, of whom we have spoken before; Isa Ebn Al Hakem, who also enjoyed a very advantageous character; and Zakaria Al Tifûri, who practifed with good success. Besides these, Al Momûn had another physician, called Gabriel by one of the Arab writers, who attended him every morning before any of the others, and had for some time affigned him a monthly pension of 1000 dirhêms; but, falling afterwards into disgrace, he was forbidden to appear in the Kbalif's presence, and his pension was reduced to 150 dirhêms. We must here beg leave to remark, that the Arabs discovered a passion for the study of physic in the earlier times of Islamism; that art being of fuch vaft utility to all ranks and degrees of men, even when they applied themselves almost solely to the study of their own language, and of the Mohammedan civil law, founded upon the precepts and determinations of the Koran. For, this was undoubtedly the state of learning amongst the Arabs, whilst the Khalifs of the house of Ommiyah sat upon the Mossem throne. But, after the elevation of the family of Al Abbas to the Khalifat, the oultivation of the sciences began soon to be in vogue. Abu Jaafar Al Manfür, the second Khalif of that race did not only attain to a good degree of knowledge in the Mohammedan civil law, but likewise made some progress in the study of philosophy and aftronomy; which arrived at a much higher degree of perfection in the reign of his great grandson Aba allah Al Mamun. For, that prince not only hired learned men, whom he had affembled from all parts of his vast dominions for that purpose, to translate the books he had purchased of the Christians at an immense expence, but likewise promoted by all possible motives the study of those branches of literature they were written upon, and even purfued with an almost unparalleled ardour that study himself. But, for a more explicit and particular account of this Khalif's thirst after knowledge, as well as of his wonderful propention to favour and animate learned men, we must beg leave to refer our curious and intelligent readers to the authors cited here y.

SECT. XXIX.

Al Mótalem is proclaimed Khalîf.

A L Mótasem, or Abu Ishak Mohammed Ebn Harûn Al Rashid, surnamed likewise Billah by some of the oriental historians, was faluted Khalif the same day his brother Al Mamun died, that is, the 18th or 19th of the month Rajeb, in the year of the Hejra 218. His mother Mâredah, or Mârudah, was one of the concubines of the Khalif Harûn Al Rashid. Some of the Moslem commanders at Tarsus were inclined to favour the interest of Al Abbas, son to the deceased Khalif; but that young prince having himself taken the oath of allegiance to Al Motasem, all the officers of the army, as well as those belonging to the court, soon followed his example. Al Motasem ascended the throne by virtue of Al Mamûn's express nomination of him to the Khalifat after his decease, which was made to the prejudice of his own son Al Abbas, and the exclusion of his other brother Al Mutamen; tho' the latter had been called to the fuccession after him by their father Harûn Al Rashîd. The first thing the new Khalîf did was to iffue orders for the demolition of the additional part of Tawaba, that had been built by Al Mamun's fon Al Abbas in the late reign; which were immediately executed, all the arms and warlike stores to be met with in the town carried from thence, and the inhabitants, who had been transplanted thither from other cities, commanded to return to their former habitations. In the beginning of the month of Ramadan, Al Motasem arrived at Baghdad, and soon after was inaugurated there. About the same time, the Khalif received advice of the great progress made by the rebels in Persia, and Persian Irâk, who were headed by one Bâbec, an enemy both to the civil and ecclesiastical constitution of the Moslems. This Bâbec was surnamed Al Horremi, or Al Khorremi, and Khorremdin, either because he was of a certain district near Ardebîl in Adherbijân, called Khorrem, or because he instituted a merry religion. which is the fignification of the word in Persian. He first appeared in the year of the Hejra 201, when he began to take upon him the title of a prophet. We do not find what particular doctrine he taught, when he now made open profession of his impiety; but it is faid his system of religion differed from all the others then known in Afra. He gained a great number of devotees in Adberbijan and the Persian Irak, and grew powerful enough to wage war with the Khalif Al Mamun, whose troops he often heat, killing several of his generals, and particularly Ebn Hamid, one of them, with his own hand; by which victories he became so formidable, that Al Motasem

Motasem was obliged to employ the whole forces of the empire against him. The general sent to reduce Bâbec was Haidar Ebn Kaûs, surnamed Afshîn, a Turk by nation. who had been brought a flave to the Khalif's court, and, having been employed in disciplining the Turkish militia there, had acquired the reputation of a great captain. As the rebels had made themselves masters of Al Jebal and Hamadan, and were very strong, Afshin was resolved to bring them to a battle as foon as a proper opportunity offered; which having done, he overthrew them with prodigious flaughter, putting no less than 60,000 of them to the fword, and driving the rest into the imperial territories. He first marched at the head of his army towards the province of Adherbijan, and spent a good deal of time in rebuilding all the caffles between the cities of Arzanjan and Ardebil, that had been demolished by Babec's troops. This step he judged previously requisite, in order to secure all the passages and defiles, and thereby put a stop to the incursions of the rebels 2.

THE following year, being the 219th of the Hejra, com- Moham. mencing January 16, 834, Mohammed Ebn Al Kasem, one of med Ebn Ali's descendants, appeared in arms against the Khalif, and Al Kâtem feized upon a confiderable part of the province of Khornsan. rebels He was, however, at last defeated by the Khalif's forces, taken against prisoner, and brought to Al Motosem at Baghdad. Being sent the Khato prilon, he was for some time there confined; but at last, lif. by what means we have not been told, he made his escape, and was never afterwards seen. The same year, Kendi, Al Motasem's governor of Egypt, died at Mesr, and his son Motaffir, or Modaffir Ebn Kendi, was appointed by the Khalif to succeed him. It appears from some of the eastern writers. that Afshîn made himself master of Isfahân, or Ispahân, and Hamadan, the two principal cities of Al Jebal, or the Persian Irdk, and feveral of Babec's castles, not withstanding the great annoyance given him by the rebels, though he could not reduce the whole country to the obedience of the Khalif, the present year a.

after, refusing to acknowledge the Korán to be created, was the creation of the scourged in so cruel a manner that he fainted away, having Korân. been almost flayed alive, by order of the Khalif Al Motasem, and afterwards imprisoned. The same punishment would have been inflicted upon Abu Harûn Ebn Al Bacâ, had he not escaped it by a notable evasion, which was of signal service to him. He allowed the Koran to have been placed, given, or instituted, by God, and that every such thing was created; though he would not in direct terms admit the conclusion naturally flowing from those premises. In fine, he conceded the Korân to be endued with one of the effential properties of a created being, though he endeavoured to evade standing to

THE next year, being the 220th of the Hejra, Affhin, overthrow having fortified the passes in the mountains, and posted proper given Bâ- detachments of troops there to defend them, descended into bec by Af- the plain, and incamped near a village called Arfû, or, a some will have it, Ashak, where he offered the enemy battle. Bâbec, notwithstanding the great losses he had sustained, accepted the challenge; but, after a sharp engagement, was intirely defeated, and constrained to fly with the shattered remains of his troops first to Mogan, and afterwards to Casbabad, the place of his nativity, where he had at that time erected his principal fort. His army must have been extremely numerous before the beginning of the action, if, as we find afferted by Abu Jaafar Al Tabari, he lost in it above 100,000 men. Be that as it will, Bâbec, finding no other way to escape, was obliged to retire into the Gordyean mountains, where he fortified several posts; from whence he greatly incommoded the Khalif's forces that purfued him thither, frequently intercepting their provisions, and destroying them abundance of men. In fine, Al Motasen's general found it impossible to dislodge him from those posts during the course of the present year c.

In the 222d year of the Hejra, beginning December 14th, Babec re-836, Affhid carried on the war with great vigour against Ba. duced, and bec, and shut up that impostor in Casbabad, Badu, or Al put to Badh, as it is sometimes called by the Arab historians; which death. place he straitly besieged. Hither that rebel found himself obliged to retire, after Affhin had reduced all his castles one after another with invincible patience, and forced all his retrenchments in the mountainous tract of the Curds, as his last resource. The fortress of Casbabad, being a place of confiderable strength, he defended himself there with great bravery for several months; but at last, finding he should be obliged to furrender the town, he made his escape into a neighbouring wood, from whence he foon after came to Affhîn, upon that general's promising to procure for him the Khalif's protection. But Affhin had no sooner got him into his power, than he ordered an executioner, who attended him for that purpose, first to cut off his hands and feet, and afterwards his head. This is the account handed down to us by Abu Jaafar Al Tabari. Other writers, however, relate, that, just before the furrender of Casbabad to the Khalif's forces, Babee found means to escape thence in disguise, after he had with great bravery fustained several assaults, with his fon Abd'allah, and his general Modwiyah, into Armonia, where he was betrayed in the following manner. Sahel Ebn Sanbât, an Armenian officer, happening to know him, enticed him, by offers of service and respect, into his power, and treated him as a mighty prince, till, when he fat down to eat, Sahel clapt himself down by him; at which Babee being surprized, asked him, how he dared to take that liberty unasked? It is true, great king, replied Sahel, I have committed a fault; for who am I that I should fit at your majefly's table? and immediately sending for a smith, he made use of this bitter farcasm, Stretch forth your legs, great king, that this man may put fetters on them. After this, Sahel sent him to Afshin, though he had offered a large fum for his liberty, having first served him in his own kind, by caufing his mother, fifter, and wife, to be ravished before his face; for so Bâbec used to treat his prisoners. having the arch-rebel in his power, conducted him to Al Mbtasem, by whose order he was put to an ignominious death. The Khalif was then at Sar Man Ray, Sarra Manray, or Samarra (for it went by all those names) a city of Irak, on the eaftern bank of the Tigris, a little above half a degree to the west of Baghdad; where he first ordered Babec's hands and feet to be cut off, and then his head, after his belly had been ript open in the presence of a great number of spectators. The body was fixed upon a gibbet, erected for that purpose, in the town, and the head fent into Kborafan. This man had maintained his ground against the power of the Khalifs above twenty years, and had cruelly massacred 250,000 people; it being his custom never to spare man, woman, or child, either of the Mohammedans, or their allies. Amongst the prisoners taken at Casbabad, there was one Nud, who had been one of the ten men employed by Bâbec in his executions; and who owned, that, in obedience to his master's commands, he had destroyed above 20,000 Moslems with his own hands. which he added, that vast numbers had also been executed by his companions; but that of these he could give no precise account. Casbabad was taken in the month of Ramadan this year; after which, Ajif Ebn Anbasa reduced the Zatalhdians, who inhabited Al Batayeb, or the fenny tract between Waset and Bafra, to the obedience of the Khalif, and conducted many of them prisoners to Baghdad. The Khorremites, not Horremites, as they are called by M. D'Herbelot, nor Hazemites, as they are denominated by Dr. Pococke, in his Latin version of Abu'l-Faraj, or sectaries of Babec, which remained after his death, feem to have been intirely dispersed, there being little or no mention made of them by the oriental historians e.

The Khalîf makes an irruption into empire.

THE next year, being the 223d of the Hejra, commencing December 3d, 837, the emperor Theophilus invaded the Moslem territories with an army of 100,000 men. He penetrated as far as Zabatra, or Zabtara, took and demolished the Greek that city, put all the men therein to the fword, and carried the women and children into captivity. From thence he advanced to Malatia in Cappadocia, seized upon that place, killed great numbers of men he found in it, and took about 1000 of the Mossem women there prisoners. He also made himself master of several other towns, the inhabitants of which he treated with excessive cruelty, putting out the eyes, and cutting off the notes and ears, of the men, and carrying away the women captives, according to some of the Arab historians. The Khalif, receiving advice of these hostilities, and of the barbarous conduct attending them, marched against the Greeks with a more formidable army than any of those with which his predecessors had formerly made war upon that nation. This army he divided into feveral bodies, which entered, the imperial territories by different routs, and reduced feveral fortreffes belonging to the Christians, before any enemy appeared to oppose them. Ancyra, in particular, we are told, he took, and laid in after; though Ayûb, the patriarch of Antioch, who attended the Khalif in this expedition, could have prevailed upon him to ave faved it, had the inhabitants, as he defired, opened their gates to that prince, when he first presented himself before the town. Some of the Greek writers, on the other hand, pretend, that the Moslems were the aggressors in this war, and made an irruption into the imperial provinces feveral years before, treating the emperor's Subjects with their usual barbarity, without having received either from that prince himself, or any of the people belonging to him, the least provocation. Be that as it will, as Theophilus, in ravaging Syria, had, according to one of them, notwithstanding the earnest intreaties of the Kbalif, destroyed Zabatra, or Sozopetra, the place of his nativity; he ordered every one of his foldiers to ingrave upon his shield the word Amerium, the birth-place of Theophilus, ranked amongst the cities of Phrygia by Ptolemy and Strabo, which he was resolved, at all events, to destroy. These circumstances, however, have been wholly omitted by the Moslem authors. The Khalif first advanced to Tarsus in Cilicia, and from thence moved into Phrygia; of which the emperor being apprized, he marched at the head of his forces to Dorylæum, distant about three days journey from Amorium. There, in a council of war, several of his officers advised him to decline an engagement with the Arabs, whose army was far more numerous than that of the Greeks, and to transport the · inhabitants of Amerium to some other place. But the emperor, imagining such a proceeding would reflect no small disgrace upon him, refolved to venture all in the defence of his native city; and accordingly fent thither a strong detachment, under the command of Ætius, general of the East, Theodorus Craterus, Theophilus Bubutzicus, and other experienced generals. In the mean time, the Khalif, having made the proper dispositions for investing the city, detached a body of 10,000 Turks, with a strong party of Armenians, to try the firength of the emperor's forces. The two armies faced each other at Dazymenum, and foon came to a general action, wherein the Arabs were at first put to the rout; but the Greeks, in pursuing them, were so galled by the arrows of the Turks, that they not only gave over the pursuit, but betook themselves to a disorderly slight. A body of Persians, however, in the emperor's service, though abandoned by the rest of the army, stood their ground, and surrounding the empe-Mod. HIST. Vol. II.

rer, who was present in the engagement, made head against the enemy, and at last, by favour of the night, retired in tolerable good order. According to Abulfeda, the right wing of the Messem army was commanded by Afflig Ebn Kuûs, the left by Albnas, and the main body by the Khalif himself, in this expedition. At Mitasem, informed of the good success of his troops, marched directly Amorium, and, being there joined by his victorious forces, laid close siege to the place; which, after a long and obstinate relistance, was betrayed to him by one of the inhabitants, who had abjured the Christian The Khalif, enraged at the great loss he had fultained during the fiege, which, if we will believe Abulfede, continued about 55 days, put most of the men to the sword, carried the women and children into captivity, and levelled the city with the ground. Some of the eaftern historians relate, that the Greeks lost in the aforesaid action above 30,000 men. The Khalif's forces being distressed for want of water, in their return home, the Christian prisoners rose upon some of them, and murdered them; which so exasperated the Kbalif, that he put 6000 of the Greeke, who had been principally concerned in exciting that commetion, to death. Of the inhabitants of Anorium 30,000 were slain, and as many taken prisoners, according to Aba'l-Faraj. Al Motasem having discovered in his march, that some of his officers had engaged themselves to support Al Abbas Ebn Al Maman's pretensions to the Khalifat, he forbad his fubjects to supply that prince with figuids of any kind; so that, according to Abulfeda, he died of thirst at Manbij, and was buried in that city, the present year. Zabatra, Zabtara, or Sozopetra, whose destruction occalioned the terrible fate of Amerium, Rood between Samefate and Malatia, a day or two's journey to the fourth of the latter, and has been mentioned by Ismael Abulfeda, Mobammed Al Firauzabâdi, and other oriental writers. It must here be observed, that, according to the authors followed by M. D'Harbelot, the Khalif did not discover the conspiracy that had been formed against him before his arrival at Sarra Manray, then the feat of the Khalifat, after his return from the Grecian expedition. The conspirators, if we will believe those authors, proposed to affassinate his two best friends, Afshîn and Asbah, and afterwards to elevate his nephew Al Abbâs to the Molem throne. But their design being detected, they were punished with death; and Al Abbas himself was thut up in a close place, where he had provisions sent him, but was allowed nothing to drink. In this condition he languished for tome time, and at last miserably perished with thirst. chius, however, seems to intimate, that Al Abbas's death happeried, whilst the Khalif was on his march from Zabatra, and confequently before he arrived at Sarra Manray f.

THE following year, being the 224th of the Hejra, Ab- A rebel-Fallah Ebn Thaber, the Khalif Al Motasem's governor of Khoa lion in rafan, marched against Baraba Ebn Karan, who had set up Tabres for himself in Tubrestan, with a powerful army, defeated him stan. in several engagements, and at last took him prisoner. This put an end to the rebellion in those parts, and reftored the country, that had been the scene of these commotions, to its former tranquillity. As for Baraba Ebn Karan, Abd'allah sent him to Al Motasem, who ordered him to be whipt to death: after which, his body was affixed to a gibbet, at a finall distance from that erected for Bâbec. About the same time, the Khalîf removed Mûfa Ebn Abu'l Abbâs Al Shaibâni from the government of Egypt, and appointed Malec Al Hindi to prefide over that country in his room. Ibrahim Ebn Al Meltill died this year, in the month of Ramadan; as did likewise, in the 68th year of his age, Abu Obeid Al Kasem, who had rendered himself extremely famous by his skill in the Arabic tongue E.

In the 225th year of the Herra, commencing November Al Mota-12th, 839, Abu Dolaf and Ali Ebn Mohammed Al Madaysni, sem diftwo persons of considerable note, departed this life. It ap-covers a pears from some good authors, that Afshin, the captain-general conspirace, of the Khalif's forces, endeavoured to excite Maziar, the go-that bad vernor of Tabreslan, to a desection; of which the Khalif being been samapprized, as well as of his impiety, he having been actually ed against discovered to be an idolater, and to have a prepuce, he ordered him to be thrown into prison, towards the close of this year h.

In the year of the Hejra 226, Affhin, captain-general of Affhin the Khalif's armies, and his greatest consident, having been executed accused of holding a secret intelligence with that prince's for treasenemies, was executed for the treasonable practices he had somable been guilty of. After the execution, his body was fixed up-practices on a gibbet, erected near those that exhibited the bodies of Bârabâ Bbn Kâran and Bâbec. This was no sooner done, than some of the Khalif's officers searched Afshin's house, and found in it a great unmber of idols, which they immediately burned. They likewise reduced to ashes several impious books, discovered there, and written to instruct others in his execrable opinions. This year, Al Motasem took the government of Egypt from Mâlec Al Hindi, and gave it to Albas, one of his menial servants. About the same time, Abu'l Hodzail Ebn Al Hedzail Al Basri, a sumous Métazalite doctor, departed this life, extremely regretted by all his fect.

THE next year, being the 227th of the Hejra, commencfem dies. ing October 21st, 841, the Khalif Al Motasem died at Samarra, either in the 48th or 49th year of his age. The diftemper that carried him off is faid to have been a fever; after the first attack of which, he was blooded by his principal physician's order, but without effect. He expired on Thursday, the 18th of the former Rabi, and left eight fons and as many daughters behind him. He reigned eight years, eight months, and eight days. He was also the eighth Khalif of the house of Al Abbas, was elevated to the Moslem throne in the 218th year of the Heira, was born in the month of Shaaban, being the eighth month of the year, fought eight battles, possessed 8000 Laves, and had 8,000,000 dinars, and 80,000 dirbéms, in his treasury at the time of his death. These circumstances induced the Arais to furname him Al Mothamen, i. e. the offinary, or the eighth, according to some of the best oriental writers. As the people of Baghdad disturbed his repose by their frequent revolts and commotions, he took the resolution to abandon that city, and to build another, in order to fix his residence there. The spot he chose for this purpose was called Katûl, near the city of Sarra Manray, in the Arabian Irâk, and and not in Syria, as we find advanced by M. D'Herbelot. Here he erected this new city, which was first called Samarra, and afterwards Sarra Manray. According to Mirkhond, this Khalif had 130,000 pied horses in his stables at Samarra, about whose necks he ordered sacks full of earth to be hung, which they carried to a place in the city he had marked out for that purpose. The earth brought hither in this manner formed a pretty high terras, on which he built a large faloon, from whence he could eafily discover every thing that passed in the city. This terras gave name to the magnificent palace of Samarra, which was ever after called by the Arabs Tel Almekbûli, i. e. the bill of facks; Almekhâli, in their language, denoting a fort of facks hung about the horses necks, in which they carry their straw and oats, according to the common ulage of the east k.

WITH regard to Al Motasem's person, he is said to have Descriphad a handsome face, red hair, a long beard, a broad breast, tion of his and to have been of a fair complexion. He was of a middle person, and stature, and so extremely robust, that he once carried a bur-character. den of a thousand pounds weight, if we will believe some of the Arab writers, several paces. As to his disposition, he was brave to a great degree, and punctual in the discharge of religious duties; though he has been represented by some of the oriental historians as intirely attached to the sentiments of the Mótazalites. These heretics maintained, as has been already observed, that the Koran was created, and fluck not to accuse those of infidelity, as affertors of two eternal beings, who held the contrary opinion. However, they were opposed in this notion by the Sonnites, or orthodox Mohammedans, who believed the Koran to be uncreated and eternal, subsisting in the very essence of GoD; or, as others have expressed it, the word of God, and consequently uncreated, as well as the Divine Being from whom it did originally proceed. This Khalif kept a greater number of forces on foot, particularly horse, than any of his predecessors. He also vastly increased the number of boys at court, for whom he provided about 50,000 fatchels, or little bags, in which they fometimes carried their provisions. The Moslem historians celebrate this Khalif for his greatness of foul, and mention one of his actions that appears in a very fingular light. Being once, fay they, separated from his companions in the country, he met with an old man standing by his ass, which had fallen down upon the ground, in a very dirty place, with a load of thorns upon his This fight fo affected the Khalif, that he immediately alighted from his horse, in order to affist the old man, and raise up his beast; which having done, though he spoiled his cloaths by this generous action, he rejoined his retinue, and afterwards made him a present of 4000 dinars. He was the first of the Khalifs who added the name of God to his own. For, he ordered himself to be surnamed Bi'llab, in God, or by the grace of GoD; in which he was followed by several of his fucceffors, who to their names added the words Billah, in God, Beemri'llab, by the order of God, Ala'llab, on God, and in God, and Ledini'llah, for the faith of GoD, or for the worship of GoD. When the Greeks took and facked the city of Zabatra, an Arab woman of the house of Al Abbas is said to have been taken prifoner by a horseman there; and, the very moment she was Al Makin, ubi sup. p. 143, 144. seized, to have cried out, " Succour me, O Al Môtasem!" Upon which, the horseman said to her, by way of ridicule, "See, here comes Al Motasem on his pied horse, to your assist-" ance." This adventure being some time after related to the Kbalif, who was then at a great distance from Zabatra, he instantly swore, that he would not think of any other enterprize before he had released this woman. Accordingly he marched at the head of his forces, in the midst of winter, to that city, and attacked the Greeks posted there with such vigour, that he intirely defeated them. This victory opening him a way to the place where the woman, who cried out to him for relief, was detained, he arrived there effectually to her fuccour, and delivered her out of the hands of her enemies. But, for a more particular and circumstantial account of this affair. we must beg leave to refer our curious readers to the eastern historians cited here !.

In the fourth year of the Khalifat of Al Motasem, Sophrother partinius was placed in the patriarchal see of Alexandria, where he continued about thirteen years. He was a person of uncommon prudence and fagacity, and an excellent philosopher. In the seventh year of this prince's reigh, one John was also constituted patriarch of Jerufulem; but, being extremely ill used by the Christians there, he soon found himself obliged to retire from that city. Whilst Al Motalem sat upon the Moslem throne, the king of Ethiopia was likewise engaged in a war with some of the neighbouring powers; during whose absence, the queen thought fit to banish one James, a bishop of that country, and to substitute another bishop in his room. James, immediately after his expulsion, fled into Egypt, and the Ethiepians were visited with a pestilence; which was considered as a punishment inflicted upon them for the violence that had been offered that prelate. The king of Ethiopia, therefore, upon his return from the wars, reproved his wife for what the had done, and recalled the bishop from his exile; which occaffoned great rejoicings amongst his subjects. About the same time, the patriarch of Alexandria sent some bishops, whom he had ordained for that purpose, as missionaries, into the western part of Africa, called Pentapolis by the antients, and particularly to the city of Kairwan, the metropolis of that country. Dionysius, the patriarch of Antioch, also died in the Khalifat of Al Motasem, and was succeeded by one

John in that patriarchal see. When Salmawiyab, one of the most celebrated physicians of the Mastern court, lay upon his death-bed, the Khalif vifited him in tears, and asked him who should take care of his health after his decease. Salmawijah replied, "That buly-body Yahya Ebn Majwiyah; but take none of his compound medicines." Soon after which, Salmawiyah died; and the Khalif was so affected with the irreparable loss he sustained by that tragical event, that he immediately broke out into the following forrowful exclamation, 4 I shall foon follow him; for the preservation " of my life and health has been intirely owing to his skill." He likewise abstanced from all kinds of food the whole day of Salmawiyah's decease, ordered a bier to be brought into the palace, and the funeral service to be performed, in his prefence, with candles and perfumes, after the Christian manner. And he had great reason to be under the vast concern he expressed on this melancholy occasion. For, Salmawiblooded him twice a year, and, after each venefection, ordered him some cooling physic; by which means, he enioved a good state of health as long as that physician lived. Yábya, on the contrary, prescribed him a cathartic before he underwent the aforefaid operation; which, not agreeing with his conflitution, gradually altered the habit of his body, and at last terminated in his death, according to Abu'l-Furaj. He is faid to have survived Salmawiyah only twenty months by that historian. His first prime minister was Al Fadl Ebn Merwan; after whose amotion, Mohammed Ebn Hammad Ebn Abd'ulmâtec Al Ziyat, the scribe, or secretary, acted in that capacity for him. His supreme judge was Ahmed Ehn Abu Dawd; and those who acted under him, Shaib Ebn Sahel, Mohammed Ebn Sama'a, Abd'allah Ebn Galeb, and Abu Faafar Ebn Ifa Ebn Hasan Al Basri. The captain of his guards was Ishak Ebn Ibrahim; his chamberlains, Sima, the Turk, his freedman, Wast, the Turk, who bore the same relation to him. and Baga, one of the same nation. His ordinary chamberlains were Mohammed Ebn Asem Al Hanaki, Yakub Ebn Ibrahim, Atab Ebn Atab, and Mohammed Ebn Hammad Ebn Dankasb. The inscription of his seal was, God is the confidence of Abu Ishak Ebn Al Rashid, and he believes in him. The first and last days of his reign are said to have been Thursday; with which observation we shall beg leave to conclude our history of the Khalifat of this potent prince ".

The Moslems inwade Sicily.

The following year, being the 228th of the Hejra, beginning October 10th, 842, Al Wathek dismissed his judges and secretaries of state, and extorted from them, either for real or pretended crimes, very considerable sums of money. According to Al Noweiri, Al Wathek undertook this year an expedition against the island of Sicily, and landed a body of troops there. Soon after this descent, he laid siege to Messina, and in a short time made himself master of that city; which conquest, continues this author, was followed by that of the whole island. However, this invasion has been intirely passed over in silence by the Chronicon Siculum, already cited here, which we take to be a piece of exceeding good authority; tho' it seems to have been mentioned by Abu'l-Faraj. Abulseda observes, that Mahammed Ebn Abd'allah Ebn Al

Aglab was then the Emîr, or governor, of the island, and refided at Palermo. He likewise informs us, that this Aglabite commander reduced many cities there, and carried off from thence a very considerable number of prisoners, together with a large quantity of spoil, in the 228th year of the Hejra. 'Tis probable, therefore, that Al Noweiri, or rather M. D'Herbelot, has mistaken the Khalif Al Wâthek for the Emîr Mohammed Ebn Abd'allah Ebn Al Aglab; especially as we find not the least intimation of Al Wâthek's having undertaken such a Sicilian expedition in the Tarikh of Abu Jaafar Al Tabari. Be that, however, as it will, we may infer from Abulfeda, that this Mohammed Ebn Abd'allah Ebn Al Aglab first took upon himself the government of Sicily, and assumed the title of Emîr of that island, the present year. It also appears from the Chronicon Siculum, that this prince's new subjects were greatly infested by vast swarms of locusts about the same time '.

THE next year, being the 229th of the Moslem æra, Al The Nor-Wâthek recalled Ali Ehn Yahya from Egypt, and appointed mans in-Isa Ehn Mansar to preside over that country in his room. vade Khalf Ehn Heshâm died this, and Abu Tamim Ehn Aws, a ce-Spain; lebrated poet of the tribe of Tay, the preceding year. The Normans sent a sleet, consisting of sity-sour large ships, and as many gallies, with a body of land-sorces on board, according to Roderic, at this time, to Lisbon, in order to drive Abaralrahmân Ehn Al Hakem, the western Khalif, out of Spain?

In the 230th year of the Hejra, commencing September and are 18th, 844, Abd'allah Ebn Thâher Ebn Hosein departed this driven life. He was an excellent officer, a great encourager of learned from men, particularly poets, and had been successively governor thence by of Khorasan, Syria, and Egypt. This year the Normans, Abd'alcalled Magians by Abulfeda, advanced with a formidable rahmán's, sleet, and a powerful body of troops on board, from Lisbon forces. to Seville, and laid siege to that city. From thence they moved to Cadiz, and attempted to make themselves masters of that place. But being repulsed in all their attacks both upon that fortress and Seville, and receiving advice that Abd'alrahmân was marching against them at the head of a numerous army, attended by a strong squadron of ships, they

The person sent by Al Wathek to conduct this affair on the part of the Moslems was one Kbûkan, an eunuch, who received orders from his master not to redeem any of the Mobammedan captives, that refused to affert the creation of the Keran, and would not deny all vision of God in paradife by the corporeal eye. The Arab prisoners redeemed on this occasion amounted to 4460 men, besides 800 women and children, and about 100 belonging to the Khalif's allies, who all entered the Moslem camp on the tenth day of the month Al Moharram. Moharek, an Arab mulician, Abu Yakûb Yûsef Ebn Yahya Al Bowaithi, a disciple of the famous Al Shafei, who was incarcerated for denying the creation of the Korân, and Ebn Al Arabi, a celebrated philologer of Cûfa, who left many learned productions behind him, died this year. A body of Al Wathek's troops, in the winter, made an irruption into the Christian provinces; but were soon obliged to retire by the severity of the season, and the enemy's detachments fent against them. Of the Arabs 200 perished with cold, as many were taken prisoners, and a great number drowned in the Badandan; so that the Khalif sustained a pretty considerable loss in this unfortunate expedition r.

Al Wathek dies.

THE next year, being the 232d of the Hejra, the Moslems defeated a large body of the Sicilian forces near Enna, called at present by the natives Castro Giovanni, and put 9000 of them to the fword. After which, they feized upon that fortress, as well as the adjacent territory dependent upon it. They also fortified the citadels of Modekah, the Motuca, or Motyca, of Ptolemy, and the Modica of the moderns, which they had reduced the preceding year. The Khalif Al Wathek died on the twenty-third, or the twenty-fourth, day of the month Dhu'lhajja, and his brother Al Motawakkel said the funeral service over him. With regard to the cause of his death, authors are not agreed. We are told by Abulfeda and Abu'l-

Faraj, that, being troubled with the dropfy, he continued for some time in a stove, and found himself thereby greatly relieved; which induced him to flay in it, heated more than usual, the next day longer than before. This, continue the same writers, affected him in such a manner, that he expired upon the spot; though his attendants were not sensible of his death, till they viewed him lifeless in his litter. On the other hand, we are informed by Abu Jaafar Al Tabari, that, being extremely addicted to venery, he ordered his physician to prepare him fome provocatives, and those of the most powerful kind. The doctor, unwilling to comply with his commands, represented, that they would prove of fatal consequence to him. However, the Kbalif persisting in his resolution, the physician assured him, that if he would take only three drachms of lion's flesh properly prepared in red vinegar, it would produce the defired This provocative, therefore, he made use of in his drink, and it foon put a period to his days. A little before his death, falling prostrate on the ground, he burst out into the following ejaculation, O heavenly king, whose reign is eternal, have mercy upon a poor prince, whose reign is fleeting and transitory! He sat on the Moslem throne five years, nine months, and six days, or, as others will have it, five years, seven months, and thirteen days. Some authors relate, that, whilst the people were affembled after his death to elect his successor Al Motawakkel, a lizard, or rather newt, came out of the garden adjoining to the palace, plucked out his eyes, and greedily deyoured them; and that this was not perceived before his body was washed, in order to be interred. With regard to his person, he was of a fair complexion, a middle stature, and had a very broad breast. His beard was also extremely thick and bushy, and he had a white speck in his right eye. As to his disposition, he was a prince of great honour, valiant, an admirer of the Arab poetry, and a munificent rewarder of those who excelled in that branch of literature. In most points of conduct, he imitated his uncle Al Maman, particularly in his attachment to the sect of the Mótaxalites. He confirmed the edict made by Al Mamûn relating to the creation of the Koran, and persecuted with uncommon barbarity all who prefumed to maintain the contrary opi-This greatly alienated his subjects from him; which encouraged Ahmed Ebn Nasser Ebn Mâler, surnamed Al Khorai, one of the most celebrated of those doctors who bore the title of Al Hafedh, that is to say, the preserver of the PROPHETIC TRADITIONS, entered into a conspiracy against him. This doctor found means to engage many of the principal lords of Bayhdad, and several other doctors, in an attempt to dethrone Al Wathek, and to fix himself upon the Digitized by Moftem

Mostern throne. But the conspiracy being discovered by the governor of Baghdad, he seized Ahmed in his own house the day before it was to be carried into execution, and fent him in irons to Samarra, or Sarra Manray, then the residence of the Khalif. Upon his arrival there, he was immediately brought into Al Wathek's presence, who, without saying a word of the conspiracy, pressed him to affert the creation of the Korân; which he refusing to do, and absolutely persisting in the common fentiment of the orthodox Moslems, who unanimously admit the eternity of that book, the Khalif was so enraged. that he instantly drew his scymitar, and cut off the traitor's head with his own hands .

He imitated in all things bis uncle Al Mamûn.

IT has been already observed, that Al Wathek imitated in all things his uncle Al Mamûn. He was therefore extremely delighted with the study of the sciences, and not a little caressed all men of letters. He was also liberal and charitable to a great degree, having taken great care that no poor people should be found in any part of his vast dominions; insomuch that not a fingle beggar was to be met with, through the whole course of his reign, either at Mecca or Medina. He was particularly fond of aftrology, and having in his last illness conferred with some of his wife men, who were the most samed for their skill in that art, upon confulting his horofcope, they affured him, that, from the present moment, his reign should be continued fifty years; though he is faid not to have lived above ten days' after the prediction. The principal of these astrologers was Al Hasan Ebn Sabel Ebn Nubakht. This occurrence has been mentioned both by the Arab and Persian historians 1.

His death An oriental writer likewise relates, that Ahmed Ebn Nazir having been thrown into prison, because he refused to acknowledge the creation of the Korân, and the impossibility of seeing God hereafter in paradife with corporeal eyes, received from the good company he found in the place of his confinement no small degree of consolation. For, Mohammed Ebn Hammad Ebn Abd almalec Al Ziyat, the Khalif's Visir, who perfecuted the Sonnites in a cruel manner, filled all the prisons of Samarra with orthodox Moslems. Amongst these there was one Abmed Ebn Israil, a famous aftrologer; to whom, as well as to many others of his fellow-prisoners, Ahmed Ehn Nazir related, that a phantom had appeared to him in his dream the preceding night, and affured him that Al Wâtbek should die in a month's time. The astrologer then being desired to calculate that prince's nativity, in order to discover what truth there was in this nocturnal prediction, resused to be concerned in so dangerous an affair. However, the last day of the month being come, he said to Abmed Ebn Nazir, "What do you say now of your dream, since the term pointed out by your phantom is almost expired?" To which Abmed replied, Many things may still happen before the conclusion of the approaching night. After which, about the second watch of the same night, a considerable number of people arrived at the prison-door, with advice of the Kbalif's decease".

OTHER authors inform us, that Al Wâthek, by eating and Dies of a drinking to great excess, and that frequently when he had no dropfy, acappetite at all, together with his immoderate use of women, cerding to brought himself into a dropfy; of which he was cured by a some of the celebrated physician of Nisabūr, who advised him to live more eastern temperately for the suture, as a relapse must prove satal to him. writers. But notwithstanding this salutary advice, the Khalis soon began to pursue his sormer irregular course of life, and was consequently in a short time afficient with the same distemper, of which, in conformity to the doctor's prediction, he died within the space of a very few months w.

One of the same authors remarks, that the Khalif Al Wa-Had a thek had so terrible an eye, that having a little before his death wery tercast an angry glance of it upon one of his domestics, who had rible eye. been guilty of some fault, the man was instantly out of countenance, and fell backwards upon another person that stood at a small distance from him. Which very eye, by a most extraordinary accident, was plucked out of the Khalif's head, according to this writer, by an animal resembling a pole-cat, that slipt between his sace and a linen-cloth which covered it, whilst he lay dead in the palace x.

SOME of the Arab historians have observed, that AlWatbek Other himself was a tolerable good poet, as well as a rewarder of particuthose who excelled in drawing up poetical compositions; that lars rehe sung well, and had an excellent voice. He made, in the lating to second year of his reign, one Sergius, who had been a great himse enemy to those of his own communion, and was for that reason very disagreeable to them, patriarch of Jerusalem, where he resided in that capacity sixteen years. He likewise filled the patriarchal see of Antioch, which became vacant in the fixth

We must not forget to remark, that the above-mentioned A Hasan Ebn Sahel Ebn Nubakht was the greatest astronomer, as well as astrologer, of the age in which he lived, and wrote a treatife upon the Anwai, or mansions of the moon. With regard to this Khalf's ministers and servants, Mohammed Ebn Hammad Ebn Abd almalec Al Ziyât was his principal counfellor, or Vifir; the captain of his guards Ishak Ebn Ibrahim; his chief judge Ahmed Ebn Abu Dawd; and his chamberlains Aytah, the Turk, his freed man. Bagd, the Turk, his menial servant, Wasif, the Turk, his freedman, Mohammed Ebn Hammad Ebn Dankash, Anbah, his fervant, Ahmed Ebn Amer, and Mohammed Ebn Afem Al Jabali. The first day of his reign was Friday, and the last Wednesday. The inscription of his seal was, God is the confidence of Al Wathek. Some writers make him to have been thirty-two, others thirty-four, and, lastly, others thirty-fix, years of age at the time of his decease y.

vour of Al Motawakkel. This Wasif commanded the body of Turkish troops, or rather the Turkish irregulars, first set on foot by the Khalif Al Mhtasem; which gave great weight to his representations, and enabled him the more easily to carry his point, notwithstanding the vast influence of Mohammed Ebn Hammad Ebn Aba almalec Al Ziyât, the late Khalif's Visir, on this important occasion.

MOHAMMED EEN HAMMAD EEN ABD ALMALEC AL Moham. ZIYAT having treated Al Motawakkel ill, in his brother's life-med Ebn. time, that prince resented the injuries he had then met with, soon Abd'alafter he ascended the Moslem throne. He, therefore, sent him malec Al to prison in the year of the Hejra 233, and ordered a person Ziyat put! to keep him awake there for several days and nights together. to death by Mobammed being after this suffered to take some repose, slept the Khaa whole day and a night; and, after he awoke, was thrown lift order. into an iron-furnace, lined with spikes, or large nails, heated red-hot, where he was miserably burnt to death. Some authors, however, relate, that he received fifty stripes upon his belly, and as many upon his back, and foon after expired. This counsellor, or Visit, spoke his mother-tongue fluently and properly, and was extremely well versed in the Arab grammar and poetry. But he was haughty, foolish, vainglorious, iniquitous in his conduct, and intirely void of compassion. He was likewise a stranger to modesty, excessively fond of power, and covetous to the last degree. He never did any person a good office, frequently saying that pity was a natural weakness, and liberality folly. It appears from some of the Arab writers, that he composed verses during his confinement, though none of these have been handed down to us. The new Khalif appointed his son Al Montaser to preside over the peninsula of the Arabs; and, about the same time, Abu Zakaria Yahya Ebn Moain Ebn Awn Al Baghdadi, a famous Hâfedh and Imâm, and a disciple of Al Shâfei, departed this life, in the 75th year of his age. Al Motawakkel fettles the fuccession upon his fons, and is angry with the Chriflians.

In the year of the Hejra 235, several remarkable occurrences happened amongst the eastern Moslems. The Khalif Al Motawakkel settled the succession first upon his eldest son Al Montaser, after him upon his second son Al Ma'taz, and, finally, upon his third fon Al Mowaiad. He also gave each of them two banners, or standards, a black one and a white one; the former of which distinguished them as heirs apparent to the crown, and the latter as their father's vicegerents, who had the government of the empire divided amongst them. To Al Montaser the Khalif assigned Africa, from Arish in Egypt to the most western limits of that vast tract, as likewife the provinces of Kinnifrin, Al Sham, or Syria, Mesopotamia, Diyar Becr, Diyar Rabia, Mawsel, or Mosul, Habab, Al Ayât, Al Khâbûr, Karkîsia, Tecrît, the region bordering upon the Tigris, Mecca and Medina, Al Yaman, Hadramaut, Yamâma, Bubrein, Al Sind, or Sindia, Abwaz, Sarra Manray, Cufa, Maseidan, Al Hajran, Sharuzur, Kom, Kasan, and Al Jeval, with its dependencies. To Al Mo'taz he affigned Khorafan, Tabrestan, Ray, Persia, Armenia, and Adherbijan. And lastly, on Al Mowaiad he conferred the provinces of Dimishk, or Da. mascus, Hems, Al Ordan, and Palestine. This division has been celebrated by the Arab poet Ibrahim Ebn Al Abbas, some of whose verses have been preserved by Abu Jaafar Al Tabari. tawakkel also about this time commanded all the Christians and Yews in his dominions to wear a leathern girdle, called by the Arabs zonar, and a fort of badge on their cloaths, in order to distinguish them from the Moslems. He likewise forbad them to make use of iron stirrups, and injoined them, according to Eutychius, to paint the figures of devils, or else of hogs and apes, on the doors of their houses; which, as the fame writer will have it, was occasioned by the imprudent conduct of Bakhtishua, the Khalif's physician, a Christian, who had incurred his master's displeasure. About this time, one Mahmud Ebn Faraj, a famous impostor, pretended to be Moses resuscitated, and plaid his part so well that several people believed on him, and attended him when he was brought before the Khalif Al Motawakkel. That prince, having been an ear-witness of his extravagant discourses, condemned him to receive ten buffets from every one of his followers, and then to be drubbed to death; which was accordingly executed; and his disciples were imprisoned till they

Soon after which, he ordered the fe-rity of Alipulchre of Hofein, Ali's fon, called in Arabic Mashkad Hosein, in the plains of Kerbela, where that Imam was killed, to be intirely razed; and, in order the more effectually to efface all traces of it, he was resolved not to content himself with ploughing, or breaking up, the ground on which it stood, but likewise to draw a canal of water over it. However, if we will believe the Shites, he could not carry his design into execution; the water not approaching the tomb, but keeping its distance out of respect. Hence that water was denominated Hair, which fignifies aftonished and respectful; a name which has fince been applied to the sepulchre itself, on account of this miracle. Notwithstanding which, some pretend, that the place of Hosein's interment was always unknown e.

WE are told by an eastern author, in conformity to the This Kha-Shiite traditions, that the night after Al Motawakkel had issued lif's death this impious order, he saw Ali in a dream, who reproached predicted him with the outrages offered to his family, and gave him in a dream, feven blows with the famous fword Dbu'l-Fakar, used by the according prophet himself in all his engagements, after the battle of to the Bedr, which he held in his hand. This, according to one Shiites. of his wife men, well verfed in the interpretation of dreams, portended some signal disaster to him, that should happen by way of punishment for the hatred he bore Ali and his descendants. And, in consequence of this prediction, continues the same writer, the Khalif was assassinated two days after by some Turks, at the instigation of his eldest son Al Montaser; who, after the perpetration of this horrid parricide, commanded some of his servants to collect the pieces into which his father's body had been cut. These amounting to seven, that prince from thence inferred, that the murder had been clearly foretold by the preceding dream, which was most evidently verified by that tragical event. But here it may not be improper to observe, that this Shiite fiction must necessarily be exploded by all persons of the least pene-

caused Bokrat Ebn Ashat, an Armenian nobleman, to be secured, and fent in chains to Al Motogwakkel. This so incensed the noblesse of Armenia, that, in conjunction with Mûsa, who had married Bokrât's daughter, they assembled a body of troops, in order to take vengeance of Yusef Ebn Mobammed for the affront he had offered them. Coming up, therefore, with him at the caffle of Miff, they attacked him with such bravery, that, after an obstinate engagement, they intirely defeated him, and put both him and the forces he commanded to the sword. The Khalif no sooner received advice of this unexpected rebellion, than he fent Boga, the Turk, with an army to suppress it; which he did effectually, and fully revenged Yuses's death, killing above 30,000 of the rebels, and taking a vast number of them prisopers. After this, he advanced to Teffis, a city of Georgia, that had affifted the rebels, laid siege to it, and in a short time reduced it to ashes, together with 50,000 of its inhabitants, who all perished in the flames. Tufef's defeat happened in the middle of the month of Ramadan, and the extinction of the rebellion, as well as the destruction of Teffis, consequential to that event, foon after. About this time, died Hatem Al Asam Al Balkbi, a celebrated Moslem saint. The same year, A Matewakkel appointed Mohammed Ehn Ahd'allab Ebn Thaber Ebn I!ofein to preside over Al Sarta, the districts of Al Sawad, and the territory of Baghdad. Either this or the preceding year, Abd'alrahman paved the streets of Corduba in Spain with stone, and built an aqueduct, with leaden pipes, which copiously fupplied that city with water from the neighbouring mountains. The present year also, seconding to Abulfeda, Mohammed Ebn Abd'allah Ebn Al Aglab died in Sicily, after he had reigned there about nine years, in the month of Rajeb. He was succeeded by Al Abbas Ebn Al Abbas Ebn Al Fadl Ebn Yakûb Ebn Nazara, who subdued many places in Sicily, and overthrew the Christians near Enna, which, by reason of its furprizing strength, they had made the capital of their part of the island, instead of Syracuse. This signal victory, which was gained on Thursday, the fifteenth day of the month of Shawal, the present year, put Al Abbas in possesfrom of Enna, where he erected a mosque for the use of the Moslems that were settled there. THE following year, the Greeks fitted out a fleet of 300 ships; The an hundred of which, under the command of an admiral, let Greeks sail for Dinnât, or Danista in Egypt. Here, upon their arrival, ravage they landed a body of troops, leized upon the town, at that some parts time destitute of a garison for its desence, plundered and burnt of Egypt. it, and carried off with them 600 Moslem women into captivity. From Damiata they advanced to Mefr, which they pillaged and laid in ashes, and then retired to their own ports. which, the Khalif Al Matawakkel ordered Damiata, in order to secure it from all future infults, to be fortified with a strong double wall on the fide of the river, and on that of the contiment with a triple one; which rendered it one of the most impregnable fortresses in Egypt. This year died at Corduba Abd alrahman Ebn Al Hakem Ebn Hesham, of the house of Ommiyab, after he had reigned thirty-one years and five months He left behind him forty-five fons and forty-two daughters, and was succeeded by his son Mohammed Ebn Ab-" alrabman Ebn Al Hakem. About the same time also departed this life Ranimir, the son of Veremund, king of Galicia, whose Son Ordonius, according to Roderic of Toledo, succeeded him in his kingdom, frustrated all the attempts of the Arabs upon his dominions, and reigned 35 years. Other authors, however, make Ranimir's death, and his fon Ordenius's accession, to have preceded Abd'alrahmân's decease above 20 years h.

About the same time, Mobammed Ebn Aba" alrahman Ebn Al Hakem placed numerous garifons in Curita, Talavera, and Calatrava, and made incursions into some of the neighbouring provinces. This year, the famous Ahmed Ebn Hanbal, the founder of the fourth sect of the Sonnites, died at Baghdad, and was followed to his grave by 800,000 men and 60,000 women. It is related, as fomething very extraordinary, that, on the day of his death, no less than 20,000 Christians, Jews, and Magians, embraced the Mohammedan faith. We must not forget to observe, that the Moslem forces took Bothirah, or Buteria, not far from Leocata, in Sicily, the preceding year 1. Ιn

In the year of the Hejra 242, beginning May 10th, 856, They are the Greeks penetrated to Somisat, or Samosata; but were soon surprized obliged by the Moslems to retire from thence to Amid, or Amida, and deon the borders of Armenia. After which, they abandoned Me-feated by J. potamia, which they had entered, and returned into their own the Khadominions; though they carried off with them about 10,000 life prisoners, and plundered a great number of villages in their troops. This feems to be the expedition mentioned by fome of the Greek writers, when they inform us, that the Moslem garison of Samosata sallied out upon the Christian forces, then before the town, surprized them in their camp, whilst they were at divine service there, and forced them to abandon the fiege, the third day after it had commenced. We are told, by some of the Arab authors, that several violent shocks of an earthquake happened this year in Komas, or Komes, a province of Tabrestan, in the month of Shaaban, attended with unusual noises, that demolished many towns and villages there, did incredible damage, and buried 45,096 men in the ruins of the houses that were overturned. The greatest part of these perished at Dâmeyân, placed in latitude 36° 30', and longitude 890 30', by the eaftern geographers, the capital of that province. Syria, Persia, Khorasan, and Al Yaman, were all visited with the same calamity, according to these writers; who farther observe, that mount Al Akra', or the bald mountain, in the neighbourhood of Luodicea, or, as 'tis called by the Arabs, Al Ladikia, at the same time fell into the fea; by which surprizing accident most of the inhabitants of that city were destroyed. Mohammed Abul Abbas Ebn Ibrahim Ebn Al Aglab, the Khalif of Kairwan, died about this time, and was succeeded by his son, Abu Ibrahim Abmed Ebn Mohammed; as did likewise Yahya Ebn Actem, a most celebrated master of jurisprudence. Mohammed Ebn Abd'alrahman Ebn Al Hakem sent also an army, under the command of Al Mondar, one of his relations, to lay waste the territory of Toledo, that still refused to submit to him, the present year. The Mostem general executed his orders with excessive rigour and severity, either carrying off or destroying all the corn, fruits, and grapes, of that diffrict. Notwithstanding which, the citizens of Toledo fent some of their forces, after Al Mondar's departure, to possess themselves of Talavera. But the commandant of that fortress having been apprized of their design, met them at the head of his troops, gave them battle, and intirely defeated them; taking many of them prisoners, and killing 700 upon the spot, all whose heads he sent as an agreeable present to his master Mobammed Ebn Abd'alrahman Ebn Al 301. THE year of the Hejra 243, commencing April 30th, 857, has not been distinguished by any remarkable event. about two The Khallf Al Motawakkel, however, set out for Damascus, with an intention to make that city the feat of the Khalifat, the 20th day of the month Dhu'lhajja. He also ordered several buildings to be erected there in the following month Safar, deligning to transfer all his treasures from Sarra Manray to that place. Soon after his arrival at Damascus, the Turkish soldiery mutinied for their pay; which having received, they returned to their duty. Notwithstanding this, he conceived an aversion to his new capital, and returned to Sarra Manray, after he had refided at Damascus only two months and a few days. He entered that metropolis on Monday the 22d of the latter. Jonada, to the great joy of all his subjects there. This year died Ibrahim Ebn Al Abbas, and Al Hareth Ebn Asad; the latter of whom was expelled Ahmed Ehn Hanhal's school, for being a reasoner, or one principally guided by his own judgment in his decisions. Mobammed Ebn Abd alrahman Ebn Al Hakem also undertook another expedition against the city of Toledo, befieged the place in form, and destroyed the famous bridge over the Tajo there, which threw the citizens into a terrible consternation, the present year n.

THE next year, the Khalif commanded Abu Yusef Yakab Ebn Isbak, surnamed Ebn Al Sekkit, a samous philologer, extremely well versed in all kinds of polite literature, to be put to death, for his attachment to the house of Ali. About the fame time, that prince deprived Bakbtisbua, his physician, of all the riches he had acquired in his service, and banished him into Bahrein. THE following year, beginning, amongst the Moslems, Terrible April 8th, 859, many cities in the western provinces suffered earthgreatly from earthquakes; by which great numbers of their quakes in houses were overturned, Violent shocks were likewise selt at several Baghdad, where the Khalif's palace was in danger of being parts of overthrown, Al Madayen, Balis, At Rakka, Harrân, Raso lain, or the Mos-Rasa lain, Hems, Damascus, Al Roha, or Edessa, Tarsus, Masisa, lem em-Adana, and the maritime parts of Syria. At Antioch, 1 500 houses, and above minety towers belonging to the wall that furrounded the city, are faid to have been thrown down; which, together with the frightful and unusual noises heard amongst the ruins, so terrified the inhabitants, that they fled for safety into the neighbouring fields. We are told likewise by Abu Jaafar Al Tabari, that mount Al Akra' above-mentioned, notwithstanding what has been advanced to the contrary by Abu'l-Faraj, stood at a small distance from Antioch, and sell into the sea at the same time that the earthquake happened there. At Laodicea the shocks were so terrible, that almost all the citizens quitted their houses, expecting them every moment to fall upon their heads. When mount Al Akra' funk into the fea, a thick black cloud of smoke, that emitted a most noisome smell, issued from the spot on which it had stood. Vast numbers of people were deftroyed by these concussions, if we will believe the Moslem writers. The springs at Mecca failed this year to such a degree, that the celebrated well, or fountain, there was almost dried up, and the water sold for 100 dirhêms a bottle. A river also, about a parasang distant from mount Al Akra', disappeared the fame year in which that mountain was absorbed, and was never afterwards seen. About the same time, the Khalif being informed, that the Niloscope, or Nilometer, erected on the point of the island of Al Fostat by Soliman Ebn Abd'almalec Ebn Merwan, was fallen to decay, he sent a geometrician, recommended to him by his aftrologer, Mohammed Ebn Mûsa, from Irâk to Egypt, in order to build a new one there. likewise appointed Yezid Ebn Abd allah Ebn Badan Ebn Farah to affift Mohammed in this work, and ordered the expence of the whole to be defrayed by Soliman Ebn Wabeb; which being done, the machine erected on this occasion was called the new Nilometer, and the other that had fallen to ruin was never afterwards used. The people of Toledo at this time, not being able to make head against Mohammed Ebn Abd'alrahmanEbn Al Hakem, thought fit to submit to that prince, and met with a very gracious reception from him. Soon after this, the Normans, with a fleet of 60 hips, ravaged the coast of Spain; DREN. et Joan. Zonar. ubi sup. Abu Jaafar Al Tabar. Al Makin, Eutych. Greg. Abu'l-Faraj, Khondemir,&c. Chron.

In the year of the Hejra 246, commencing March 28th, 860, Omar Ebn Obeid Al Akta', by the Khalif's order, made an irruption into the imperial territories, and carried off with him from thence about 70,000 prisoners. Al Fadl Ebn Farân, another of the Arab commanders, with a fleet of twenty large thips, infulted the enemy's coasts, and seized upon the citadel of Antioch. Ali Ebn Yahya likewise, in order to make a diversion, penetrated into another of the imperial provinces, and took 5000 prisoners, besides 10,000 head of cattle; after which, a cartel was fettled between the contending parties, whereby 2367 captives recovered their liberty. From the Greek writers it feems to appear, that the Arabs at this time entered the imperial provinces with an army of 40,000 men, and committed dreadful ravages there. But they were surprized, according to these writers, by Petronas, the emperor's uncle, with the Christian forces, in the district of Lalacaon, not far from Ephefus, who put the Khalif and his whole army to the sword, took his son prisoner, and returned in triumph to Con-As this relation, however, runs counter to the stantinople. flory, which in a point of this nature most certainly merits greater attention than that of the Greeks. About the same time, it rained blood in the tract called Balab, of a very red colour. Mohammed Ebn Abd'alrahman marched with an army also now against the people of Navarre, ravaged the country about Pampelona, and made himself master of three fortresses not far from that place. In one of these he took prisoner a person of distinction, named Fortunius, whom he conducted to Corduba, kept him there twenty years, and at last sent him home loaded with presents worthy of the prince from whom they came. This Fortunius, as our historian informs us, attained to the age of 126 years. About this time, died Dabal Al Khozai Ebn Ali, a celebrated poet, of the Shiite persuasion, who was born in the year of the Hejra 148. We are told, that a body of Arabs, named Fendanites, or Effendites, arrived in Sicily the present year 9.

THE next year, the Khalif Al Motawakkel was affaffinated Al Motain the following manner. Fatab Ebn Khâkân and Abd'allah wakkel Ebn Yahya, finding him indisposed with an afthmatic disorder, affaffiendeavoured to disfluade him from officiating in the mosque at nated. Sarra Manray, as he intended, the ensuing Friday; advising him to fend his fecond fon Al Mo'taz to perform the public fervice there in his stead. The Khalif complied so far with their advice as to decline going to the mosque himself, but at the same time appointed his eldest son Al Montaser to officiate for him. This by no means pleasing his two favourites, who were sufpicious of Al Montaser's ill designs, they persuaded him to go to the mosque himself, when Friday came, and shew himself to the people, in order to prevent all commotions that might be excited by his illness, which at that time was publickly known. He, therefore, mounted his horse, and went directly to the mosque, where he said the prayers, and preached to the people, as usual; after which he returned to his palace Jaafaria, where he then resided. Upon his arrival there, he ordered Al Montaser to appear before him, reproached him and his mother with the dark cabals in which they had been engaged, and threatened to make them both feel the effects of his resentment. Nay, he commanded the judges and counfellors who attended him likewise to reprove them. This se incensed Al Montaser, that he resolved upon his father's destruction, and engaged certain Turks, who were dissatisfied with the Kbalif's conduct, and some of his domestics, to asfift him in the parricide; for the perpetration of which the following opportunity offered. Al Motawakkel having drank to excess with some of his courtiers, and particularly Patab Ebn Khâkân, on Wednesday the fourth day of the month Shawal; Baga, Bager, or Boga, the younger, his butler, at night entered the room, and commanded the company to go home; which they all did, except Fatab Ebn Khâkân, and four others, who could not be prevailed upon to retire. In the mean time, Al Montaler came to one of the palace gates, that had been left open for him, and kept the porter, a Turk, whose name was Razaka, employed, by walking and talking with him, whilst the conspirators destined to assassinate the Khallf made the best of their way to the place where he was, with their feymitars drawn in their hands. As foon as they approached him, one of them, named Yaaz, immediately fell upon him, and cut off the hinder part of his shoulders; notwithstanding which, Al Motawakkel attempted to defend himself against the affaffin, faying at the same time to him, Be quiet, GOD care off thy hand. Which being perceived by the other conspirators, they all rushed in at once upon him. Fatah Ebn Khakan obferving this, said to them, Wo be to you, this is the emperor of the faithful! To which Bager, or Boga, replied, Hold thy peace. thou enemy! Fatah then threw himself upon his mafter, in order to screen him from the intended violence; but being dragged off by the affaffins, he ran about the room like a madman, with his scymitar drawn in his hand, crying out with all his might, Death! Death! This so inraged them, that they instantly dispatched him, and then massacred Al Motawakkel without the least resistance; after which, they waited upon A Montaser, and saluted him Khalif. Several reasons have been affigned for this unnatural parricide by the Moslem writers; fome of which our readers will not be displeased to find inferted here. One of those writers pretends, that Al Montaser alledged, as a reason to excuse the perpetration of so horrid a fact, the hatred his father bore Ali and all his descendants. He also, says the same author, at last was asraid of his own life. For, Al Motawakkel once holding between his hands a scymitar that cost him 10,000 dinars, said to Fatab Ebn Khakan, I sould be glad to find a valiant man amongst my Turkish slaves, into whose hands I may put this scymitar, for the defence and preservation of my person. Fatab immediately answered him, Here is Bager, the bravest of your Turks, who is worthy of receiving se valuable a present from your own bands. This Bager came by accident into the Khalif's apartment the moment the conference between him and Fatab began, when he received this fword, together with very large appointments, from Al Motawakkel. We are told, however, that he never diew it before the time he entered his master's chamber, and slew him with it. Other authors relate, that the Khalif frequently entertained himself with some mischievous kinds of diversions, that were extremely disagreeable to the people about him; and that this in all probability: haftened his death. Sometimes he would order a lion to be let loose in the middle of the room where he was regaling his friends, which never failed of throwing them into a terrible consternation. At other times he would command his servants to put serpents privately under the table, and break pots full of scorpions in the middle of the hall where he had prepared a banquet for his favourites, without fuffering any of them to rife from the table, or change his place; and when any of his friends were bit on such occasions by those venomous animals, he immediately expelled the posson by a theriacal medicine that he had prepared for that purpose. Whilst he was in the midst of one of these debauches, the Turkish flaves that had conspired against him entered the hall of the festin with their scymitars drawn in their hands, and Bagher at the head of them, according to fome of the Perfian historians; upon which, one of those at table, who first perceived them, but did not suspect any wicked design, said, in a sacetious manner, This is neither the day of lions, nor of serpents, nor of scorpions, but that of scymitars, or swords. Al Motawakkel no sooner heard him talk of scymitars, or swords, than he said, What's that you would fay? Which words were scarce out of his mouth, when the conspirators fell upon him, and cut him to pieces. Fatab, continue these authors, endeavouring to defend him, and crying out with all his might, O Al Motawakkel, I will not survive you! was likewise killed with the Khalif. That prince's buffoon, who had hid himself at the fight of the scymitars, hearing Fatah's last words, and observing what happened to him thereupon, faid with a loud voice, O Al Motawakkel, I should be very glad to live after you! which he thought might induce them to let him make his escape. One writer of good repute informs us, that Al Montaser was persuaded by the wife men about him to commit the parricide above-mentioned, because his father had been guilty of some enormities that merited fuch an end. Another affures us, that his cruelty to those persons of distinction, who were so unhappy as to incur his displeasure, greatly contributed thereto. These he inclosed in an iron stove, lined with pointed nails, which he caused to be heated more or less in proportion to the heinousness of the crime he intended to punish; and when any of them, upon finding himself in exquisite torture, said to him, Have pity upon me, he replied, Pity is nothing but a meanness of soul. 'Tis affirmed by some authors, that Mohammed Ebn Abd almalec Al Ziyat, his Vifer, remained in such torture forty days before he expired. Another will have it, that Al Montaser's principal motive to desire his father's death, and to engage the Turks to dispatch him, was the opprobrious treatment he met with from him. the Khalif called his eldest son, by way of mockery and reproach. Montazher, or Montadher, instead of Montaser; by which nickname the former would intimate, that the latter lived in continual hopes of his death. Sometimes likewise Al Motawakkel would force the young prince to drink to excess, than which nothing could make him more unpopular or disagreeable to the Moslems, and then beat him without the least difcretion. Nay, for what had scarce the appearance of a crime, he would make him undergo the most rigorous punishment, Lastly, we are given to understand by some of the oriental historians, that Al Motawakkel's affassination was owing to the refentment of Wasif, the Turk, whom he had appointed captain of his guards, and confequently made him mafter of his person, and yet was so imprudent as to give him just cause of offence. For he deprived him of some domains that he posfessed in the Persian Irak, in order to bestow them upon Fatab Ebn Khâkân, his favourite and Vifir. But whatever was the true cause of this prince's violent death, it has been observed by the Moslem writers, not only that the conspiracy formed against him was discovered a little before Al Montaser caused it to be carried into execution, by one of his trufty flaves, but likewise that his tragical exit was clearly predicted to him about the same time by a most strange and wonderful dream r.

IT has been remarked upon the subject of the sword, or account of scymitar, given by Al Motawakkel to Bagher, by Al Bakbthis Kha- teri, that this Khalif having heard much of the excellency of a fword in the city of Bafra, writ to his governor there to purchase it for him, cost what it would. But the governor, upon inquiry, finding it had been fold, and fent into the province of Bahrein, informed the Khalif that it was not in his his power to procure it for him. Al Motawakkel, therefore, dispatched a courier thither to buy it at any price that should be demanded for it. His order was executed, and, as foon as the sword came into his hands, he gave it to Bagher, with the following compliment, Take this fword; I fet no greater value upon it than I do upon you. ..

ANOTHER oriental author has observed, that this Khalif was flain by his fon Al Montaser's order, upon the very spot where Khofrû Parvîz, king of Persia, of the Sassanian race, had been massacred by the command of his son Shirayeh. His principal physician, Bakhtishua, having amassed vast treasures.

and Al Metawakkel being informed of this, the Khalif once invited himself to an entertainment at his house; where being regaled with the utmost magnificence, he conceived an averfion to him, especially as the immense wealth he had acquired by his mafter's favour and munificence, had rendered him infolent and haughty. This induced that prince to fend Al Hofein Ebn Al Mokballed to seal up the rooms where his treasures and effects were deposited, and soon after to deprive him of them. Bakhtishua's disgrace happened in the year of the Heira 244, and his death in the year 256. Besides Bakhtishua, another physician of considerable note, named Abu Zeid Abd'alrahman Honain Ebn Ishak Al Ebadi, a Christian likewise, flourished in the Khalifat of Al Motawakkel. physician was an Ebadian, that is, one of those Christian Arabs known by the title of fervants of God, (for that the words Al Ebad, or Al Ebadi, import) who were collected from different tribes, and settled in the Arabian, Babylonian, or Chaldaan Irak, not far from the cities of Hira and Cufa. Honain, whose father Ishak was an apothecary in the city of Hira, having in his youth an uncommon thirst after knowledge, went to the school of Yahya Ebn Mâ/wiya, a celebrated physician of Bagbdad, for instruction; where he continued for some time. But meeting with contemptuous treatment from Yahya, on a certain occasion, he retired into the territories of the Greek emperor; where he remained two years, and, during that term, not only learned the Greek language, but likewise made a fine collection of books, in order to forward his philosophical studies. After the expiration of that term, he took a journey into Persia, from whence he went to Basra, a city of the Persian Irak, where he attained to great skill in Arabic, under the direction of Al Khalil Ebn Ahmed, and then returned to Baghdad. Here he soon grew so famous, that Gabriel Ebn Bakhtifbua, univerfally esteemed for his knowledge, declared to Yusef, another physician, that he would excel in every branch of learning Sergius of Rasolain, or Ras alain, the prodigy of the age, who translated many of the Greek authors into Syriac. His fame foon reaching the ears of Al Metawakkel, that prince fent for him, and was so pleased with his conversation, that he determined to fettle a pension upon him. However, as he had refided two years in the Greek emperor's dominions, suspecting that he might be carrying on some sinister designs for that monarch, he was afraid at first to trust him; and therefore, in order to try him, after he had ordered him to be clothed in a fumptuous robe, and affigned him an yearly appointment of 50,000 dinars, he commanded him to prepare him a fubtle poison, with which he might destroy one of his enemies in so private a manner that no one could su pect him to be the author of his death. This Hongin refused to do: telling the Khalif, that he could only prepare medicines which would be beneficial to mankind; however, he affured that prince, in order to gain time, that he would study the nature of poisons, if he could once understand that such a study would prove agreeable to him. The Khallf not being able, either by promises or menaces to prevail upon him to do what he defired, fent him immediately to prison, where he kept him confined a whole year; after the end of which, he ordered him to be brought before him, and threatened him with immediate death, if the perfused in his refusal to obey his commands. But he still remained inslexible; which so pleased Al Motawakkel, that he bad him be of good courage, and told him that he should now repose the greatest confidence in him. Afterwards demanding of him what could inspire him with fuch an amazing refolution, when death did as it were stare him in the face? "Two things," replied Hanain, "my " religion and my profelhon. The former commands me to " do good to my enemies, and much more not to hurt my " friends. The latter was instituted solely for the benefit and " advantage of mankind; and, at my entrance upon it, I "took a folemn oath never to be concerned in any mischievous " or lethiferous preparations." This answer charmed the Khalif, who made him a present of a rich vest, together with a very considerable sum of money; so that he seemed to be, for some time, one of the happiest of mortals, as he enjoyed fo large a share of Al Matawakkel's favour. However, one Al Tifuri, a Christian, envying his happiness, found means to accuse him of profanencis and infidelity to the Khalif, and to excite the superior clergy to projecute him for the same; which terminated in an excommunication. This to affected Honain, that he died suddenly the following night; having, as was generally believed, put a period to his days by poison. He left behind him two fons, Dawd and Ilbak; the latter of which applied himself to the study of philosophy, and translated some of the best Greek writers, and the former practised physic, after his father's death, amongst the lower fort of people. He had likewise a nephew, named Hobaish Ebn Al Asam, who had an excellent talent at translations; informuch that his Arabic version of several Greek and Syriac authors has been justly admired by many learned men of the east, and by fome of them even ascribed to Honain himself. This celebrated physician, according to Ebn Shohnah, translated into Arabic Euclid, and Ptolemy's Almagest, which were afterwards revised and corrected by Thabet Ebn Korra the Sabian. His scholars are also said to have translated into the same language the greatest part of the works of Galen and Hippocrates, and to have

have published this version under their master's name. Some writers likewise attribute to him and his son the Arabic translation of Aristotle's Analytics, and his treatise of Interpretation, intitled by the Arabs Analytica and Bari Arminias; which words are manisest corruptions of the Greek. In the French king's library, N° 866, several of Honain's pieces, passely, the Kefaiat Al Naik, the Hawashi Messell Al Hakim Honain, &c. are still preserved. It appears from Ehn Shobuah, that Honain's excommunication by the patriarch for his irreverence to certain sacred pictures, or images, and consequently his death, which immediately followed that tragical event, happened in the Khalifat of Al Mostamed, and the year of the Heira 260, or 261.

THE reign of this Khalif is called by the oriental historians Many prothe reign of predigies. The earthquakes in various parts of the digies in world during that period, and the strange effects produced by this fome of the dreadful concussions attending them, already taken prince's notice of, have been considered by those writers as part of reign. them. Besides which, many others, and particularly one in the country of Kairwan, the Cyrenaica of the antients, wherein the earth opened and swallowed up a vast number of people, as also another in Yaman, during which a large ploughed field was carried from the top of a hill to a place at a confiderable distance from it, without losing an inch of ground, have been mentioned by Ebn Juzi. We are likewise informed by Ebn Abu'l Weza, that a strange bird, bigger than a raven, perched upon a tree in the fame country, and, in the hearing of many people, distinctly pronounced the following words, Serve and fear God, God, God, which it repeated forty times, and then flew away; but foon after returned, and pronounced the same words forty times more. The truth and reality of which facts were attested by 500 persons who heard them, and were brought before Al Motawakkel for that purpose. Ebn Al Jala also writes, that, in Khûzestân, a bird placed itself upon the bier of a man, whom some of his neighbours were carrying to his grave, and cried out in the language of that province, ALMIGHTY GOD have mercy upon this dead person, and all that affift in his interment. The water of the Tigris likewise at Bughdaid, once in this prince's reign, continued for three days together as yellow as melted gold, and then assumed the colour of blood, which remained a much longer time. At Sowida, a small town, in Egypt, it hailed stones of a monstrous size, every one of which weighed ten Arab pounds. Nor was the nature of these stones less wonderful than their fize. For, an Arab having taken one of them, in order to make a fire with it in his tent, so violent a flame immediately iffued out of it, that the whole tent, and every thing combustible in it, were consumed in an instant. Some of these stones are said to have been preserved at Kaire, , or Al Kahirah, and Betlis in Georgia, a long time after. Persian author relates, that two men in Egypt having been ftruck down to the ground by lightning, about the same time, they both continued black from head to foot all the remaining part of their lives, without having received any other damage therefrom "."

He issued against flians.

THIS Khalif issued at least two edicts against the Christians wo edicts settled in the Moslem empire, as has been already observed; one of which has been confidered as the effect of his refentthe Chri- ment against Bakhtishua, his physician, who professed the Christian religion, by some of the eastern writers; though he feems to have perfecuted the followers and descendants of Ali with a much greater degree of violence. In his reign, Thesphilus, the Greek emperor, ordered all the images of faints in , the churches to be destroyed; which induced Sophronius, the patriarch of Alexandria, and one Abu Korra, an Arab, to write in defence of image-worship; though others, with an invincible strength of reasoning, maintained the contrary opi-The former of these learned men sent a letter to the emperor, containing the reasons that obliged him to disapprove of his conduct in the aforesaid particular; which, according to some, had such an effect upon that prince, that he immediately revoked his former edict. Sopbronius died of a dropfy, in the 233d year of the Hejra, and was succeeded by one Michael, a native of Alexandria, who fat in the patriarchal see there, according to Eutychius, about twenty-four years. The fame author relates, that the emperor had a distaste given him to images by the pious fraud of a priest, who, by means of a leaden tube, made the people believe, that the breafts of an image of the virgin Mary dropped milk; which pretended miracle procured from the populace an uncommon degree of reverence for that image, and no small accession of wealth to the priest himself: but the imposture being detected, the emperor was so incensed, that he commanded him to be beheaded, and forbad his subjects to worship either the images or pictures of faints; which, for some time, he considered as To which we may add, that this event downright idolatry. seems to have preceded a few years the Khalif's first edict against the Christians; and that not long after the emperor had abolished the worship of images, he relapsed into that species of idolatry. This, therefore, being so extremely repugnant to the turn and genius of the Mobammedans, probably excited the Khalif to discover an ill disposition to the Christians in the year of the Hejra 235. For, the disgrace of Bakhtishua happened, if we will believe Abu'l-Faraj, in the year of the Hejra 244; and therefore could not occasion the publication of the aforesaid edict, notwithstanding what may seem to be infinuated to the contrary by Eutychius, who, perhaps, industriously concealed the true cause of that affair w.

WITH regard to Al Motawakkel's person, he was tall, of a Descripthin habit of body, and had a fwarthy complexion. He had, tion of Al however, a handsome face, in which a reddish and yellowish Motahue appeared, a middling beard, and eyes of a larger fize. As wakkel's to his disposition, he was, if we may believe Abu Jaafar Al person, and Tabari, extremely affable, munificent, and of great conde-character. scension. He was also a vast encourager of learned men, infomuch that prodigious numbers of them reforted to his court. In this, he followed the example of his great predeceffor Al Mamûn, of whose uncommon passion for the sciences, particularly geometry and aftronomy, the following remarkable instance has been handed down to us by Cedrenus. A young Greek having been taken prisoner by the Arabs, and brought by the officer whose slave he was into the Khalif's prefence, that prince's geometricians, who likewise then appeared, immediately entered into a conference with him; but the youth proving in knowledge infinitely superior to them, they asked him whether there were any more geometricians at Byzantium as good as himself? To which he answered, that there were many there who vaftly excelled him, and particularly his mafter Leo, then in poor circumstances, who applied himself solely to the study of the sciences. The Khalif, extremely desirous of having so celebrated a mathematician at his court, gave the Greek his liberty, and fent him with a letter to Leo, then at Constantinople, or Byzantium, to invite him into his dominions; offering at the same time to load him with prefents, and fettle what pension he pleased upon him, if he would undertake to instruct his subjects in those sciences, in which he so eminently excelled. This letter Leo shewed to TheoEtistus ? and he immediately communicated the contents of it to Theophilus, who then sat upon the imperial throne. The emperor, being by this means made acquainted with Leo's uncommon merit, constituted him professor of those branches of literature he was maker of, and converted the church of the forty martyrs into a school, or gymnasium, where he exercised the great talents be was master of for the public good. After this, Al Mamun sent him a considerable number of geometrical and aftronomical problems, besides several relative to other sciences, of all which he foon received from him a most accurate and satisfactory folution. This so raised the advantageous idea the Khalif had already formed to himself of Leo's transcendent merit, that he fent an embassador to the imperial court, to defire the emperor to permit that learned man to refide a short time with him. For which favour the embassador offered Theophilus, in his master's name, a large fum of money, and to enter into a lasting treaty of peace and alliance with him. But the emperor, being unwilling that the Arabs should make a figure in the learned world, refused to comply with Al Mamûn's request, and created Lee bishop of Thessalonica. However, this sufficiently demonstrates that Khallf's thirst after knowledge, and confirms the character given of this prince, at least in the particular here infisted upon, by the oriental historians x.

THE Khalîf Al Motawakkel reigned fourteen years and feven ther parti-months, according to Abu'l-Faraj, or fourteen years, nine culars re- months, and nine days, if we will believe Eutychius, or, lastly, fourteen years, ten months, and three days, if we chule to admit what has been advanced by Abu Jaafar Al Tabari. According to the first and last of these authors, he was forty years of age at the time of his death; but Eutychius makes him to have been forty-four years old when that tragical event happened. In the tenth year of his Khalifat, he made Sâlman Ebn Zarkan patriarch of Jerusalem, who sat in that see about five years. The first of his Visirs was Mohammed Ebn Abd'almâlec Al Ziyât; after whose death, Mohammed Ebn Al Fadl Al Jorjani was called to that high post. And, lastly, Al Jorjani was succeeded by Abd allah Ebn Yahya Ebn Khakan, who, as some writers will have it, was the Khalif's principal fecretary of state. The first employed by this prince in the capacity of judge was Yahya Ebn Actem, whom he turned out of his office, and deprived him of all the money he had therein acquired, which amounted to the sum of 100,000 dinars. After Yabya's difgrace, he advanced to that honourable employment Jaafar Ebn Mohammed Al Barbami, and then Jaafar Ebn Abd allah Ebn Jaafar Al Hoshemi. He removed from the exalted post that had been conferred upon him Ahmed Ebn Dawd, who had been so instrumental in his elevation to the Khalisfat. The first captain of his guards was Ishak Ebn Ibrabim, and the second Mohammed Ebn Abd'allah Ebn Thâher, who was sent for out of Khorasán. His first chamberlain was Wasif, the Turk, his second Sa'id Ebn Sâleh, and his third Bagd, or Bogâ, the Turk. The first day of his reign was Thursay, and the last Wednesday. The inscription of his seal was, In God is my trust. It has been already observed, that Fatah Ebn Khâkân, his principal savourite, was assassinated with him r.

SECT. XXXII.

T appears from what has been related above, that the night Al Mon-At Motawakkel was massacred the assassins saluted his son tasersalus-Mohammed Abu Jaafar Al Montaser, or, as he is commonly call-ed Khalif. ed, Al Montaser Bi'llah, Khalif. The next morning the new emperor of the faithful affembled all the great officers of the court, and the principal inhabitants of the city of Al Jaafaria, built by the late Khalif, who had been murdered there, and ordered Ahmed Ehn Al Khasib to read to them a declaration he had caused to be drawn up, importing that he had no hand in his father's death, but that this ought to be imputed to his favourite Fatab Ebn Khâkân, whom he had ordered to be cut to pieces for being guilty of so black a crime. After which, he was inaugurated, and all the persons of distinction present took the oath of allegiance to him. His mother Habasha, one of Al Motawakkel's concubines, according to Abu Jaafar Al Tabari, was of Greek extraction. Soon after his inauguration, he demolished the palace Al Jaafaria, erected by his father, and retired into Samarra, or Sarra Manray, where he refided during the remainder of his short reign. Some of the Moslem writers pretend, that Al Montaser, not long after his accession, looking upon a piece of tapestry curiously wrought, discovered thereon a person on horseback with a diadem about his head, and round it a Persic inscription, which he commanded a Perfian then belonging to his court to explain. The Perfian, continue these authors, would willingly have evaded obeying the Khalif's command; but finding this impracticable, he told Al Montaser, that the horseman he saw was Shirilyeh, the fon of Khofra Parviz, who slew his father; and that the inscription was to the following effect: I am Shirûyeh, the fon of Khosrû Parvîz, who slew my father, and reigned only six months. Al Montaser no sooner heard these words than he changed countenance; confidering the whole affair as ominous, and amounting to a prediction that his reign should not exceed that term. Which prediction, if we will believe the Arab historians, met with a full and absolute completion. Abu Othmán Becr Ebn Mohammed Al Mazeni, a celebrated grammarian, samed for his skill in the Arabic tongue, died the present year. We must not forget to remark, that Al Mondar, the son of Mohammed, Khalif of Spain, invaded the province of Alava, where he overthrew the Christian forces, and brought a great number of heads with him to Corduba; and that Al Abbâs, the second Aglabite Emîr of Sicily, who was succeeded by his son Abd'allah Ebn Al Abbâs, elected by the people Emîr, till the Khalif of Kairwân's pleasure was known, died in the year of the Hejra 247².

THE next year, being the 248th of the Moslem æra, beginning March 7th, 862, Boga Al Kabir, Boga Al Saghir, Bagher, or Bager, Wasif, and the other officers of the Turkish guards, concerned in the affaffination of Al Motawakkel, held a council amongst themselves, and, in order to avoid being brought to condign punishment for the perpetration of so horrid a crime, resolved to oblige the new Khalif to exclude his brothers Al Mo'taz, or rather Al Mo'tazz, and Al Mowaiad from the fucceffion; being convinced that either of those princes would take vengeance of them for his father's death, if ever he should ascend the Moslem throne. But the Khalif's brothers, having been apprized of the violence with which they were threatened, went of their own accord to Al Montafer, and refigned with a good grace their right to the crown after his decease. This is the account of the affair, at present in view, handed down to us by some of the Persian historians; tho' the Arab writers represent this refignation, or abdication, as the effect of compulsion. that as it will, the Khalif immediately notified this event to Mohammed Ebn Abd'allah Ebn Thaber Ebn Hosein, the commandant of Baghdad; intimating at the same time, that the two princes themselves defired to be permitted always to live a private life, as their abilities were by no means equal to the government of so large and extensive an empire. Notwithstanding which, he considered the Turkish officers, who had imbrued their hands in his father's blood, according to fome of the Arab writers, as the principal authors of this measure; and even told his brothers themselves, in the very presence of those officers, that they had impelled him to it. After which. he dispatched couriers with advice of what had happened to all the governors of provinces in the empire. Some historians

AL MONTASER, not long after his elevation to the Kha- Al Monlifat, saw his father Al Motawakkel in a dream, who re-taler dies. proached him with his parricide, and told him, that he should not long enjoy the fruits of his wickedness, in the following terms: " Mohammed, thou hast killed me, thou hast oppressed es me, thou hast deprived me of the Khalifat, which thou 66 shalt in a short time leave, and then enter into eternal fire." This dream fo frighted the Khallf, that he immediately awaked in the utmost terror, burst out into tears, and made the palace ring with his lamentations. This foon brought to him Abd'allah Ebn Amru, to whom he related his frightful dream; who told him, that these nocturnal horrors were only the effects of his waking thoughts, and bad him slight them as much as possible. In order to which, he farther advised him to take a chearful glass, and to drive away all pensive thoughts by a round of his favourite diversions; which he accordingly for some time attempted to do. But notwithstanding this, he gradually fell into a deep melancholy, which at last put a period to his days; tho' he died of a squinancy on Sunday the fifth of the latter Rabi, according to Abu'l-Faraj, after he had been ill only three days. Some authors pretend, that he was carried off by poison; and others, by an ulcer in his head, caused by dropping some oil into one of his ears. He expired on the 25th day of the former Rabi, if we will believe Abu Jaafar Al Tabari. Another writer assures us, that he died of a fever; of which when his physician said he could easily cure him, he replied, I greatly fear this will be the last sickness I shall ever have, as I saw a person in a dream last night, who declared to me that I should die in the twenty-fifth year of my age. This person, as he found afterwards, was his father, whose nocturnal apparition to him in a dream has been already taken notice of. The death of this Khalif happened at Sarramanraia, where, from the fixth day of his short reign, he chose to reside b.

he had acquitted himself perfectly well in an office he was intrufted with, and entertaining his mafter with an account of the various adventures he had met with in that country, amongst other things told him, that he had brought with himfrom thence a wounded heart, because he could not purchase, for want of money, a female flave of exquisite beauty and a most charming voice. The Khalif heard him without making any reply; but being determined to gratify him, he gave orders privately to the governor of Egypt to buy that slave, and fend her to Samarra as foon as possible. Upon her arrival there, the was immediately conducted to the palace; whither the Khalif invited the officer a few days after, in order to rally him upon his amours. He no sooner appeared in his master's presence, than he heard the voice of his beloved flave in the next room; which put him instantly out of countenance. The Kbalif asked him the reason of his confusion. and whether he knew the voice he heard? Upon which, he frankly owned, that he took it to be the voice of the beautiful flave he had formerly mentioned to him. Al Montaser then demanded of him, whether he still preserved his affection for her? To which he answered, that "as he could not enterstain the least hopes of ever possessing her, he ought to lay salide his passion for her, especially as the was become his " master's property." The Khalif then very generously said to him, "I can affure you with an oath, that I have purchased so this beautiful flave in Egypt for no other person than your-" felf, and that I have only cast one glance at her since her ar-" rival in the palace." Which words were no fooner out of his mouth, than he commanded her to be put into the officer's hands, adorned with all those jewels he had given her, in order to make a more valuable present to him c.

A pleasant in bis reign.

It was in this Khalif's reign, that an Arab, feated on a occurrence little hill in the neighbourhood of Mecca, held unlawful affemblies at his house, in order to debauch the youth of both sexes, whom he fuffered to mix together promiscuously there, in direct opposition to the Mohammedan laws. This man was brought before the judge of Mecca, who, after he had reproached him with his unparalleled impudence in daring to be guilty of fuch lewdness so near the holy place, began immediately to draw up his process; not doubting in the least of the truth of a fact which was become so notorious to all the people of the territory of Mecca. But as none of his accomplices would appear against him, the judge found himself greatly embarrafied for want of evidence. However, he at last hit upon an expedient, which he thought would infallibly convict him; and that was to try whether any of those public beafts made use of by the people who set out every day from MIREMOND.

one particular place to that part of the mountain where this Arab lived, would of themselves find the way to his house. The experiment was made on some asses, the beasts princicipally used in this country, that went directly of their own accord to the spot inhabited by the Arab, tho' this was of itfelf extremely difficult to be discovered. The judge having now, as he imagined, full proof of his guilt, fent for the executioner to chaftise him, who immediately appeared with the whips, or scourges, in his hand. The Arab, who did not want wit, at the fight of him, bethought himself of a pleasant fort of finesse, in order to avoid the chastisement with which he was threatened. Turning himself then to the judge, he said, When you have flay'd me alive with your whips, you will bave punished only one guilty person; but, by such an action, you will reflect an eternal ignoming upon the whole Arab nation. For it will be ever faid of them hereafter, that, when the evidence of men could not be produced, they admitted that of effet. The company were so pleased with the humour of the man, that it was the opinion of every one present that he ought to be pardoned; fo that he was instantly dismissed, without having any punishment at all inflicted upon him 4.

WITH regard to his person, Al Montaser was of a middle Descripflature, and had very large black eyes. He had also an aqui-tion of bis line nose, a majestic mien, a large beard, was extremely sat, person, and of a fair complexion. As to his disposition, he is re-and charported to have been naturally brave, prudent, and just, but rader.

too great a lover of money. Some of the Arab writers observe, that he had a taste for poetry, and made tolerable good verses, a specimen of which has been preserved by Abu faafar Al Tabari. He reigned only fix months, and had scarce completed the 25th year of his age, tho' Eutychius supposes him to have been three years older, at the time of his death. Not only the lower fort of people, but even the grandees themselves, gave out publicly, from his first advancement to the Mastern throne, that he would not reign longer. than fix months, the time that Shirdyeb, the fon of Khofra Parviz, survived his father; which renders it probable that he was poisoned, as we find afferted by some of the Arab historians. He favoured the house of Ali, and permitted the Shiites to visit Al Hosein's tomb. His Vifir was Ahmed Ebn Al Khasib, the captain of his guards Mohammed Ebn Abd'allah Ebn Thåber, his judge Jaafar Al Abbasi, and his first chamberlain Abu Naser, the Turk. The first day of his reign was either Wednesday or Thursday, and the last Saturday. The inscription of his seal was, The person who endeavours to adoid fear necessarily takes it to him. He is succeeded by Al Mosta'in.

THE day after Al Montaser's death, the two Boga's, father and son, Atâmesh, and the other principal Turkish officers, who had been concerned in the murder of Al Motawakkel, affembled in that part of the metropolis denominated Al Harûniâ, and, after coming to a resolution never to vest with the imperial dignity any of that prince's fons, left they should be called to an account for their former villainy, unanimously elevated to the Khalifat Ahmed Abu'l Abbas Ebn Mohammed Ebn Al Mo'tasem, who was surnamed Al Mosta'in, or Al Mosta'in Bi'llah. This step was taken apparently to the prejudice of Al Mo'tazz, second son to the Khalif Al Motawakkel, to whom the right of succession most evidently appertained. But the Turkish faction having acquired a great degree of power, by the credit which Boga Al Kabir, Boga Al Sagbir, Wasif, Bagber, or Bager, and their other chiefs, had obtained in all the provinces, they carried all before them; infomuch that Al Mo'tazz's party was intirely borne down, and Al Mosta'in, whose mother Mabarif, or, as others call her, Makharek, had served his father in the capacity of concubine, soon found himfelf in peaceable possession of the empire, and was universally acknowleged the fole, true, and lawful Khaliff.

An ineffectual attempt made by Al Motazz's friends.

THE election of the new Kbalif happened on Monday the 6th day of the latter Rabi, in the year of the Hejra 248; he being then, according to Abu Jaafar Al Tabari, about 28 years of age, and receiving at the same time from the electors the surname of Al Mosta'in Bi'llab. As soon as the election was over, he appointed Atâmesh his Vistr, or Wazir, and Ahmed Ebn Al Khasib his fecretary of state. The day following, he shewed himself to the people, in his imperial robes, who were ranged in two lines to receive him. But the Khalif no fooner appeared, than there suddenly started up a body of 50 horse and 1000 foot, with their feymitars drawn in their hands, crying out with all their might, Long live Al Mo'tazz! upon which a very smart conflict ensued. But Al Mo'tazz's friends being at last deseated, and for the most part cut to pieces, Al Mosta'in was fixed upon the Moslem throne. That prince no sooner found himself without a competitor, than he sent to prison Al

Mortazz and Al Morvaiad, the Khalif Al Mortawakkel's fons. About this time, Yakub Ebn Al Leit, or Al Lit, moved out of Sejeftan towards Herat, with a confiderable body of troops; and the people of Hems drove the Khalif's governor out of the town. The prefent year likewife, according to Abulfeda, Boga Al Kabir, and Mohammed Ebn Al Ola Al Hamadani, departed this life. We must not forget to observe, that the citizens of Merida, the antient Emerita, rebelled also this year against Mohammed, the Khalif of Spain; who marched against them with a powerful army, obliged them to surrender at discretion, destroyed their bridge, dismantled their city, forced them to send a number of hostages to Corduba, and, in order the more effectually to keep them in their duty, left amongst them a detachment of his troops 5.

THE following year, being the 249th of the Hejra, com- The Turmencing February 24th, 863, the Greeks overthrew the Arabs kish at Marj Al Askaf, and put Omar Ebn Abd allah Al Aktah, their troops in general, together with a great number of his men, to the sword; the Khawhich enabled them to make incursions into the Moslem terri- lif's fertories, as far as the borders of Mesopotamia. The Turkish troops vice mualso in the Khalif's service mutinied, and cut to pieces Atâmesh, ting. Al Mosta'in's Visir, and Seja' Ebn Al Hâtem, another person of distinction belonging to the court. They also plundered Atamesh's house, and carried off with them from thence an immense treasure. To these outrages they were excited by Wasif and Boga, their leaders, who were diffatisfied with Atâmesh's conduct; he having, at least as they pretended, set the Khalif against them, and excluded them from a share in the administration. These enormities occasioned a commotion at Baghdad, where the populace affembled in great numbers, burnt one of the bridges over the Tigris, and demolished the other, opened all the prisons in that city, pillaged the houses of the wealthiest inhabitants, and distributed the money that fell into their hands on this occasion amongst the forces posted, for the defence of the frontiers, at a confiderable distance from the town. The troops likewise in garison at Baghdad, inraged at the Turkish insolence, about the same time committed great disorders h.

In the 250th year of the Hejra, beginning February 13th, A rebel-864, Yahya Ebn Omar Ebn Yahya, of the house of Ali, as-sion sembled a body of troops at Cûfa, and declared his intention breaks to dethrone Al Mosta'in. Upon advice of this revolt, the out of Khalif sent Mohammed Ebn Abd'allah Ebn Thâ her Ebn Al Hosein Cûfa.

with an army against Yabya; who, coming up with him not far from Cûfa, attacked him with such bravery, that he put his forces to flight. Yabya himself was killed in the action, and his head fent by Mohammed to Al Mosta'in, who caused it to be exposed to the view of the people in one of the most public places of Sarra Manray. This defeat, and the death of Yabya, extinguished the rebellion that had broke out in the Arabian Irâk. The troubles, however, still continued at Bagbdâdi.

Another rebellion in Tabreslân.

Some of the authors followed by M. D'Herbelot relate, that one Hasan Ebn Yezid, another chief of the house of Ali, rebelled against the Khalif, and seized upon the province of Tabrestan, the same year. This usurper, according to those writers, remained mafter of that province nineteen whole years, and left it to his brother Mohammed Kasem, or Kassem, who succeeded him, and kept possession of it eighteen years, without any molestation from the Khalifs. This usurper is called Al Hasan Ebn Zeid Ebn Mohammed Ebn Ismael, by Abulfeda and Abu Jaafar Al Tabari; the former of which writers places his defection in the 250th, and the latter in the 251st, year of the Moslem æra. About this time, the people of Hems cut Al Fadl Ebn Karân, the Khalîf's governor of that city, to pieces; but they were defeated by Musa Ebn Bega Al Kabir, his fuccessor, who put a vast number of them to the fword, and laid their city in ashes. The preceding year, died Ali Ebn Al Jahm, a poet of considerable note; as did also about this time, Al Kbâli, another of equal merit. The Moslems reduced the city of Neetum, the Note of the moderns, called by the Arabs Natis, in Sicily the present year k.

Al Mofto Baghdâd.

In the year of the Hejra 251, the first day of which was ta'in flies coincident with February 2d, 865, the Turks, who had made themselves masters of all the forces of the empire, and by that means intirely influenced the Khalif's councils, were divided into two powerful factions. Bagber, or Bager, one of their leaders, having had some dispute with Wastf, another of them, applied to the Khalif for justice; who was so far from complying with his request, that he openly favoured his antagonist. This so exasperated Bagher, that he assembled his friends, with a resolution to assassinate Wasif, and depose Al Mosta'in, in order to elevate in his place another Khalif that should be more favourable to him. But this conspiracy being discovered, the Khalif caused Bagher to be arrested in the imperial palace; of which the Turks being apprized, they immediately took up arms, under the pretext of delivering their general out of his enemies hands. This obliged Al Mosta'in to hold an extraordinary council, at which affifted Wasif and Bogā, two of the other Turkish commanders; who, being interested in Bagher's destruction, advised the Khalif to put him to death. This advice was readily liftened to, Al Mosta'in thinking by that execution to appeale the feditious spirit of the Turkish foldiery. But it produced a quite contrary effect. For the Turks, being rendered more furious by the death of their chief, pillaged the city of Sarra Manray, and threatened to fet fire to the palace, if Wasif and Boga, who had been the authors of their general's death, were not immediately delivered into their hands. Those officers seeing themselves reduced to such an extremity, could find no other expedient at that critical juncture, to avoid the fury of their own troops, than to carry off their master with them to Baghdad; which they accordingly did. The mutineers being informed of what had happened, repented of the violence they had committed, and fent deputies after Al Mosta'in to intreat him to return to his capital. But Mohammed Ebn Abd allah Ebn Thaher, the commandant of Baghdad, being extremely pleased that he had got the Khalif in his hands, and hating the Turks, as did also both the garison and people of Baghdad, received them very ill, and obliged them to return to Sarra Manray without having feen the Khalif. This so irritated the Turks, that they had again recourse to arms, by their own proper authority deposed Al Mosta'in, and placed Al Mo'tazz, Al Montaser's brother, whom they took out of prison for that purpose, upon the Moslem throne. Some of the Arab authors call Bagher Yaaz, and inform us, that he was massacred by Wasif, Bogâ, and other persons of distinction, because he had possessed himself of the imperial palace with a defign to affaffinate both them and Al Mosta'in. This year the Christians worsted the Mostems in an action by sea, off of Syracuse, and took four of their ships. It was with great difficulty that the Khalif Al Mosta'in made his escape in a small vessel from Sarra Manray, seated on the eastern bank of the Tigris, to Baghdad 1.

THE Khalif Al Ma'tazz, after he had fettled himself upon Al Mosthe Mossem throne, sent his brother Ahmed Ebn Mottawakkel ta'in's with an army to lay siege to Boghdâd. Ahmed began his march abdication Samarra, or Sarra Manray, on the 23d of the month tion, and Al Mobarram, and, upon his arrival at Baghdâd, besieged the death. place in form. His army, according to Abu Jaafar Al Tabari, was not extremely numerous, the principal part of it consisting of no more than 5000 Turkish and Farannian, or Egyp-

tion horse, and 2000 Magrebians, or western Arabs; though, if we will believe Abu'lfeda, it amounted to 50,000 men. Al Mosta'in for some time defended himself with great bravery, made several successful fallies on the besiegers, and destroyed a considerable number of their men. Nay, he would, in all probability, have forced Abmed to abandon the fiege, had he not been betrayed by those in whom he was obliged the most to confide. For, Mohammed Ebn Abd'allah Ebn Thâber, the commandant of Bagbdad, in order to provide for his own fecurity, thought fit to propose an accommodation to Abmed; which was at last concluded upon the following terms, viz. that Mohammed Ebn Abd'allah Ebn Thaber should remain in peaceable possession of his government; and that Al Mosta'in, on condition his life was granted him, should abdicate the Khalifat. Some of the Arab historians relate, that Mohammed Eba Abd allah Ebn Thaher being apprized, that Al Mosta'in had engaged Boga and Wasif to assassinate him, came to an immediate resolution to desert the party of that prince. Be that, however, as it will, as foon as Al Mo'tazz had figned and ratified the aforesaid treaty, Al Mosta'in formally renounced all pretentions to the Khalifat, and contented himfelf with living a private life in the magnificent palace of Hasan Ebn Sohal at Baghdad, which was assigned him for his residence. This happened in the year of the Hejra 252. He was afterwards removed to Al Hajan Ebn Woheb's palace at Bafra, and there straitly confined. From thence he was fent to Wafet, and committed to the custody of Abmed Ebn Tolûn; who, as some will have it, murdered him by the Khalîf's command, in the month of Shawal, the same year. Others affirm, that Sa'id, Al Mo'tazz's principal chamberlain, dispatched him at Kadesia, cut off his head, and immediately sent it as an agreeable present to his master. And, lastly, others believe that he was cut off by Sa'id, Al Mo'tazz's Visir, soon after his abdication, in the imperial city of Sarra Manray. Those who make Ahmed Ebn Tolûn his executioner relate, that his head was transmitted to the Khalif at Sarra Manray; and that when the messenger appeared with it in that prince's presence, he was playing at chess, and would not vouchsafe to look at it till he had finished his game; after which, he for some time beheld it with great pleasure, and then ordered it to be buried. Al Mosta'in reigned three years, nine months, and a few days, if we will believe the Arab historians; tho' his reign has likewise been extended by Khondemit to the length of almost four complete years. With regard to his person, Al Mosta'in was fat, of a comely aspect, and had a black beard. As to his disposition, he was mild, indolent, extremely fearful, and intirely governed by the Digitized by GOOGIC people people about him. His first Visir was Atâmesh, and his secretary of state Abmed Ebn Al Khasib. His favourites Wasif and Boga, who at last deserted him, had an uncommon ascendant over him. His general Mohammed Ebn Abd'allah Ebn Thâber abandoned his interests in the manner already related. His judges Abmed Ebn Abu'l Shawarib Al Amawi and Mohammed Ebn Wazîr Al Wâseti made no very considerable figure. the last year of his reign, one Sanitius is said to have been advanced to the patriarchate of Alexandria, and to have prefided over the church there eleven years. In the first year of his Khalifat, Theodorus, called by the Arabs Al Moklâti, was also constituted patriarch of Jerusalem, and sat in that see nineteen years. We must not forget to observe, that Al Mosta'in's abdication was attested by his own judges, and all the principal citizens of Baghdad m.

Several smart actions happened betweenhim and Soliman Ebn Abd' allah, Mohammed Ebn Abd'allah, Tdaher's lieutenant there. From Medina he marched at the head of his troops to Mecca, and befieged that city two months; but finding himself not able to carry the place, he retired to Jodda, cut off all communication between the Meccans and that port, and so infested the roads that it was not fafe to perform the pilgrimage to Mecca. However, he foon returned thither, maffacred great numbers of the citizens who were affembled on mount Arafat, on the ninth of Dhu'lhajja, in order to perform their devotions there, and forced many others, after he had plundered them, to abandon the place before they had gone through the prescribed ceremonies. But death soon put an end to all his towering projects, and dispersed his numerous followers in such a manner, that not the faintest traces of this rebellion ever afterwards appeared °. SECT.

His mother's name was Fatiha. When he was fixed upon the throne, without any danger of a competitor, he called his brother Al Mowaiad again to the succession; tho' he foon after, upon a bare suspicion only, deprived him of his right, and sent him to prison. 'Tis true, Al Mowaiad had a strong party in the empire, that would undoubtedly have declared for him, had he intended to undertake any thing against the Khalif. THE Khalif, upon his accession, confirmed Mohammed Ebn Abd'allah Ebn Thaber in the possession of the territories asfigned him, and the government of Baghdad, in conformity the Turks to the promise he had made him before his elevation to the Khalifat. He likewise came to a resolution to cut off the chiefs of the Turkish soldiery, whose exorbitant power had proved so fatal to his three immediate predecessors. But he was diffuaded from carrying that defign into execution by Mohammed Ebn Abd'allah Ebn Thaber, who represented to him the dangerous consequences of it in so strong a light, that, instead of punishing Wastf, Bagher, and the other Turkish commanders, as he had intended, he heaped new favours upon them, and gave them several additional employments, that greatly augmented the power they had already acquired. Mazâbem Ebn Khâkân to prefide over that country in his room. About this time, according to Abulfeda, died Mohammed Ebn Bashar, and Mohammed Ebn Al Motshan, of Basra, two of Al Bokhari's doctors, and Al Mosta'in was whipt to death by Sa'id Ebn Sahel. We must not forget to remark, that the Moslems retook Neetum, or Noto, in Sicily, after it had fallen again to the Christians, the present year '.

THE following year, being the 253d of the Hejra, the TheTurks Turkish troops in Sarra Manray mutined for their pay; upon muting, which, Wasif, their general, in order to appeale the fedition, and cut to expostulated with them about their breach of duty in very pieces tharp terms. But this was fo far from producing the defired their gen effect, that it proved fatal to him. Those insolent troops first gave him ill language, for his laudable attempt to bring them back to a sense of their duty by words only; and then some of the most guilty of them, rushing upon him all at once, cut him instantly to pieces 1.

THE same year, the Khalif Al Mo'tazz banished his bro- Al Mo'ther Ahmed Ebn Al Motawakkel, called by some writers Al tazz ba-Mowaffek, and by others Abu Ahmed, to Waset, or, accord-nishes his ing to Eutychius, to Basra, because he seemed to take to brother heart his brother Al Mowaia's death. He afterwards, how-Ahmed. ever, permitted him to reside in the eastern part of the territory of Baghdad. The famous general Mohammed Ebn Abd'allah Ebn Thâher departed this life at Baghdad, the 14th of Dhu'lkaada; and the following night, according to Abu Jaafar Al Tabari, there happened a remarkable lunar eclipse. The Moslems of Sicily, if we will believe the Cambridge Chronicon, reduced a second time the city of Ragusa, the present year t.

THE 254th year of the Hejra, beginning January 1st, 868, Boga had like to have proved fatal to the Khalif Al Mo'tazz. Boga, rebels the Turk, surnamed the Elder, in order to distinguish him from against a younger officer of the same name, observing an alteration in the Khathe Khalif's conduct towards him, according to the writers lif, and is followed by M. D'Herbelot, left the court abruptly, and retired put to to Mawfel. But he was no sooner gone, than a party of the death. Khalif's guards pillaged his house. That prince, who was not ignorant of the Turk's ill designs, commanded Al Walsd, the Magrebian, or western Arab (so the African Mossems were called) to meet him with a powerful army, and give him battle wherever he should find him. The Magrebian executed his master's orders with such bravery, that, after a sharp engagement, he defeated the rebels, and took Boga himfelf prisoner. The news of this fignal victory no sooner reached Al Mo'tazz, than he dispatched an express with orders to Al Walid to cut off his prisoner's head ".

Bogâ the younger also put to death by the Khalîf.

THE same year, according to Abu Jaafar Al Tabari and Abulfeda, Al Mo'tazz put Boga the younger also to death at Sarra Manray; which excited great murmurings amongst the Turkish troops, and paved the way to the deposition of that prince. About this time died Abu'l Hasan Ebn Mobammed Ebn Ali Ebn Al Hosein, one of Ali's descendants, the ninth Shiite Imâm, and Mazâhem Ebn Khakân, after he had been two years governor of Egypt. The latter of these was succeeded in his post by his son Ahmed, or Mohammed, as he was by Arjuz Ehn Olugh Ebn Tarkan, the Turk, and Arjuz by Abmed Ebn Tolûn, an officer of Turkish extraction, then about thirty-four years of age, in the month of Ramadân. This Abmed was born at Baghdad, and, by the influence of the Turks at the Moslem court, had the government of Egypt conferred upon him; tho' his father Tolan had been only one of the Khalif Al Mamûn's Turkish slaves. He was a fast friend to the Turks on all emergent occasions, considering them as his friends and countrymen; though he is faid to have despised the barbarous customs and genius of that nation. He has been represented as a person of uncommon greatness of soul, and of a very amiable character, by Abu'l-Faraj w.

Al Mo'tazz defarved.

THE next year, being the 255th of the Hejra, the Turks perceiving every day that the Khalif was resolved to get rid of posed, and them as soon as possible, they were determined to be beforehand with him. For this purpose, they elected Saleh, the son of Wasif, whom they had formerly affaffinated, their general. After this election, they marched in a body to the house of Ahmed Ebn Isrâil, who was then Al Mo'tazz's Visir, and pillaged it. Not content with this, they went afterwards, with their new general, and Mohammed Ebn Boga, whose father had been beheaded by the Khalif's order, at their head, directly to the imperial palace; which they immediately invested, and in an insolent manner demanded their pay. The Khalif, at that time not being in a condition either to satisfy their demands, or to relift their violence, was dragged out of his palace, and at last constrained to abdicate the Khalifat, in the presence of Ebn Abu'l Shawarib, and other proper witnesses, either on the 2d, the 28th, or the last, day of Rajeb, in favour of Mobammed Abu Abd'allab Ebn Al Wathek, who afterwards affumed the name of Al Mohtadi. After this unexpected revolution, Al Mo'tazz was sent under an escorte to Baghdad, where he died of thirst, according to Khondemir, or rather was starved to death with hunger, if we will believe the Arab historians. He reigned about four years and seven months, if we compute from his public inauguration at Sarra Manray; but a year less, if we make his Khallfat to commence immediately after the abdication of Al Mosta'in. His funeral service was performed by his successor Al Mohtadi. His prime mini-sters, or Visirs, were Mohammed Ebn Jaafar, Isa Ebn Farbanah, Abmed Ebn Israil, or, as he is called by Abu Faafar Al Tabari, Abu Mobammed Jaafar Ebn Israil Al Anbari; his generals, Mohammed Ebn Abd allah Ebn Thaher, Soliman Ebn Abd'allah Ebn Thaber, and finally Obeid'allah Ebn Abd'allah Ebn Tbaber; his chief judge Ahmed Ebn Al Hasan Ebn Abu'l Shawarib; and his chamberlains Wasif, Boga, Bacbac, or Bakbak, and Saleb Ebn Wasif, all Turks; the last of which had the principal hand in his deposition, as well as his death, that soon after followed. As to his person, Al Mo'tazz had an elegant head of hair, and so handsome a face, being of a fair complexion, that he has been represented as the most beautiful person in his dominions. Nor was he at the time of his death, if we will believe Eutychius, above twenty-two years of age. With regard to his disposition, he was so attached to pleasures of various kinds, that he intirely neglected the government of his vast empire, and frequently acted beneath the dignity of his fublime station. The patriarch Sanitius, or Sanitius converted feveral unbelievers, who denied the reality of our Saviour's paffion, in this prince's reign; which gave no small pleasure to the pious patriarch of Antioch, according to some of the Christian writers. The same Sanitius likewise, in the lieutenancy of Abmed Ebn Tolûn, was at the expence of making several Subterraneous aqueducts, by means of which the city of Alexandria was plentifully supplied with excellent water. If any credit may be given to Eutychius, the Khalif Al Mo'tazz appointed Bâkbâk, the Turk, to preside over Egypt; who bestowed his daughter in marriage upon Ahmed Ebn Tolûn, and constituted him his deputy in that country. And, in the month of Ramadan, according to the same writer, in the year of the Hejra 254, Abmed entered Egypt as Bâkbâk's deputy only; which runs counter to what has been related by Abu'l-Faraj and Abu Mod. Hist. Vol. II. Dig tized Taafar Q Jaafar Al Tabari. Abulfeda relates, that when the Turkish militia found Al Mo'tazz' not able to produce the money demanded of him, they offered to accept of only 50,000 dinars; but that the Khalif having applied to his mother Kabihah, who was immensely rich, in vain for that small sum, they came to a resolution, in conjunction with the Faraônians, or Egyptians, and the Magrebians, or western Arabs, to depose him. which, continues this author, they dragged him to his chamber-door, beat him, exposed him without the palace to the burning rays of the fun, where for some time he remained in exquisite torture, buffeted him in a barbarous manner, and finally obliged him to abdicate the Khalifat, in the presence of proper witnesses, and particularly of Ebn Abu'l Shawarib, the Kadi of Baghdad. Not content with this cruel treatment. they permitted none of his subjects to bring him any nourishment for three days together, hurried him into a fubterraneous vault, out of which issued a noxious and pestilential vapour, that put a period to his days, and deposited his remains in a tomb, near those of Al Montaser, at Sarra Manray. We must not forget to remark, that Abd'allah Ebn Abd'alrahman Al Darani, the author of the Mojassemian, or Corporeal, traditions, Abu Omran Amru Ebn Bahr Al Jabeth, who left many learned works behind him, and Mohammed Ebn Kerâm Al Sejestâni, whose followers not only admitted a resemblance between God and created beings, but declared God to be corporeal, and from thence received the denomination of Mejassemians, or Corporealists, died the present year x.

EBN SHOHNAH writes, that the Atrak, or Turks, the Father parti-raonah, Faraonians, or Egyptians, and the Magareba, Magrebians, or western Arabs, as the African Moslems were called, affembled in a body before the imperial palace, entered it by force, and 18, and bis the dragged Al Motazz by his feet from the throne. After which, they beat him with clubs, and exposed his body stretched out at length to the folar rays, then extremely hot, in order to force him by fuch barbarous indignities to fign the refignation they had caused to be drawn up for that purpose. The same author relates, that this Khalif's mother's name was Kabihab. and not Fatiha, Fatihah, or Fatihat, as Erpenius reads it in the text of Al Makin; which imports homely, or ugly, and was given her by her husband Al Motawakkel, by way of joke, she having been one of the most beautiful women of the age. This lady amassed vast treasures during her husband's reign, and buried them in the earth after that prince's death. his hands. This writer farther relates, that those treasures confifted of 1,000,000 dinars, a makûk, or bushel, of emeralds, and another of pearls, together with a kilajah of rubies of the colour of fire. Every kilajah contained three Arabic pounds and three quarters, and every makûk three kilajah's; so that the latter amounted to eleven pounds and a quarter Arabic weight. Whenever Saleh Ebn Wasif mentioned this princess, he said, Kabbah Allah Kabihat, i. e. God makes ugly, i. e. curses, this woman, who bears the name of ugly, notwithstanding she is extremely beautiful. For, though she was mistress of such immense treasures, she suffered her son Al Mo'tazz to be deposed and murdered, rather than part with only 50,000 dinars, which small sum would have satisfied the Turkish Soldiery that mutinied for their pay. After Al Mobtadi ascended the Mosem throne, Kabihah quitted Sarra Manray, and retired to Mecca, where she cursed Suleh Ebn Wasif in her turn, and vented her complaints against him in the following terms: Hatak setri, that is, He has torn my vail; which in modest language imports, He has enjoyed me, he has killed my son, he bas driven me from my native country, and has at last left me. in order to follow a common prostitute .

WE are told by some of the Arab writers, that the Greek Remarkemperor Michael was affaffinated in the Khalifat of Al Mo'- able tazz, by his general Basilius, in an island of the Propontis, whilst events in he was performing his devotions; and that, after this prince's this death, the affaffin mounted the imperial throne. The princi-prince's pal reason assigned by those writers for that execrable action is, reign. that Basilius was forced by the emperor to marry a beautiful woman, in order to cover an intrigue that prince was carrying on with her, and keep it from the empress's ears; so that not being permitted to cohabit with her, he was resolved to dispatch the person who had made so egregious a dupe of him. The Arabs settled in Crete, of whom we have already given some account, feem to have made a descent about this time upon Thrace, penetrating far into the country, and committing everywhere dreadful ravages. In the 255th year of the Hejra, Ebn Sofian, the Moslem Emîr in Sicily, was murdered by an Arab foldier, who afterwards made his escape to the Christians; after which, his fon Mohammed Ebn Khafajah was elected Emîr by the Sicilian Mossems in his room. This election was confirmed by Mohammed Ebn Ahmed Al Aglabi, the Khalif of Kairwan, and the Emir so confirmed enjoyed the government of the Moslem conquests in Sicily two whole years. Al Moh- F J PON the deposition of Al Mo'tazz, who was obliged by the Turkish troops to declare himself unequal to the goceeds bim. yernment of the Moslem empire, Mohammed Abu Abd allah A Mohtadi Ebn Al Watbek was saluted Khalif at Sarra Manray, and all the people of that metropolis took the oath of allegiance to him. His mother Korb, or Karb, one of Al Watbek's concubines, is supposed, or rather affirmed, to have been a Christian by some of the Arab historians. Al Mo'tazz himself was the first, tho' this ought to be considered as the effect of compulsion, who acknowledged him Khalif, and gave him the furname of Al Mebtadi Bill'ab. This prince has been represented by the Moslem writers as a great lover of justice, which he distributed daily in person to all his subjects. He prohibited the use of wine, as well as gaming of all kinds, so expressly forbidden by the Koran, and banished from the court all singers, foothfayers, jefters, and buffoons. He also fent away the lions and hounds that had been kept by his predecessors in the imperial palace. In order to ingratiate himself with the people, he suppressed part of the tribute that lay so heavy upon them; inspected the conduct of the judges, as well as the public accounts; and fet apart two days every week, viz. Monday and Thursday, for the hearing and redressing the grievances of that part of his subjects which then appeared before him 2.

AFTER Al Mo'tazz's violent death, his mother Kabihab had account of her life given her, tho' on condition that she discovered her immense treasures, and even deposited them in the hands of the new Khalif Al Mohtadi. The money found therein is said by Abu'l-Faraj to have amounted to 1,300,000 dinars. Her fon Al Mo'tazz, in his great diffress, applied to her for only the sum of 50,000 dinars, in order to appeale the turbulent minds of the Turkish militia; which she refused him, telling him at the same time, that she was in possession of no money at all. This afterwards drew upon her a great number of curses and execrations, one of which has already been taken notice of. This year, Yakûb Ebn Al Leit, the Saffarian, made himself master of the provinces of Kerman and

We must not forget to observe, that Sâbûr Ebn Sahel, the principal physician of the hospital at Jondîsâbûr, a man of vast erudition, who had distinguished himself by his learned writings, and particularly by a book treating of all the compound medicines used in hospitals, and prepared by the apothecaries, departed this life, in the month of Dhu'lhajja, the present year b.

In the beginning of Al Mohtadi's reign, towards the end of The Zenthe 255th year of the Hejra, the Zenjians, or Zinjians, a people jians make of Nubia, of Ethiopia, and of the country of the Cafres, called an irrupat this day by the moderns Zanguebar, according to M. D'Her-tion into belot, having penetrated into Arabia, advanced from thence into the Mosthe neighbourhood of Bafra and Cûfa. Abulfeda, however, lem emfeems to intimate, that these Zenjians were originally seated in pire. the district called Al Sabak, or the sandy tract in the neighbourhood of Bafra; tho', it must be owned, Abu Jaafar Al Taari's description of them not a little countenances what has been advanced by M. D'Herbelot, in relation to the parental country of these barbarians. The chief of this gang of robbers, who, according to some of the Arab historians, were little better than wild beasts, Ali Ebn Mohammed Ebn Abd'alrahmân, one of the descendants of Abd'alkais, gave out falsely. that he was of the family of Ali Ebn Abu Tâleb. This made fuch an impression upon the Shiites in those parts, that they flocked to him in vast numbers; which enabled him to seize upon the cities of Ramla and Basra, and even to pass the Tigris, at the head of a powerful army, which spread terror where-ever it moved. This Ali, who was an aftrologer and a Shiite, as well as an impostor, began first to be taken notice of in the year of the Hejra 249, and at last became so formidable, that the Khalif's forces could not make head against him. He, therefore, reduced most of the fortresses of Irâk. and a confiderable part of Arabia; in the possession of which conquests he maintained himself fourteen years, notwithstanding all the efforts of Al Mehtadi and his successors to dislodge him from thence. After he had dismembered the Khalifat in this manner, he affumed the title of Saheh Al Zenj, the prince of the Zenjians, in order to ingratiate himself with those barbarians, of which the greatest part of his army was composed. We must beg leave to remark here, that Erpenius, calls this people Ribi, or Ribans, in his Latin version of Al Makin; and that this mistake arose from a wrong reading of the punctuation of the Arabic letters, as the forms of the characters of the word Rib, without the diacritical points of the

THE following year, being the 256th of the Hejra, commencing December 9th, 869, and not the preceding year, as we find intimated by M. D'Herbelot, who, in this point perhaps, has followed the Persian historians, Mûsa Ebn Bogâ, general of the forces of the Khalifat, who had been employed in the expedition undertaken against Al Hasan Ebn Yezid, having been apprized of the death of the Kbalif Al Mo'tazz, who had been cut off foon after his abdication, returned from Tabrestån and Ray with his army into Irâk. Soon after his arrival there, being informed that Saleh Ebn Wasif was the new Khalif's Visir, he quitted the camp he had formed in the neighbourhood of Baghdad, and marched directly to Sarra Manray; declaring publickly his intention to take vengeance of those who had been concerned in the late revolt. This declaration was chiefly levelled at Saleh Ebn Wasif, who had been principally instrumental in the death, as well as the deposition, of Al Mo'tazz. Saleh, conscious of his guilt, and not having a fufficient number of troops to oppose Mûsa, hid himself at his approach. But being foon discovered, he was brought before the general, who commanded his head immediately to be ftruck off; and, the day following, it was carried, by Musa's order, through the streets of Sarra Manray; the person carrying it at the same time crying out with a loud voice, This is the head of a traitor, who has imbrued his hands in the blood of his fovereign d.

The Khalîf is de-Rain.

THE murder of Saleh greatly incenfed the Khalif, who thereupon came to a resolution to repress the insolence of the posed, and Turkish troops; which so excited their hatred, that Bânkiâl and Mûsa Ebn Boga, their chiefs, conspired his destruction. This conspiracy, however, was not kept so secret, but that fome news of it transpired; upon which, the Khalif ordered Bânkiâl, who was to have acted the principal part in it, to be put under arrest. This so exasperated the Turks, that they affembled in a tumultuous manner about the imperial palace, and demanded the releasement of their chief. Khalif, far from being intimidated by their riotous behaviour, instead of complying with their demand, ordered Bankial's head to be instantly cut off, and thrown amongst them out of the palace. But this instance of severity was so far from appealing the sedition, that it rendered the Turks more furious and intractable; infomuch that a fierce conflict ensued between them and the Magrebians, who defended the Khalîf, before the palace, in which about 4000 on both fides were flain. The Turks, however, returning to the charge with a body of 10,000 men, under the conduct of Tagarba, Bânkiâl's brother, put the Magrebians, who had been reinforced by a body of Faraônian troops, to flight, and pursued Al Mohtadi himself into the house of Mohammed Ebn Mardâd. Being taken from thence, he was conducted to that of Abmed Ebn Khâkân; where some of the mutineers began to spit in his face, and to beat him, in order to force him to abdicate the Khalifat. But he refusing to do this, they barbaroufly trampled upon his privities till he expired; which happened on the 16th of the month Rajeb, before he had quite completed the first year of his reign. Some authors relate, that Al Mohtadi received two wounds in the last action between the Turkish Magrebian and Faraônian troops; and that he was finally dispatched by one of Fânkiâl's relations, who, after his death, drank a draught of his blood. He was buried at Sarra Manray, and Jaafar Ebn Abd'allah Al Hashemi, his judge, said the funeral service at his interment. He was about thirty-eight, or thirty-nine, years of age at the time of his death. With regard to his person, Al Mohtadi was of a middle stature, somewhat bald, and of a swarthy complexion. He had, however, a handsome face, a portly gate, and a long black beard. As to his disposition, he was abstemious, devout, a lover of justice, of a sweet temper, and exemplary life, and in his manners greatly resembled the Khalif Omar Ebn Abd'aluziz. His Visirs-were Saleh Ebn Wasif and Abu Ayûb Ebn Ahmed; his judges Al Hasan Ebn Abu'l Shawarib and Jaafar Ebn Abd allah Al Hashemi; the captain of his guards Obeid'allah Ebn Abd'allah; and his chamberlains Bânkiâl and Mûsa Ebn Bogâ. The first and last days of his reign were Tuesday, and the inscription of his seal, He who transgresses the rules of justice, or exceeds what is right, goes aftray .

The progress of the rebel

THE same year, that is, the 256th of the Hejra, Ali, or Al Habib, as he is called by Abu Jaafar Al Tabari, prince of the Zenjians, who was now become extremely formidable, Al Habîb made incursions almost to the very gates of Baghdad, doing irreparable damage where-ever he moved. The Khalif, therefore, sent Jalân, one of his generals, with a confiderable army against him. But the Zenjian overthrew him with very great flaughter, made himself master of twenty-four of the Khalif's largest ships in the bay of Bosra, put a vast number of the inhabitants of Obella to the fword, and seized upon Not content with this, he fet fire to it, and foon reduced it to ashes; the houses consisting for the most part of the wood of a certain plane-tree denominated by the Arabs Saj. From thence he marched to Abadan, which likewise furrendered to him. Here he found an immense treasure in money, which enabled him to possess himself of the whole province of Abwaz. In fine, his army being now increased to 80,000 strong, the greatest part of the citizens of Basra abandoned the place; which struck with terror all the inhabitants of the adjacent territories, and even the court of the Khalif itself 8. He also routed several other armies sent against him by the Khalif, reduced Bafra, and put 20,000 of the citizens to the fword, before the conclusion of the campaign. The people of Toledo rebelled about this time against Mohammed Ebn Abd'alrabman, the Kbalif of Spain, and chose one Mohammed Ebn Lûb for their general; but, upon the approach of the Khalif with a powerful army, they thought fit to fubmit to him, and fent hostages for their future good behaviour to Corduba. We must not forget to remark, that Amajur drove Isa Eln Sheikh out of Syria, where he had set up for himself against the Khalif, the preceding year; and that, about the same time, the famous Imam Abu Abd'allah Mohammed Ebn I/mael, surnamed Al Joss, as deducing his origin from the tribe

In the 257th year of the Hejra, Al Hafan Ebn Zeid, one of Ali's descendants, who had possessed himself of Tabrestân, seized likewise upon Jorjan; and Yakûb Ebn Al Leit, the Saffarian, made himself master of Balkb and Câbûl. Before the close of the same year, died Abu'l Abbas, a samous grammarian, known by the name of Al Rayajh. Mohammed Ebn Khafajah, the Emir of Sicily, according to Abulfeda, was murdered by some of his eunuchs, who were afterwards taken and put to death, and succeeded by Ahmed Ehn Yakûb, sent over by Mohammed Ebn Ahmed Al Aglabi, the Khalif of Kairwan, for that purpose, and Malta was conquered by the Sicilian Moslems, the present year h.

troops. Al Mo'tamed, supported by his brother Al Mowaffek, had formed a defign to confine within narrower bounds. at least, if not directly to annihilate, the power of the Turkish foldiery, which had proved fo fatal to several of his predecesfors; they having, for a confiderable time, given law to the Khalifs, and elevated or deposed them as they pleased. But the Zenjians made so rapid a progress this year in Persia, Arabia, and Irak, that he was obliged to suspend the execution of that design, and even to send the Turkish troops to join those commanded by his brother Al Mowaffek, in order to oppose them. The first of the Khalif's generals overthrown by Al Habib was one Mehammed, whose army was worsted in feveral engagements, and at last intirely cut to pieces by the rebels. This year, Al Mo'tamed called his brother Abu Ahmed Ebn Al Motawakkel to the succession, gave him the furname of Al Mowaffek, together with a most sumptuous vest, and appointed him to preside over Diyar Rabia, Mawsel, Al Awasem, and Egypt. He also caused his own son Jaafar, whom he furnamed Al Mofawed, to be publickly declared the heir apparent to the crown, and affigned him the prefecture of the west. After this, he sent Al Mowaffek and Mosteh, with a numerous army, to reduce the rebel Al Habîb; who, in pursuance of their orders, came up with him, and attacked him with very great bravery. But Mofleh being killed with an arrow, Al Mo'tamed's troops were at last obliged to leave the field of battle to the Zenjians, and re-

However, Al Mowaffek soon rallied his forces, that were put into disorder by the death of Mosteb, and drew them up in fuch order, that the enemy durst not renew the attack. Some time after, there happened a very sharp action between the Khalif's forces and the rebels, commanded by Yahya Ebn Mohammed Al Azrâk, who was dangerously wounded and taken prisoner. Several other battles were fought between the contending parties before the conclusion of the campaign, from whence no great advantages accrued to either fide. But at last some contagious distempers carrying off considerable numbers of Al Mowaffek's men, he found himself obliged to agree to a fort of truce, or ceffation of arms, with the enemy, and to retire to Waset, in order to refresh and repose his troops. As for Yahya Ebn Mobammed, who had fallen into his hands before, he had fent him under an escorte to Sarra Manray; where, foon after his arrival, he received two hundred stripes, bad his hands and feet chopt off, and was cut to pieces by a detachment of the Kbalif's guards. The body was afterwards reduced to ashes, and thrown into the Tigris, in the presence of an infinite number of speciators, of all ranks and degrees, who attended the execution 1. 872, the war still continued between the Khalif and Al Habib. Al Mowaffek, upon his arrival at Baghdad, sent Mohammed, the Khalif furnamed Al Mowalled, with a powerful army to act against the Zenjians; but he could not hinder them from ravaging the province of Abwaz, cutting off there about 50,000 of the Khalif's subjects, and dismantling the city of the same name. However, Al Mo'tamed commanded Abd'alrahman Ebn Mofieb to march with a body of troops to Ahwaz, Ishak Ebn Daraj with another to Bosra, and Ibrahim Ebn Sima with a third to Dawrad. But, notwithstanding all the Khalif's efforts, or rather those of his generals, his forces could gain no considerable advantage over Al Habîb, tho' several battles were fought. About this time, Yakûb Ebn Al Leit made himself master of Nisabûr, and threw Mohammed, the Thaberian, who had before enjoyed the fovereignty of the province of Khorafan under this Khalif, with all his family and domestics, into prison. About the same time, died Mohammed Ebn Nigsa Ebn Shaker, one of the mathematicians employed by the Khal f Al Mamun to discover the true ambit, or circumference, of the earth. This year, a body of the Sicilian Moslems seized upon the city of Salerno, but were foon after all cut to pieces there k.

The following year, being the 260th of the Hejra, the And in the Arabs cut to pieces Manjûr, the governor of Hems, and sub-year 260. Rituted Bestimûr in his room. About the same time, Al Hafan Al Askari, the eleventh Shiite Imâm, Al Hasan Ebn Sabab Al Zasarâni, one of Al Shâfei's followers, and Henain Ebn Ishak Al Ebndi, a samous physician, who translated the Elements of Euclid, Ptolemy's Almagest, and several other pieces, out of Greek into Arabic, departed this life. This year the Khalis's generals likewise made several attempts to drive the Zenjians out of the Mossem territories; but without effect. For, Al Habîb maintained himself in his conquests, notwithstanding there happened several vigorous actions between his troops and the Khalîs's forces, in which many brave men sell on both sides.

In the 261st year of the Hejra, beginning Ostober 16th, The mile-874, Mohammed Ebn Wasel, who had killed the Khalif's go- tary opevernor of Fars, and afterwards made himself master of that rations in province, engaged several times the Zenjian forces command- 261. ed by Al Habîb, according to Abu Jaafar Al Tabari; but with what success, we have not been told by that author. The Khalif, having been apprized of the state of affairs on that fide, annexed the government of Fars, Abwaz, Bafra, and Bahrein, to the prefecture he had affigned Mû/a Ebn Bogâ, whom he looked upon as one of the best generals he had. Mûsa, soon after his nomination to that sublime post, dispatched Abd'alrahmân Ebn Mosseh as his deputy to Ahwâz, and joined to him, as his collegue and affiftant, Tisam the Turk. But Mohammed Ebn Wâsel, then at the head of his troops in Abwaz, refusing to obey the orders of Abd'alrahman Ebn Mofleh and Tisam, a fierce conflict ensued; in which the latter were overthrown with very great slaughter, and Abd'alrahmân Ebn Mosseh taken prisoner. After the end of the action, Mobammed Ebn Wâsel advanced to Estakhr, in order to attack Musa Ebn Boga's forces, incamped at a small distance from that place. But Mû/a, having received intelligence of his defign, retired at his approach; and, finding that he could not take possession of his new government, nor fix his deputies in the provinces affigned them, without a vaft effusion of Moslem blood, he recalled them from thence, and made the best of his way to Sarra Manray. After which, Yakûb Ebn Al Leit, who had before dispossessed of the province of Khorasan the family of Thâher, that had for a confiderable time enjoyed the fovereignty of it, made an irruption into Abwaz, defeated Mohammed Ebn Wâsel, and seized upon his palace, in which he found ubi sup. p 166. a fum of money amounting to 40,000,000 dirhems. Seime authors write, that Al Me'tamed declared Jaafar, his fon, the heir apparent to the crown, and called Al Mowaffek, his brother, to the succession after him, the present year. But in this point we chuse to follow Abu Jaafar Al Tabari, who is of a contrary opinion. The dynasty of the Sammanians, in Kherasan, according to Ebn Shohnah and Abulfeda, commenced the present year. It appears from Abulfeda, that Mobammed Ebn Abmed Ebn Mohammed Ebn Ibrahim Ebn Al Aglab, the Khalif of Kairwan, died in the former Jomada, after he had reigned twenty years, five months, and fifteen days. He was succeeded by his brother Ibrahim Ehn Ahmed Ehn Mohammed, who extended the Moslem conquests in Sicily, and gained feveral fignal victories there ".

In order, therefore, to put a stop to the progress of so dangerous an enemy, who had already made himself master of Waset, Al Mo'tamed sent Al Mowaffek with the forces of the empire against him. That general, in pursuance of his orders, advanced first to Baghdad, whither he was attended by the Khalif, and at last came up with Ebn Al Leit at a village named Here, after a bloody engagement, he overthrew him with incredible flaughter, plundered his camp, and purfued him into Khorasan; where meeting with no opposition, he entered Nilabur, and released Mohammed the Thaberian, who had been detained in prison by Yakûb Ebn Al Leit three whole years. As for Ebn Al Leit himself, who was the first prince, or Sultan, of the race or dynasty of the Saffarians, he made his escape with great difficulty after the late defeat; though he and his family maintained themselves several years in the possession of many of the conquests he had made. The war waged by the Khalif against Ebn Al Leit proved a seasonable diversion in favour of Al Habib, who routed all the troops sent by Al Mo'tamed to reduce him to his obedience, and ravaged the district of Wafet, the present year ".

One of the Arab writers mentions several smart engagements between the Zenjians and the Khalef's forces after that tragical event; but does not inform us that any thing decisive happened on either side. Mûsa Ebn Boga, the best of the Turkish officers in Al Mo'tamed's service, dying about this time, the influence his nation had at the Mostem court was intirely lost; infomuch that the Turkish troops now intirely obeyed the Khalif's orders independently on their chiefs P.

exasperated Al Mo'tamed, that he commanded Ahmed to be publickly cursed in all the mosques of Baghdad and Irak; and Abmed, on his part, ordered the same solemn malediction to be thundered out in all the mosques within his jurisdiction against the Khalif. The same year, Yakûb Ebn Al Leit, having fet on foot a powerful army, moved a second time towards Baghdad; but was seized with a violent cholic on his march, of which he died, after eleven years reign, if we will suppose it to have commenced when he first entered Persia in a hostile manner, and was succeeded by his brother Amru Ebn Al Leit. A detachment of Al Habib's troops penetrated into Irâk, and made themselves masters of four of the Khalif's ships, laden with corn, the present campaign. They also advanced to Al Nomânia, laid the greatest part of it in ashes, and carried off with them feveral of the inhabitants prisoners. They likewife possessed themselves of Jarjaraya, where they found many prisoners more, and destroyed all the adjacent territory with fire and sword. About the same time, died Ibrahim Ebn Hani Al Nisabûri, a celebrated Mobammedan faint. The Moskems of Sicily fixed themselves this year in Syracuse, and seized upon all the dependencies of that place. 'Tis worthy obserservation, that there were three powers at this time in the Moslem empire independent on the Khalif, besides the house of Aglab in Africa, and that of Ommiyah in Spain; namely, one in Syria and Egypt, another in Khorasan, and another in Arabia and Irâk 9.

In the 266th year of the Hejra, beginning August 23d, memorable 879, Al Hubib reduced Râmbormoz, burnt the stately mosque there to the ground, put a vast number of the inhabitants to the fword, carried many of them away with him prisoners, and acquired an immense quantity of spoil. In Sicily, Krîsaf the year of was killed this year. Al Hasan Ebn Al Abbas was also sent from Kairwan to that island in quality of Emir; who, foon after his arrival, ravaged the Christian territories in a dreadful manner. Mohammed Ebn Abd'alrahman ordered a good number of ships to be constructed at Corduba, or Cordova, Seville, and other maritime towns, where materials for shipping were to be found. But these being afterwards almost intirely destroyed by tempests and storms, the sailors on board them for the most part drowned, and Abd'alamid, his admiral himself, narrowly escaping with his life, that prince laid aside his design of making a figure by sea .

THE 267th year of the Hejra, commencing August 12th, The mili-880, produced several actions of éclat between the Zenjians tary opeand the Khalif's troops. Al Mowaffek, attended by his fon rations of Abu'l Abbas Al Mo'tadhed Bi'lla, took the field with an army the year confisting of some infantry and a body of ten thousand horse. 267. On the other fide, Al Habib appeared at the head of an army, to oppose him, amounting to an hundred thousand men. But, notwithstanding the inequality of numbers, the Arabs overthrew the Zenjians in several pitched battles, recovered most of the towns they had taken, together with an immense quantity of spoil, and released 5000 Moslem women that had been detained in prison by those barbarians. After these victories, Al Mowaffek took post before the city of Al Mabiy'a, that had been built by Al Habib, and was the place of his residence, burnt all the ships in the harbour, thoroughly pillaged the town, and then intirely difmantled it. Here he likewise found treasures of exceeding great value. After the reduction of Al Mabiy'a, he purfued the flying enemy, defeated several bodies of the Zenjian troops, put to the sword Ebn Al Sa'râb, Ebn Jâm', and others of their chiefs, and advanced to Al Mokhtara, a city that had been strongly fortified by Al Habib. As the Zenjian had collected all his forces into a body, and was posted at no great distance from the town, according to Abu Jaafar Al Tabari, with an army of 300,000 men, and the place was almost impregnable; Al Mowaffek plainly perceived, that it would fustain a very long siege. He therefore built a fortress oppofite to it, in which he erected a mosque, and coined both dirbêms and dinârs. The new city, from its founder, was called by the Arabs Al Mowaffekia, and soon rendered considerable by the fettlement of feveral wealthy merchants in it. By this means, Al Mowaffek thought to starve Al Mokhtara to a surrender, and actually reduced it to very great straits; which occasioned an incredible desertion amongst Al Habib's troops. However, Al Mowaffek having, with his battering engines, made a practicable breach in the walls, took the place by storm, after a great resistance on the part of the besieged, in the latter Jomâda, and gave it up to his foldiers to be plundered till the month of Shaaban. After which, he put to flight Al Habib's numerous forces, and dispersed them in such a manner, that the Zenjian found it impossible to rally them during the remainder of the campaign. Two persons were struck dead by lightning by Mohammed Ebn Abd'alrahmân's fide in a mosque at Corduba, and a general earthquake hap-

In the 269th year of the Hejra, commencing July 21st, bis capital 882, Al Mowaffek attacked Al Habib with unparalleled bravery, and had intirely defeated him, had he not been wounded in the breast by an arrow, which obliged him to retire out of the heat of the action, and to found a retreat. However, as foon as he was cured of his wound, he advanced a third time to Al Mabiy'a, made himself master of that metropolis, threw down the walls that had been raised again by the Zenjian prince, put many of the inhabitants to the fword, and carried a vall number of them away with him into captivity. The same year, Lûlû went over to Al Mowaffek, and engaged upon certain conditions to act against his former master Abmed Ebn Tolin. Soon after which, Al Mowaffek caused Ahmed to be publickly cursed in all the mosques of Baghdad and Irak u.

THE next year, being the 270th of the Hijra, beginning affek gives July 1 1th, 883, Al Mowaffek penetrated again to Al Mabiy'a, AlHabîba possessed himself of that city, demolished AlHabib's palace there, total over- seized upon his family, and sent them to Sarra Manray; tho' that rebel and usurper, who had made such havock in the Moslem empire, himself found means to escape. However, Al Mowaffek pursued him into the province of Abwaz, and intirely defeated the shattered forces that he had rallied there. As for Al Habib himself, he now fell into the hands of the victor, who ordered his head to be cut off, and carried upon the point of a lance through a great part of the region whole repose he had so long disturbed. After which, he sent it by his son Al Mo'tadhed Bi'lla to Baghdad, where it was exposed to public view, and then fixed upon one of the gates of the city. As Al Habîb first appeared in arms against the Khalif the 26th of Ramadân, in the year of the Hejra 255, and was put to death the second of Safar 270, he reigned over the Zenjians, that had rendered themselves so formidable to two Khalifs, about fourteen years and four months. By the last victory, which was complete, Al Mowaffek acquired the glorious title of Al Nasir Lidni'llah, or Al Nasser Ledinillah, that is, the protector of Islam, or Mokammedism; which was given him by the Khalif Al Mo'tamed, his brother; and he continued to govern the Khalifat under that title to the time of his death.

THE same year died Ahmed Ebn Tolun, on the 18th of Ahmed Dhu'lhajja, or, as some will have it, the 18th of Dhu'lkaada, Ebn Toin Egypt. It has been observed by Al Makin, that, when he lûn dies. was at the point of death, he lifted up his hands to heaven, and faid, "O LORD! forgive thy fervant, whose load of guilt is "too great for him to comprehend, and shew thyself merciful " to him at the time of his death." He left behind him 33 sons, one of which, named Khamarawiyah, succeeded him in the dynasty he had founded. He is said to have been a strict observer of justice, and of so charitable a disposition, that he gave away every month in alms 300,000 dinars. He diffributed likewise every month amongst the ecclesiastics of the best repute 1000 dinars, and spent the same sum in his kitchen every day. Some authors write, that, during the time he presided over Egypt, he sent to Bagbdad, to be distributed amongst men of learning and probity, as likewise the poor and the fick, no less than 2,200,000 dinars. He lest in the treasury at his death 10,000,000 dinars; which, considering the money he spent and gave away in his life-time, was a prodigious fum. His fervants and flaves amounted to 7000, his horfes to the same number, his mules and camels to 8000. and his war-horses to 300. All this was his own peculiar property, and bore no relation to the public. The revenue of Egypt in his time, if we will believe Abu Jaafar Al Tabari, did not fall short of 300,000,000 dinars. Notwithstanding his good qualities, he is reported to have been extremely cruel, and guilty of a vast essusion of human blood; having either put to death, or starved in prison, at least 18,000 perfons. Seventeen fons, and as many daughters, not thirtythree fons, as some writers affirm, survived him, according to Abu'l-Faraj. But his troops, not having been apprized of their general's flight, afserwards rallied, and gained a complete victory. Nothing remarkable batpened the following rier.

THE following year, being the 272d of the Hejra, produced no memorable event in the Messen empire. Khamarutwiyah having won the hearts of his subjects by his mild and gentle administration, though he was now but twenty-two years of age, and kept on foot a large body of troops that he could intirely depend upon, Al Mowaffek found it impossible to make any impression upon Egypt the present year. Before the conclusion of it, a person of distinction was sent from the imperial court, to ransom the Syracusans that had been taken prisoners by the African Moslems about fix or seven years be-

DURING the whole course of the 273d year of the Hejra, the Khalif Al Mo'samed gave himself up intirely to indolence and pleasure; so that Al Mowaffek alone held the reins of the Moslem empire. However, he could neither regain Khorafan, nor Egypt. Having annexed several large provinces to his former dominions, and left some of his friends that he could confide in to prefide over them, he returned into Egypt, the principal part of his empire, which now extended from the Euphrates to the borders of Nubia and Ethiopia. But Abd'allab having affembled a numerous army, in order to reduce them to his obedience, they thought fit to lay down their arms; upon which, Abd'allah received them into favour, and pardoned Omar Ebn Al Hasan, who had first excited them to a revolt. The civil diffentions and intestine broils that reigned in Seville, which had occasioned no small effusion of blood, greatly facilitated the submission and reduction of that place. About this time, died Abd almalec Ebn Mohammed Al Rakashi, and Abd'allah Ebn Moslem, a celebrated Mohammedan author. The African Moslems made themselves masters of an imperial fleet, and put 5000 imperialists to the fword, at Melazzo in Sicily; after which, the inhabitants of that town fled to Reggio in Calabria, the present year d.

Omar Ebn Al Hasan rebelled again in Spain; cutting off the heads of several commandants of towns, and committing other outrages in various parts. However, he was at last driven by Abd'allah out of the Moslem territories, and obliged to fly to the Christians for refuge; when, in order to ingratiate himself the more with them, he is faid by Roderic to have been baptized, and made profession of the Christian faith. THE Karmatians, a sect which bore an inveterate malice The Kar-

against the Mohammedans, began first to raise disturbances in matians the empire this year. Their origin is not so well known; but first raise the common tradition is, that a poor fellow, whom some call disturb-Karmata, came from Khûzestân to the villages near Cûfa, and ances in there feigned great fanctity and strictness of life, and that Gop lem emhad injoined him to pray fifty times a day; pretending also to pire. invite people to the obedience of a certain Imâm of the family of Mobammed: and this way of life he continued till he had made a very great party, out of whom he chose twelve, as his apostles, to govern the rest, and to propagate his doctrines. He also assumed the title of prince, and obliged every one of his earlier followers to pay him a dindr. But Al Haidam, the governor of the province, finding men neglected their work, and their husbandry in particular, to say those fifty prayers a day, seized the fellow, and, having put him in prison, swore that he should die; which being overheard by a girl belonging to the governor, the, pitying the man, at night took the key of the dungeon from under her master's head as he slept, and, having let the priloner out, returned the key to the place whence the had it. The next morning the governor found the bird flown; and the accident being publickly known raised great admiration, his adherents giving it out that God had taken him into heaven. Afterwards he appeared in another province, and declared to a great number of people he had got about him, that it was not in the power of any to do him.

hurt; notwithstanding which, his courage failing him, he retired into Syria, and was not heard of any more. During his abode in that country, he is faid to have been entertained by a man called Karmatiah, from whom his name Karmata was derived. Others, however, relate, that the Karmatians wrote very close and in exceeding small characters, contrary to the manner of the Arab Moslems, amongst whom the Cufic character prevailed, who used large letters, and left a considerable space between their lines; and that from this custom they derived the name of Karmatians; Karmath, or Karmat, amongst the Arabs, denoting that manner of writing. Be that, however, as it will, this fect continued and increased, after the founder of it disappeared; pretending that their master had manifested himself to be a true prophet, and had left them a new law, wherein he had changed the ceremonies and form of prayer used by the Masterns, and introduced a new kind of fast; and that he had also allowed them to drink wine, and dispensed with several things commanded by the Korân. They likewise turned the precepts of that book into allegory; teaching that prayer was the fymbol of obedience to their Imâm, and fasting that of silence, or concealing their dogms from strangers. They also believed fornication to be the fin of infidelity; and the guilt thereof to be incurred by those who revealed the mysteries of their religion, or paid not a blind obedience to their chief. They are faid to have produced a book, wherein was written, amongst other things, In the name of the most merciful God. raj Ebn Othman of the town of Nasrana faith, that CHRIST appeared to him in a human form, and faid, "Thou art the invitation: thou art the demonstration: thou art the camel: " thou art the beaft: thou art John the son of Zacharias: thou art the HOLY GHOST." The feet of the Karmatians, according to some writers, first began to appear in the Khaltfat of Harûn Al Rashid, or, as others will have it, in that of Al Mamen; but their leader having then foon disappeared, they kept themselves concealed; neither acknowledging any particular Imam, nor any other chief. Ebn Shohnab relates, that they first excited some commotions in the villages and towns near Cafa, in the 275th year of the Hejra; and that they were headed by a man named Kerla, who often changed his fituation and place of abode, and was so effectually concealed by his followers, that he could never be discovered by any of the Khalif's officers who were fent in quest of him. demir writes, that, in many particulars, this feet agreed with that of Ismael Ebn Jaafar Al Sadek, the sixth Imam; that they did not scruple eating many things forbidden by the Mohammedan law; and that they believed angels to be the friends, directors, and guardians of mankind, and evil demons their

The Karmatians pretend, that CHRIST revealed to the above-mentioned Al Feroj Ebn Othman, that the prayer before fun-rise ought to be performed with two ingeniculations, and that before fun let with two more; and that they ought to fast twice a year, wiz. on the days Mihijan. or Mibrian, and Al Niruz, that is, the 16th day of the Persian month Mibr, and the first day of the year. From the year of the Hejra 278, the Karmatians, under several leaders. gave almost continual disturbance to the Khelifs, and their Mehammedan subjects, for several years; committing great disorders and outrages in Chalden, Arabia, Syria, and Mesent tamia, and at length establishing a considerable principality, the power whereof was in its meridian in the reign of Abu Dbaher, famous for his taking of Mecca, and the indignities by him offered to the temple there, but which declined foon after his time, and came to nothing. He could not forbear saying, in his last illness, that of 100,000 men, whom he commanded, not one was as miserable as himself. After that general's decease, his son Abu'l Abbas Al Mo'taded succeeded him, with the unanimous approbation of all the officers of the army, who likewise acknowleged his right to the crown after Al Mo'temed, by the express command of the Khalif. We must not forget to observe, that Ahmed Ebn Mohammed Al Tâbi, prince or chief of the Karmatians, obliged every one of his subjects, or followers, to pay him yearly, by way of tribute, a dinar s.

Al Mowaffek and his son Al Mo'taded deprived him abfolutely of his authority, leaving him only the bare hame of Khalif; insomuch that when he once asked of his brother 200 dinars, that small sum was resused him. However, the Moslems in general were very well pleased with Al Mowaffek's administration. Al Mo'tamed was a little swarthy, of a good flature, had a comely face, a large head, a long beard, and a forehead a little pitted with the small pox. Both his hair and his beard were greyer than usual in one of his age. He loved gaming and chearful conversation, as well as eating and drinking, to a great degree; whence 'tis no wonder he should have been too indolent to apply himself to the affairs of government. In this Khalif's reign flourished Jaafar Ebn Mobammed Abu Maasbar Al Balkbi, commonly known by the name of Albumasar, Al Moweffek's astrologer, who attended him when he besieged a body of the Zenjian troops in Bafra. This Abu Maashar, when he lived at Baghdad, was an enemy to Abu Yusef Yakab Ebn Ishak Al Kendi, and endeavoured to prejudice the people of that city against him, because he applied himself to the study of philosophy. But Al Kendi having found a person who prevailed upon him to learn arithmetic and geometry, which he left for the fake of astrology, before he had made a very considerable progress in them, he ceased to persecute, or give any farther molestation to, that celebrated scholar. Abu Maasbar, a man of fine parts, and an excellent disposition, arrived at great skill in astrology, tho' a stranger even to the rudiments of that art when he was forty-seven years of age, and wrote several treatises upon it, held in vast repute amongst the Arabs. The Khalif Al Mostian ordered him to be severely whipt, because an event that he had foretold actually came to pais; which not a little chagrined him. He lived to be above 100 years of age, and died at Wafet. He was accused of drunkenness, and generally troubled with an epileptic diforder at the full moon. With regard to Al Kendi, he was of noble extraction, and born at Bafra. His father Ishak had been governor of Cufa in the Khalifats of Al Mohdi and Harûn Al Rashid. This Yakûb Al Kendî was fo fingularly well versed in physic, natural philosophy, arithmetic, dialectic or logic, music, geometry, and aftronomy, and wrote so many famous books in most of those sciences, that he infinitely excelled all the Moslems of his age in the knowlege of those branches of literature, and was the only one of them that merited the honourable title of philosopher. Kosta Ebn Lûka Al Baalbeki, a Christian philosopher, and his cotemporary, rendered himself exceeding famous by travelling over a considerable part of the imperial territories, and purchasing of the Greeks a multitude of books, which he brought with him first into Syria, and asterwards into Irâs, where he was employed in translating some of the most useful of them out of Greek into Arabic. Several pieces written in a compendious, though most excellent, method by this learned author were extant in the days of Abu'l-Faraj. We are also told, that Senbârsh invited him into Armenia, where he kept him till his death, and asterwards erected over him a mausoleum, or stately monument, in order to demonstrate to suture ages the high regard he had for him. In fine, he was looked upon as the greatest scholar of the age, and samous for expressing his vast slow of sentiments in a concise and engaging manner h.

every one of which contained a body extremely well preferved, whose shroud seemed quite new, and emitted a very grateful odour. Amongst these seven bodies there was one that had belonged to a young man, whose visage, and particularly the lips, appeared as fresh as those of a living person who had just drunk a draught of water. Near these tombs a stone was discovered that greatly resembled one of those which are used to sharpen or whet any iron instrument upon. This stone exhibited an inscription drawn up in characters that nobody could decipher; tho the Khalif ordered a large number of men of all nations, sects, and religions, that lived within the limits of the Mossem empire, to be assembled for that purpose.

Al Mo'taded proelaimed Khalîf.

THE same day that Al Mo'tamed died, Abu'l Abbas Ahmed Al Mo'taded Bi'llab Ebn Al Mowaffek, in consequence of his having been called to the fuccession after that prince, was saluted Khaltf. His mother's name was Dardr, or Derar. She had been one of his father Al Mowaffek's concubines; but to what country she originally belonged, we have not been told. A profound tranquillity took place throughout the empire, immediately after his accession; so that there was a vast plenty of provisions and necessaries of all kinds in every province. Some writers pretend, that Al Mo'taded, before his elevation to the Khalifat, saw a person in a dream plunge his hand into the Tigris, and inflantly pull it out again; upon which, that river was immediately dried up, as tho' he held all the water of it in his hand; which when he opened, it returned to its former course. This person then asked him whether he knew him? and, upon his answering him in the negative, discovered himself to be Ali, desiring him at the same time to be kind to his family, after he had ascended the Mostem throne. Al Mitaded, continue these authors, promised him he would, and was afterwards as good as his word. For, the descendants of that celebrated Inem enjoyed a large share of this prince's favours, during the whole course of his reign 1.

Khamara-trainada and Al Mo'saded's son Ali; but the Khalis, having wiyah's probably received a pleasing account of the young lady's daughter charms, demanded her in marriage for himself. To this Khain marmarawiyah not only gave his consent, but testified likewise his riage. approbation of his minister's conduct in transports of joy. About the same time, died Nasr, or Nasser, Al Samâni, in Khorasân, and Abu Isa Ebn Mohammed Ebn Isa Ebn Sawda, a celebrated Imâm, and the author of the great collection of traditions. Abd'allah Ebn Mohammed Ebn Abd'alrahmân governed his subjects with great lenity and justice this year, and the remaining part of his reign, in Spain m.

From Mawfel he marched to Mâredîn, or Mâradîn, a place of some strength belonging to Hamdan, in which he had posted his son with a garison to defend it; who furrendered to the Khalif at discretion, the day after he presented himself before it. Al Mo'taded, having possessed himself of this fortress, ordered every thing valuable in it to be carried out, levelled it with the ground, and then returned with his army to Baghdad. The same year, Khamarawiyah was affassinated by one of his domestics in bed, the 3d of Dhu'lhajja, at Damascus; after which, the army substituted his son Jaish, or Jeish, in his room. As soon as this prince had mounted the throne of Syria and Egypt, the troops demanded his uncle's head; which he thereupon ordered to be cut off, and thrown to them, without delay. In a short time after his accession, he quitted the city of Damascus, where his father had fixed his residence, left a governor there, and returned with all possible expedition into Egypt?

The transactions of the year 283.

THE 283d year of the Hejra proved fatal to Jaifs, or Jeifs; who, together with his mother, was massacred by the soldiery, after he had presided about eight months over Syria and Egypt. After his death, the mutineers demolished his palace in Mesr, and placed his brother Harûn Ebn Khamarawiyah, a child of ten years old, upon the throne. This happened in the month of Rajeb. The Khasif Al Mo'taded, having received advice of Harûn's accession, wrote him a letter, wherein he acquainted him, that he had conferred the prefecture of Egypt upon him, and imposed on him an annual tribute of 1,500,000 dinars; which Harûn promised to pay him out of the public revenues of Egypt. The Sclavi, or Sclavonians, according to Abu'l-Faraj, either this or the following year, made an irruption into Thrace, put a vast number of people to the sword, besieged Constantinople itself, and ravaged all the country about that capital. The Greek emperor not being able to make head against the barbarians with his own troops, continues this author, armed the Moslem slaves, or prisoners, on this occasion, in order to make a vigorous fally upon the besiegers, and drive them from before the town. Which having done, principally by the bravery of those slaves, he again disarmed them, and dispersed them over the provinces of the empire; fearing left, if they remained in a body with their arms, after they had so distinguished themselves, they might meditate some enterprize against him. Soon after this, a cartel was settled between the Christians and the Moslems, who were continually making incursions into each others territories, for an exchange of prisoners: by which means, 2504 Moslems, men, women, and children, recovered their liberty. The same year, that is, the 283d of the Hejra, a phantom, or apparition, frequently, for a confiderable time, presented itself before the Khallf, notwithstanding all the doors of his palace and his apartments were shut, in different manners, postures, and shapes. Sometimes it would appear to him in the habit of a merchant, at others in that of a soldier, and at others in that of a dervise. Its visage also changed its colour often; for fometimes it was white, and incircled with rays of light, at others brown, and at others pale and wan. The fame of this apparition was soon spread over the city of Baghdad, and people reasoned differently upon it. Some took it to be the devil, whom the Divine Justice sent to this prince to torment him. Others believed it to be one of those wanton spirits called by the Arabs Jin, or Genii, which participate both of the nature of spirits and that of men. Others imagined, that it was an angel fent by God to reform this prince, and dispose him to forsake the vicious habits he had contracted. But the most sensible part of his subjects apprehended, that these pranks were plaid by some of his domestics, assisted herein by a person well versed in the occult sciences, in order to carry some design he had formed into execution. Nevertheless, the truth of the fact could never be discovered; which excited the Khalif to use several of his domestics, whom he suspected of having a hand in this affair, ill on that ac-About this time, died at Manbij, or Aleppo, Al Walid Ebn Obeidah, and Ali Ebn Al Abbas, two colebrated Arab poets. Several pbænomena in Egypt.

In the year of the Hejra 284, beginning February 8th, evenderful 897, a wonderful phænomenon, or rather several such phænomena, were seen in Egypt. On Holy Thursday, or Ascenfion-day, which this year fell on the 28th of the former Rais, a high wind arose towards the evening, which blew till midnight; when on a sudden it became so dark, the night having been pretty light before, that not the faintest traces of any visible object could be discerned. This thick darkness was fucceeded by a florm, or tempest, much more violent than the former wind, which threw down a vast number of houses, and did incredible damage. During this florm, a large quantity of a fort of red fand fell upon people's heads in their houses, to their great terror and assonishment, and the whole hemisphere seemed to be covered with pillars of fire. continued till towards the approach of the morning, when the tempest somewhat abated, and the heavens appeared of an exceeding red colour, which they communicated to the earth, mountains, trees, men, and every other object of fight, for the space of two hours; the wind blowing all the time extremely fresh. Then this surprizing redness turned into a yellowish colour, which continued till noon, and was succeeded by a thick black cloud, that remained till the middle of the next day; so that, for a day and an half, the face of the heavens was totally obscured, this cloud, and the aforesaid phænomena, all that time absolutely intercepted the solar rays. After the diffipation of the thick black cloud, the boisterous weather above-mentioned immediately ceased. As the red meteor, or vapour, here mentioned not a little resembles that seen by the writer of this history at Oxford, December 5th, 1737, which the famous Dr. Halley told him he never faw any celestial appearance like, through the whole course of his observations, nor ever met with an account of any fimilar to it in history; we thought our curious readers would not be displeased to find the preceding article, extracted from Eutychius, inserted in this place .

THE same year, some of the Arab astrologers predicted a Other ocgeneral inundation, which should be occasioned by a long currences course of continual rains, and by which Mesopotamia and all this year. the neighbouring countries, except the territory of Baghdad, should be laid under water. But the reverse of this happened. For, by reason of a long uninterrupted drought, the waters of the Tigris, and other rivers, were lower than ever had been known in the memory of man; infomuch that they frequently offered up prayers to heaven for rain, in the public mosques, at Baghalid. About this time, the Khalif, excited thereto by his affection for Ali and his descendants, would have iffued an order to curfe publickly the name of Moawiyah I. of the house of Ommiyah, in all the mosques of the empire, for the folema malediction that prince caused to be pubhished against Ali and his family. But Obeid allah Ebn Solimân, his Visir, dissuaded him from this, by representing to him, that it would make him incur the hatred of a very confiderable part of his fubjects; and, by raifing the credit of the race of Ali, then dispersed all over the empire, would make them lift up their heads, and perhaps enable them to embarrais his affairs. Before the conclusion of this year, the Karmatians, a fect of which we have already given our readers fome account, began to be in motion *.

However, after this repulse, he sat down before Al Absa, a town about two miles north-west of Hajr, and ravaged all the adjacent territory; which enabled him to form again the siege of Hajr, and carry it on with more vigour than before. But, notwithstanding all his efforts, he could not make himself master of that fortress this campaign w.

THE Kbaltf, receiving advice that the Karmatians had over-Infprepares ran a considerable part of Arabia and Irak, pillaging all the country through which they moved, and putting all the Moslems they could meet with to the sword, assembled a considerable army, to stop their farther progress; which he ordered to advance towards the frontiers of those provinces, though none of the troops of which it was composed could enter upon action this campaign. About this time, Al Mo'taded granted Harûn Ebn Khamarawiyah Ebn Ahmed Ebn Tolûn, at his request, the perpetual presecture of Awasem, and Kinnifrin, which he annexed to that of Egypt and Syria, on condition that he paid him an annual tribute of 45,000 dinars. About the fame time, died Abu'l Abbas Mobammed Abd'allab Ebn Zeid, a celebrated grammarian and philologer, who wrote a great number of excellent books. Another battle was fought this year in Sicily, the particulars of which have not been handed down to us by any historian x.

The Karmatian general, however, dismissed Al Abbas Ebn Omar, on condition that he should represent to the Khalif the fatal consequences of continuing the war against the Karmatians, who were inured to all kinds of hardships and fatigues, and would therefore always prove superior to the forces of that prince, to whom they were resolved never to give quarter; as likewise to endeavour to prevail upon him, by all proper motives that he could think of, to defiff from that war. This he accordingly did, and it had such an effect upon the Khalif, that he sent no forces against them the following year. We must not forget to obferve, that Abu'l Abbas landed a confiderable body of Moslem troops from Africa at Mazara, or Mazaria, in Sicily, the 24th of July, the present year y.

Abu Sa'id Al Hamâni, the Karmatian general, took Hajr in Yamâma, having flarved the garison to a surrender, and forced them to feed upon dogs and other unclean animals, either the beginning of this, or towards the conclusion of the preceding year. To which he made answer, Suppose the spirit of God should reside in us, what hurt does this to you? or if the spirit of the devil should have taken up his residence in us, of what advantage is this to you? Mind your own business, and concern yourself not with other men's affairs. "What then." said the Khalif, "do you think of me and my dignity in par-ticular?" The Karmatian boldly replied, Your ancestor Al Abbas was alive at the time of the prophet's death, and yet did he either aspire to the Khalifat, or had he it offered him by any of the COMPANIONS? Was not Abu Becr unanimously elected his successor? After that prince's decease, Omar was called to the succession, not the least mention having been made in his predecessor's will of Al Abbas. Omar nominated six persons, a little before he expired, to elect a new Khalif, without permitting Al Abbas to be one of their number. What title, therefore, can you have to the Khalifat, when your great ancestor Al Abbas bimself was excluded from that high dignity by the COMPANIONS? Al Mo'taded was so incensed at this insolent discourse, that he instantly ordered the executioner, then present, to disjoint all his bones, to cut off his hands and his feet, and finally to strike off his head 2,

But the true disposition of this prince will more clearly appear from the following inftances of his affection for the descendants of Ali, as well as of his justice, feverity, and moderation, which have been recorded by the oriental historians b.

THE provost of Baghdad having one day stopped in the An inhands of a merchant the sum of 30,000 dinars, sent by Mo-flance of hammed Ebn Zeid, prince of Mazanderan, or Tabrestan, of the bis affecrace of Ali, to the chiefs of the descendants of that Imâm, ac-tion for cording to annual custom, residing there; they immediately carthe house ried their complaint to the Khalif. That prince very generously of Ali. gave them the money that had been feized, and, in order to justify this action, which appeared strange to the Sonnites, or orthodox Moslems, who considered the followers of Ali as heretics, he related to them the following dream c.

"I thought," faid he, "that I formerly faw in a dream a es man standing at the end of a bridge that I was to pass, who see seemed at first to have an intention to oppose my passage; but afterwards, all of a fudden, he approached me, and presented to me a spade that he held in his hand ; commanding me at the same time to break with it the ground on which we stood. I obeyed his order, and after I had given some ftrokes with the spade, he told me he was Aii, and that as many of my fons should enjoy the Khalifat as I had given ftrokes upon the ground with the spade. Then he injoined me to be kind to his family, and particularly those members of it that lived under my government. In confequence, therefore, of the promise I made him, as well as in point of justice, I ought to restore the 30,000 dinars to the descendants of that Imâm, to whom they properly be-66 long d."

THE severity of this Khalif on some occasions was exceed- Two ining great, as will appear from the two following examples. frances of

A foldier having once by force picked some bunches of grapes off a certain Moslem's vine, the man immediately carried his complaint to the Kballf; who commanded both the soldier and his captain to appear before him, in order to receive the punishment he should think sit to inslict upon them. Some of the people about him demanding what crime the captain had committed? he answered, "I saw him kill a man unjustly in "my uncle's reign, and then made a vow to punish him for so enormous a crime, if ever the Kballfat should fall into my hands, and he should be found guilty of any other fault "."

An eaftern writer relates, that a merchant having lent one of the principal lords of the Khalif's court a large fum of money, after he had applied for the payment of it feveral times in vain, and given it up for loft, resolved to trouble himfelf no farther about it, but to quit the court, in order to This defign he communicated to a friend, go a voyage. who advised him by all means to have recourse to Sheikh Khaiath, for the recovery of his money. The Sheikh, upon the application of these two gentlemen to him, for his affistance in this affair, went directly to the lord, and no fooner represented to him, with a tone of authority, as he very well knew how to do, the iniquity of his conduct, than he paid the merchant the fum he was indebted to him. The great reputation, or rather authority, of this Sheikh Khaiath was acquired by 2 very fingular action, an account of which has been preserved by one of the oriental historians. A Turk attempting to ravish by force a girl in the city of Baghdad, she found herself obliged to call in all her neighbours to her help. At the cries of this girl, Sheikh Khaiath ran to her relief, and begged the Turk in the most pressing terms not to offer her any violence. But the brute was fo far from paying any regard to his intreaties, that he insulted him, and treated him in a very injurious manner. The Sheikh, not being able to think of any other expedient, to prevent him from accomplishing his wicked delign, mounted the minaret, or steeple, of the great mosque, and from thence called the people together to prayer, though it was then out of the stated times of prayer, in order to excite the Moslems so affembled to succour the poor girl, and deliver her effectually out of the hands of the infolent Turk. The Khalif. having been apprized of the action, but being ignorant of the motive to it, commanded the Sheikh to be brought before him, and feverely reprimanded him for convening the people to prayer at an unlawful hour. But being afterwards informed of the whole affair, he ordered the Turk to be punished according to his demerit, and at the same time commanded the Sheikh, as often as he should see any violence or injustice committed, to publish it in the same manner, that by this means the author of it might meet with the treatment he deserved. Twas this action that gave so great a degree of credit to the Sheikh Khaïath, that there was no person in Baghdad, neither great nor small, who did not pay the highest regard to his admonitions, for fear he should assemble the people as before, make public the crimes he was willing to expose, and bring the authors to condign punishment for them s.

ANOTHER author relates a fact of this Khalif, that our Some other curious readers will not be displeased to find inserted here. Be-remarking defirous of borrowing a confiderable fum of money of able perone of his subjects, who had been represented as in very af-ticulars fluent circumstances to him; the man said, as soon as he was relating to brought into his presence, Take as much of my money as you him. please. "But," replied the Khalif, "what security do you " require for it?" God, returned the man, bas trufted you with the government of his lands and his fervants, of which you have shewn yourself worthy by your excellent administration; and shall I be afraid to trust you with my money? These words fo affected the Khalif, that he is faid to have shed tears, and to have told the man that he would not finger a dirhêm of his money, but that if hereafter he should become indigent, all the public revenues of the empire should be at his service. This was the more remarkable at that time, as he was in great want of money to pay the forces; which, in another reign, might have produced very dismal effects. He also eased the people of the burden of some of their taxes, and remitted the tribute paid by the inhabitants of Mecca and Medina. Besides which, other instances of his preferring the welfare of his subjects to pecuniary considerations, even when he stood in need of money, and his finances were at a pretty low ebb, have been handed down to us by some of the best, oriental writers 2.

WITH regard to this Khalif's lenity and mildness to his His lenity servants, on some occasions, a very remarkable story of him to his fer-j has been preserved by Abu'l-Faraj. Abd'allab Ebn Soliman wants. Lebn Waheb, his Visir, being one day with him, a servant, whilst he endeavoured to drive away the slies with a sly-slap in his hand, struck off the Khalif's cap; which greatly confounded the Visir. But the Khalif, unmoved with the accident, only said, This boy is exceeding careless. This so asso-

nished the Visir, that he could not forbear falling prostrate on the ground, and saying, O emperor of the faithful! is it possible there should be so much lenity in sa great a prince? The Khalif replied, "What other notice ought to be taken of such an accident as this? I knew that if the poor boy had done this designedly, he must have been out of his senses; and certainly where no ill is intended, no action ought to be imputed to any one as a crime h."

Other authors reprefent him as cruel on fome occaficas.

OTHER authors, however, relate, that, at certain intervals, he was cruel, and took great delight in spilling human blood; insomuch that he punished with death the most trisling faults. The same writers also affirm, that whenever any of his domestics incurred his displeasure, he ordered him to be buried alive; which made them all to stand in the greatest awe of him. In sine, from what has been observed of this Khalif it clearly appears, that different authors have represented him in different lights, at least as inconsistent with himself, and acting differently at different times; so that we must consider him on certain occasions as adorned with some of those virtues, the exercise of which appears most amiable in a very great prince, and on others as deformed by their opposite vices i.

His fawourites and Viurs. His principal counsellors, or Vifirs, were Abu'l Sakar Ebn Ismael Ebn Mâlec, Abd'allah Ebn Solimân Ebn Waheb, Abmed Ebn Abu'l Abbâs Ebn Mohammed, Abu Hârim Abd'alhamâd Ebn Abd'alaziz Al Selwi, and Yusef Ebn Yakûb, who successively governed the Moslem empire under the Khalûf. His chamberlain Sâleb, and his freed-man Badar, enjoyed likewise a considerable share of his favour. The inscription of his seal was, Necessity takes away all choice and free will. The first day of his reign was Tuesday, and the last Monday; tho, with regard to the precise duration of it, authors are not persectly agreed k.

Some occurrences in the . Greek cmpire, during his reign. In the first year of the Khalifat of Al Mo'taded, Simeon, or Sim'an, Ebn Zarnak was constituted patriarch of Antioch, and presided over the church there twelve years. In the year of the Hejra 281, or of Christ 894, according to the Christian writers sollowed by Al Makin, the emperor Leo married his sourth wise Zoe, who brought him a son, called Constantine. This marriage being the sourth, which was then held unlawful, gave rise to great disturbances and divisions in the church of Constantinople. For, Nicolaus Myssicus, at that time patriarch, not only declared against the marriage, but excommunicated the emperor; who thereupon, after having earnestly begged, but in vain, to be restored to the communion of the church, confined the patriarch in a monastery, and placed one Euthymius Syncellus in his room. Some of the clergy adhered to Nicolaus, and others to Euthymius; which occasioned a schissm in the church. However, the pope, or bishop of Rome, Michael, or Mikhaiyel, patriarch of Alexandria, Elias, or Eylia, Ebn Mansur, patriarch of Jerusalem, and Simeon, or Sim'an, Ebn Zarnak, patriarch of Antioch, by their legates, or nuncio's, whom they fent to Constantinople for that purpose, if we will believe Eutychius, declared for the legality of that marriage, and were joined herein by a considerable number of the Greek bishops. But, for a farther account of this affair, we must beg leave to refer our curious readers to the Roman, or Constantinopoli-tan, history, to which it more properly belongs 1.

DURING the Khalifat of Al Mo'taded, several searned men Several were not only countenanced, but careffed, at the Moslem court. learned Amongst these may be ranked the three sons of Musa Ebn men encou-Shaker, Mohammed, Ahmed, and Al Hasan, who excelled in raged in various branches of literature. As for Musa Ebn Shaker him- Al Mo'felf, he followed the occupation of a robber, or highway-taded's man, in his earlier years; but he afterwards became reformed. reign. and was one of the greatest favourites of the Khalif Al Mamûn. After his death, that prince committed his three fons, then very young, to the care of Ishak Ebn Ibrahim Al Mosa'bi, who placed them under Yahya Ebn Abi Mansur, in the university of Baghdad. However, their circumstances then were narrow enough, as the penfions fettled by Al Mamûn upon his favourites were but small. Abu Jaafar Mohammed, the eldest of them, made a very considerable progress in geometry and aftronomy; though afterwards, applying himfelf to military affairs, he had a command given him in the army, which he kept till the Turks, becoming masters of every thing, filled it with officers of their own nation. Ahmed, the second of Mûsa's sons, was inferior, in point of learning, to his brother Nohammed; but he had the best mechanical head of any man of the age. Al Hasan, the youngest son, was extremely fond of geometry, and of fuch prodigious parts as could be equalled by none of those of his cotemporaries. For, whatever knowledge he had came to him by dint of genius, and as it were by inspiration, not having been acquired by labour and study. When he had read only the fix first books of the Elements of Euclid, with the affiftance of those, purely by force of genius, the could demonstrate any proposition contained in the books of that celebrated author he had not touched upon; as he scrupled not to tell Al Merûzi, when he reproached him with not having gone farther in Euclid, before the Khalif Al However, that prince, though giving credit to what he advanced in this particular, seems to have blamed him for his want of application. Mohammed Ebn Musa instructed in his house, or school, at Bagbdad, the famous Thabet Ebn Korra, the Sabian, who was born at Harân, or Harrân, in Mesopotamia; and introduced him to the Khalif Al Mo'taded, who confulted him as his aftrologer, honoured him with a greater degree of familiarity than even his Visir himself, and took an inconceivable liking to him. This Thabet Ebn Korra Ebn Merwan composed several excellent treatises upon mathematical, physical, and logical subjects. He likewise wrote some books in Syriac upon the Sabian religion, containing an account of the Sabians method of wrapping up and burying their dead, of their cleanness and uncleanness, of the animals they look upon as proper or improper for facrifices, of their stated times of public worship, and, in fine, of all their rites, precepts, and institutions. But, as we have already obliged our readers with a full and ample account of all those particulars in another place, we shall not expatiate any farther upon them here. Abmed Ebn Mohammed Ebn Merwan Ebn Al Tiyeb Al Sarkbasi likewise flourished in this reign. He was also an eminent Moslem philosopher, and penned several excellent pieces, full of various kinds of erudition, that prevailed both amongst the Arabs and the antients. His knowlege was very extensive, his parts admirable, his language copious and elegant, and his style extremely neat. He had first been preceptor to the Khalif Al Me'taded, and afterwards his most intimate companion and friend; infomuch that he communicated all his fecrets to him, not excepting even those of state, and consulted him upon the most important points. called by some writers Abd'allah Ahmed Ebn Mohammed Ebn Merwan Al Sarakhsi, having been born at Sarkhas, or Sarakhs, a city of the province of Khorasan, which also gave birth to feveral other learned men, and is faid by them to have dedicated one of his moral treatifes, intitled, Adab Al Nefes, to the Khalif Al Mo'taded, his pupil, who was a great encourager of learned men. Another of his compositions, being a comment upon the Isagoge of Porphyry, has been mentioned by those authors, as having the title of Isagogi prefixed to it. This piece of Porphyry has likewise been commented upon, and translated into Arabic, by Athiro'ddin Al Baheri; a fine copy of which performance is preserved in the French king's Dig tized by GOOGIGibrary, library, No 908. We have also an Arabic version of the Isagoge of Porphyry, in verse, written by Ibrahim At Mostaba*sheri*, which bears the title of Taiyah, because the last consonant of every rhime is the letter T. This poem is likewise intitled Mawzen Al Mizan, that is, The weight of the balance. The word Mizan, which in its proper fignification denotes a balance, in a figurative one is taken for logic. Arabs generally divide their systems of logic into ten chapters, one of which comprehends the Isagoge of Porphyry. philosopher Ahmed Ebn Mohammed, named sometimes Abu'l Abbas Al Sarakhsi Al Thabib, of whom we have been speaking, greatly excelled in this art. But this Ahmed's learning was greater than his prudence. For, he once revealed a fecret the Khalif had intrusted him with; which so provoked that prince, that he immediately ordered him to be put to death, in the year of the Hejra 286 m.

SECT. XXXVIII.

A L Mo'TADED was no fooner dead, than Kasem Ebn Ab- Al Mocd'allah Ebn Soliman Ebn Waheb, his Visir, who succeeded tafi suc-Yusef Ebn Yakûb, caused Abu Mohammed Al Moetafi Bi'llab, ceeds Al his son, to be proclaimed Khalîf at Baghdâd. He also wrote to the new Khalif, who was then at Al Rakka, upon the Eu- in the phrates, desiring him to return as soon as possible to his capital, in order to take the government of the empire upon him. As foon as Al Moctafi received advice of his father's death, he obliged all the forces he commanded at Al Rakka to take the oath of allegiance to him, and posted away with the utmost celerity to Baghdad, where he arrived the 8th of the former Jomada, the present year. Upon his arrival, he was inaugurated with the usual formalities, and acknowleged emperor of the faithful by all his subjects there. His mother Bakhtajaknah, called by some writers Khâde', and by others Hîhac, or Hîhaca, was the daughter of AlKasemEbn Abd allah Ebn Solimân Ebn Waheb, the prime minister, or Visir. This we find asferted by Eutychius, though the contrary feems to be intimated by Abu Jaafar Al Tabari; who relates, that this Al Kasem, in Al Mo'taded's life-time, formed a defign to exclude Al MoEtafi from the succession, to which was privy only Badar, or Badir, who had a vast ascendant over that Khalif. Al Kasem, therefore, continues the same author, being afraid that Badar would' discover the whole affair to Al Mottafi, inspired the Khalif with sentiments by no means favourable to him. As Badar then resided in A Jebâl, or the Persian Irâk, at some distance from Baghdad, and consequently was incapable of obviating the ill impressions made on the Khalif's mind by his enemy's infinuations, Al Kasem easily prevailed upon Al Moctafi to fend an army against him. But before this meafure was actually pursued, the Khalif found means to bribe the greatest part of Badar's troops to desert him, by privately distributing very considerable sums of money amongst them; which obliged that commander himself to retire to Waset. Al Moctafi, having been informed of what had happened, moved at the head of his forces to attack him. But, before hostilities commenced, Al Kasem sent Al Harâm, the principal judge, to Badar, to offer him a pardon, provided he would submit to the Khalif, and lay down his arms. being accepted by Badar, upon the terms prescribed, he immediately disbanded his troops, and set out with Al Harâm for Baghdid. Of which Al Kasem having been apprized, he sent a person to take off his head upon the road; which being done. and the head brought to Baghdad, Al Mostafi returned to his capital in peace. This article renders it improbable, if we admit it to be true, that the new Khalif's mother was Al Kasent's daughter; as it cannot well be supposed that the Visir would have entered into any scheme that had the least tendency to forward the exclusion of his grandson Al Mostafi from the Mostem throne n.

The Karmatians make an irruption into Syria.

The same year, the Karmatians, under the command of Yahya Ebn Zakrūna, advanced to Rusafa, and overthrew Shakr, the Deylamite, who was sent against them by the Khalif, in the neighbourhood of that city. Shakr himself was killed in the action, and his sorces utterly dispersed; after which, the rebels burnt the great mosque at Rusafa, and ravaged all the adjacent territory. From thence they marched into Syria, routed Harûn Ebn Khamarawiyah Ebn Ahmed Ebn Tolûn's forces, under the conduct of Ta'j Ebn Hanaf, or Tagaj Ebn Jof Al Fargáni, as he is called by Eutychius, and at last laid siege to Damascus. But Harûn, having sent Bedr Al Yamâni with a reinsorcement into Syria, after the junction of those troops with the army commanded by Ta'j, his sorces attacked Yahya with such bravery, that they intirely deseated him, killed him upon the spot, with a vast number of his men, and forced his camp. This blow, however, did not dishearten the Karmatians; who thereupon elected his brother Al Hosein, then not above twenty-two years of age, their general, in his room. Al Hosein, having been joined by a body of auxiliary troops, penetrated to Hems, and made himself master of that city. From thence he moved towards Damascus, in order to form a fecond time the fiege of that place; but the inhabitants, by paying him a large fum of money, prevailed upon him to lay aside that design. He, therefore, returned to Hems; from whence he advanced to Hamah and Maara, or Maarra, near two days journey from Kinnisrin, seized upon both those cities, and put the greatest part of their inhabitants to the fword. Those of Baalbee he served in the same manner. But Salamiyab, a town in the diffrict of Hems, or, as others will have it, in that of Hamah, being a place of confiderable strength, he was obliged to promise the people of it their lives, and the secure possession of all their effects, before he could persuade them to surrender it to him. Notwithstanding which, he had no sooner entered the town, than he ordered them all, without distinction of sex or age, together with their cattle and domestic animals, in open defiance of the capitulation, to be put to the fword o.

It must be here observed, that this Al Hosein, now at the head And comos of the Karmatians, pretended to be Ahmed, the son of Mo-mit dread-hammed, the son of Ismael, the son of Jaafar, surnamed Al ful deva-Sadik, or the Just, the sixth Imâm; and, in order to render stations this the more credible, he shewed a mole, or wart, on his sace, which, as he affirmed, resembled that of his sather Mo-hammed in the same place. Hence he had given him, by way of derision or ridicule, the surname of Sabeb Al Samah, and the general that commanded under him that of Sabeb Al Khal; the words Samab and Khal in Arabic denoting the same thing. About two years before this irruption of the Karmatians into Syria, Ali Ebn Abd'alaziz Al Bagawi died at Mecca. After the surrender of Salamiyah, Al Hosein destroyed a great number of towns and villages in Syria, killed many of the Khalif's subjects there, carried others of them into captivity, and, in fine, laid the most considerable part of that fine country itself into a great consternation. The Arab fleet in this expedition was commanded by Leo Tripolites, a renegado, who made himself master of Thessalonica, cutting to pieces the greatest part of the garison, and taking Chatzilacius, the imperial governor, prisoner. However, the place was afterwards redeemed with a large fum by Simeon, one of the emperor's fecretaries, who was on that account raised to the rank of patrician. Lee then failed to Crete, and distributed part of the plunder he had met with at Lemnos, which he abandoned foon after it fell into his hands, Thessalonica, and on the coasts of Asia, amongst the Moslems there. After which, he returned home, without having fuftained any confiderable lofs. The emperor, not being able to make head against the Moslems by fea, fent Andronicus Ducas, and Euftathius Argyrus, into the East, in order to attack them by land; which they did with great fuccess, having gained several victories over them. This we learn from the Greek writers only, not the least mention being made of fuch an eastern expedition by any of the Arab hiftorians 9.

The Khanot able to reduce the Karmatians.

THE following year, being the 290th of the Hejra, comlif's forces mencing December 5th, 902, the Khalif Al MoElafi fent Al Az, one of his commanders, with a body of 10,000 men, to attack the Karmatians. As foon as that general came up with the rebels, his men immediately threw off their cloaths, and charged them with great fury. But the Karmatians, animated by Al Motawek, who commanded them, routed the Kbalif's forces, and cut the most considerable part of them in pieces; Al A'z himself, attended by the shattered remains of his army, with great difficulty, making his escape to Aleppo, whither he was closely pursued by Al Motawek, who laid siege to the town. But the inhabitants, supported by Al A'z's troops, repulsed him in all his attacks, and at last forced him to abandon the fiege. The Khalif, receiving advice of what had happened, retired to Al Rakka, and fent several other bodies of troops afterwards against the Karmatians, but without effect. This enabled Al Hosein to ravage the provinces through which he moved without controul r.

THE next year, being the 291st of the Hejra, beginning The Kha-November 24th, 903, the Kbalif, having been informed that lif's troops Al Hosein had pillaged several parts of Syria, and put the rest overunder contribution, took the field with an army of 100,000 throw the men, in order to reduce him. He advanced first to Al Rakka, Karmaupon the Euphrates, and from thence detached Mohammed tians. Eln Solimân, with a large body of troops, to go in quest of the rebels, who retired at his approach; but at last he came up with them, and attacked them with such bravery, that he intirely defeated them, without having sustained any considerable loss. A great number of the rebels perished in the action, and Hosein himself, together with the general who acted under him, and 360 of his men, fell into the hands of one of the Khalif's officers, who conducted them under an escorte, as prisoners, to Bagbdad. It appears from Abulfeda, who in this particular has followed Sharif Al Abed, an author that lived before him, that the battle was fought at a place called After this victory, which was complete, and gained in the 291st year of the Hejra, if we will believe Abu Jaafar Al Tabari, and not in the 200th, as is suggested by M. D'Herbelot, the Khalif entered triumphantly his capital, and ordered the hands and feet of all the Karmatian prisoners, not excepting those of Al Hosein himself, to be first cut off, and afterwards their heads. Our readers will not be surprized, that we should prefer the authority of Abu Jaafar Al Tabari, stiled by Mr. Ockley the Livy of the Arabians, in the point before us, to that of any other writer followed by M. The same author writes, that, in the second year of the Khalifat of Al MoEtafi, the Nile did not rise above thirteen cubits, notwithstanding the prayers of the Christians, Jews, and Mohammedans, to implore from heaven a farther increase of the waters of that river. About this time, one Eylia, or Elias, was conflituted patriarch of Antioch, and remained in that see twenty-eight years. Besides which, nothing material, as far as can be collected from the Arab writers, happened in the Moslem empire, the present year w.

tained by Harûn Ebn Khamarawiyah Ebn Ahmed Ebn Yolûn in the Karmatian war, two or three years before, wherein all his best commanders were cut off, and the flower of metorces perished. He, therefore, sent Mehammed Ebn Soliman with a powerful army to make himself master both of Syria and Egypt; who first attacked and defeated a large body of the Karmatian troops near Hems, and took 700 of them prisoners. Soon after which, one of his parties came up with Al Najem, the general that commanded them, who had made his escape out of the battle, at a village called Al Dalta, seized him, and brought him to Mohammed Ebn Soliman, who fent him, together with the 700 prisoners, under a strong escorte, to the Khalif, then at Al Rakka. Upon their arrival, that prince ordered them all to be conducted to Baghdad; where Al Najem was first tortured, and afterwards beheaded, and the others put to death, without mercy. The bodies of Al Najem and the other principal Karmatian captives were, after these executions, hung upon gibbets erected for that purpose without the gates of the city. From Hems, which after this victory immediately furrendered to him, Mohammed Ebn Soliman marched to Damascus; the gates of which city Badr Al Jamâni, Harûn's commandant there, opened to him at his approach. After the surrender of Damascus, Mohammed led his army through Palestine, in order to reach with all possible expedition the borders of Egypt. Harûn, receiving advice of Mohammed's march, advanced with his forces to the frontiers, to dispute the passage into his kingdom with him. By the advice of his generals, he took post in a place called Al Abbasia, in that part of Egypt known by the name of Al Huf, where he waited for Mohammed Ebn Soliman. In the mean time, Daminnus, or Damian, a Greek, the Khalif's admiral, appeared with that prince's fleet off the coasts of Egypt, and lande 1 a body of troops, that routed a large detachment of Harûn Ebn Khamarawiyah's forces at Tanûhah. Shaiban Ebn Ahmed Ebn Tolûn, imagining that a favourable opportunity now offered of fetting up for himself, assaffinated his nephew Harûn Ebn Khamarawiyah on Sunday the 18th of the month Safar, and for some days was confidered as the fovereign of Egypt. But the officers of the army having an utter aversion to the assassin, wrote a letter to Mohammed Ebn Soliman, pressing him to hasten his march, and affuring him that they were ready to fubmit to the Khalif, provided that prince would take them under his protection. Mohammed, having granted their request, and fent them fuch an answer as satisfied them in every particular, entered Egypt the 28th of Safar, without opposition. After which, he advanced with his army drawn up in order of battle to Al Riyab, at a small distance from Mesr, where he was met by Shaihan himself, and several of his brothers, who submitted to the Khalif; upon which, an unlimited pardon and amnesty were granted them by Mohammed, in his master's name, both for their lives and effects. However, that general ordered all the officers and fecretaries that had been in the fervice of the family of Tolan to leave Egypt, and retire with their effects, the polletion of which was fecured to them, to Baghdad. As for Mohammed himself, he exacted of those to whom he had granted the Khalif's protection, and others, the fum of 1,000,000 dinars, remained fix months at the head of the administration in Egypt, and then, after he had substituted in his room Isa Al Nusheri, to govern the province, went to Irâk. Here he also collected another sum, drawn out of various provinces, amounting to 1,000,000 dinars, for the use of the Kbalif. But that prince having been informed, that Mobanamed had imbezzled a confiderable part of the public revenues of Egypt, and amassed to himself vast sums of money there, put him under arrest, and even loaded him with irons, in order to oblige him to refund what he had purloined in that opulent country. After Mohammed's arrival in Irak, Mohammed Ebn Ali Al Khalti, one of Haran's commanders in Syria, who had remained for some time with Mohammed Ebn Solimân there, revolted against the Khalîf, and posted himself with a body of troops he had affembled at Al Ramla, threatening to make an irruption into Egypt. The news of Al Khâlîj's design reaching the ears of Isa Al Nasheri, he and Al Hosein Ebn Ahmed Al Maderani put themselves at the head of the forces in Egypt, and advanced towards the frontiers, in order to meet him, and give him battle; but receiving advice of his approach, and being informed that his army was much more numerous than had before been given out, they retired with great precipitation to Al Fostát. Not thinking themselves safe there, they sled, after a short stay, to Al fiza; burning two bridges in their flight, to prevent Al Khalij from coming up with them. In fine, they were struck with such terror, that they never continued long in one place, but moved about the country as if they had been purfued by an enemy of superior strength. This threw the inhabitants of Al Fostat, now intirely abandoned, and left without a governor, as well as those of the adjacent district, into such a consternation, that Al Khalij seized upon Mefr, which he entered on Thursday the 16th of Dhu'lkaada, the present year, without opposition, and resided there eight months. After the expiration of that hort term, he was driven out of Egypt by the Khalif's troops, as will more clearly appear from our enumeration of the principal transactions of the following year x.

Upon their arrival there. Al Mo' Etafi ordered them to be loaded with irons, and thrown into prison. He also recalled Fâtec, after he had made a triumphant entry into Al Fostat, and appointed Isa Ebn Mohammed Al Nusberi to preside over the province of Egypt y.

THE same year, the Karmatians, under the command of The Kar-Zakrûna Ebn Mabrûna, seized upon Adbrast and Basra, pil-matians laged those two cities, and put all the inhabitants to the sword. and the After which, they advanced to Damaseus, slew Saleh Ebn Greeks Fadl, the governor's deputy there, and plundered the adja-invade the cent diffrict. Notwithstanding which, Zakrûna marched to Tiberias, called by the Arabs Tabariyah, where he was met by Yusef Ebn Ibrahim, with a body of the Khalif's forces, who gave him battle, intirely defeated him, and purfued him into the defart as far as Al Sawan. Here, however Zakrūna waited for Yusef, overthrew him in his turn, with very great flaughter, and made himself master of his camp. The place where this battle was fought is called by some authors Sabian, and said to be in the neighbourhood of Kadefin, a city of the Babylonian Irak, about fifteen paralangs off Cafu. Be that as it will, so unexpected a blow as this could not but greatly embarrass the Khalif's affairs. About this time, died Ahmed Ebn Yahya Ebn Ishak, the Rawandian, who wrote a great number of impious books, according to Shahabo'ddin, at Rahabah. We must not forget to observe, that the Greeks invaded the Moslem territories, took the city of Cyrrhus, or

The Karmatians plunder a caravan going to Mecca, and are routed by the Khalifs troops.

THE following year, being the 294th of the Hejra, the Karmatians, who still remained in the defart, fell upon a caravan going to Mecca, plundered it, and put about 20,000 pilgrims to the sword. This so inraged the Khalif, that he immediately fent Wastf, one of his generals, with a confiderable body of his troops, to take vengeance of them for fo daring an affront. Wastf, in pursuance of his orders, soon came up with them, and attacked them, loaded and incommoded with the spoils they had taken, so opportunely, that, after an obstinate resistance, he put them to the rout. krûna, their chief, was taken prisoner in the action, and died of a contusion he had received, that hurt his brain, five days . after; notwithstanding which, Wasif sent his body, attended by his wife, domestics, and a great number of Karmatian prisoners, to Baghdad. Upon their arrival there, the body, preceded by Zakrana's wife, was carried in triumph through the principal ffreets of the city, and all the prisoners put to a cruel death. This year, Ismael Ebn Ahmed Al Samani, the Khalif of the Transoxana and Khorasan, died at Samarkand. The last defeat so humbled the Karmatians, that they did not attempt to disturb the repose of the empire for several years .

The Khalîf Al Moctafi dies at Baghdâd.

In the 295th year of the Hejra, beginning October 12th. 907, the Khalif Al Moetafi departed this life at Baghdad. Some authors relate, that he died the 13th of Dhu'lkaada, and others the 13th of Dhu'lhajja, after he had reigned either fix years, fix months, and twenty days, or fix years, nine months, and two days. With regard to his age, the Arab writers likewife differ; some of them making him a little above thirty-one, and others thirty-three, years old at the time of his death. He was short of stature, had a handsome face, large eyes, and a long beard. He was likewise religious, munificent, and had a natural aversion to the effusion of human blood; though he found it absolutely necessary, on some occasions, to punish rebellion and other capital crimes in a proper manner. behind him immense riches, and a numerous army; tho' he could not re-annex to the empire all the provinces that had been lost by some of his predecessors. He bore an uncommon affection for the family of Ali Ebn Abu Tâleb, as his father had done before him. His principal favourites were Al Abbas

The inscription of his seal was ALI the son of AHMED puts his trust in God. The famous physician Yusef, surnamed Al Saher, that is, the watchful, or the vigilant, and Al Kas, that is, the elder, or the antient, flourished in this Khalif's reign. Some authors relate, that he feldom flept above four hours, and fpent all the rost of the night in study; from whence he received the appellation of Al Saher. Others say, that he was deprived of his natural rest by a cancer, and derived from thence the first of his furnames; and, in confirmation of this fentiment, it clearly appears from some of his works, that he was troubled with such a disorder. About nine months before Al Moctasi's death, Ismael Ebn Ahmed Al Sammâni, the sovereign of Mawara'lnabr and Khorasan, departed this life; as did Mohammed Ebn Nafr Al Merûzi, a celebrated author, the preceding year, at Samarkand. We must not forget to observe, that, according to the eastern historians, Al Mondar Ebn Mohammed Ebn Abd'alrahmân, of the house of Ommiyah, notwithstanding what has been advanced to the contrary by Roderic of Toledo, died, the 16th of the month Safar this year, in Spain b.

THE next year, being the 206th of the Heira, commencdi Ebn Al ing September 30, 908, Al Abbas Ebn Al Hosein, Al Moktader's Visir, and Fâtec, were cut to pieces by the soldiery, commanded by Al Hosein Ebn Hamdan, who aftembled in a tumultuous manner, the twentieth of the former Rabi, and, not content with that outrage, afterwards deposed the Khalif himself, whom they despised on account of his tender age. The Moslem throne being by this means become vacant, they placed thereon Abd'allah Ebn Al Motazz, furnamed by them Al Mortadi Bi'llah, who appointed Mohammed Ebn Dawe hls Vifir. But Al Mortadi being immediately deserted by many of those who assisted him in his elevation to the Khalifat, Al Moktader's forces proved superior to those of the new Khalif, and intirely dispersed them. However, Al Mortadi made his escape into the desart, after he had reigned about twenty-four hours, where he lay a short time concealed. But being foon taken, he was instantly brought to Al Moktader; who ordered him to be strangled, together with Mohammed Ebn Dawd Ebn Al Harab, his Vifir, and Sawdar Ebn Al Hasas, who had concealed him. After these executions, Al Mortadi's body was carried out of the imperial palace, and interred in a fpot of ground opposite to his own house, the 2d of the latter Rabi; Al Moktader's adherents giving out every-where, that he died a natural death. Al Mortadi, at the time of his tragical exit, is faid to have been about 40 or 50 years of age. During this state of confusion, the mob committed great disorders at Baghdad; but the ringleaders were foon after seized, and brought to condign punishment, and all commotions appealed, both there and in every other part of the empire. As for Al Hosein Ebn Hamdan, though he had been the chief author of the late revolt, and the principal fomenter of all the diffurbances confequent thereupon, the Khalif, at his brother lbrahim's intercession, did not only pardon him, but likewise made him a present of a sumptuous vest, and conferred upon him likewise the government of Komm and Kashan. in every part of the diffrict of that metropolis; which before had never been known in the memory of man. This was followed by a most severe frost; during which the cold was so intense, that it destroyed most of the palm-trees and vegetables in the territory of Baghdad. Nay, not only water, vinegar, and all other liquors, but likewise eggs of every kind, were frozen up by it, and rendered unfit for use. It appears from Eutychius, that Abu Abd'allah Al Mohtaseb Bi'llah deseated the Khallf of Kairwan's forces, and drove the family of Al Aglab from thence, the present year; upon which, AbuNasr, or Nasser, Ziyadat' allah Ebn Abd'allah Ebn İbrahim Ebn Ahmed Ebn Mohammed Ebn Ibrahim Ebn Al Aglab, the head of that family, fled into Egypt, where he arrived in the month of Ramadan. and from thence retired to Al Ramla, in which city he spent the remainder of his days. Abu Abd allah Al Mohtaseb, having thus, by the expulsion of the Aglabites, made himself master of Kairwan, placed Abu Mohammed Obeid'allab, one of Ab's descendants, upon the throne there, and obliged all the subjects of that Khalifat to take an oath of fidelity to This revolution in Africa occasioned an insurrection of the Sicilian Moslems, under the conduct of Abu'l Fawares, against Ebn Ziyaj, whom they forced to abandon Sicily, the first of April, 909, and to make the best of his way to Africa. It must be remembered here, that the unfortunate prince Al Mortadi Ebn Al Mo'tuzz was esteemed by his cotemporaries for his wife fayings, his even temper and tranquillity of mind, his love of divine knowledge, and his fine poetical compositions; and that some of his verses have been preserved by Abu Janfar Al Tahari 1.

This year, being the seventh of Al Maktader's reign, Abuna Gabriel was constituted patriarch of Alexandria, according to some Christian writers followed by Al Makin, and fat in that see eleven years. These authors likewife relate, that $Ko/m\hat{a}$, or Co/mas, was made patriarch of the Jacobites there about the same time, and presided over those of that communion twelve years. About this time, died Al Kâdi Abu Abd allah Mohammed Ebn Ahmed Al Mocri Al Thakîfi; and Mohammed Ebn Yahya Ebn Nabada, the author of the Chronicon of Esfahan. Amran, the Moslem prince of Al Khams, was murdered at Palermo, January 27th, and Korbab appointed Emîr, May 18th, the present year i.

Soon after, Munes deprived Takin of the government of Egypt; and Daca Al Awar was fent from Baghdad to succeed him. Korhab, or as he is sometimes called Ebn Korhab, fitted out a fleet that destroyed a squadron of ships fent by Al Mobdi to the coast of Sicily, under the conduct of Abu Khazîr, his admiral, who was-killed in the action, ac-

A rebellion extinguifhed in Mesopotamia.

In the 303d year of the Hejra, beginning July 17th, 915, Hosein Ebn Hamdan rebelled against the Khalif in Mesopotamia, defeated an army fent against him, under the command of Al Ratek the Visir, took all their baggage, and even threatened the imperial city of Baghdad itself. But he was at last overthrown by Munas, or Munes, the eunuch, the best general Al Moktader had; who took him and his fon Abd alwahab prisoners, and conducted them under an escorte, upon a camel, with oblong caps, or turbants, upon their heads, and vests of red hair-cloth on their bodies, through Al Mawsel, to Baghdad; where, immediately after their arrival, they were thrown into prison. This year, as it should seem, the Moslems made an irruption into the imperial territories, under the conduct of Damian, Emir of Tyre, and attacked a fortress called Strobelon; which they would undoubtedly have taken, had not Damian been surprized by death whilst he was carrying on the siege. According to Abulfeda, the Greeks likewise penetrated almost as far as the borders of Mesopotamia, and afterwards retired into their own dominions, with many prifoners, and a vast quantity of spoil, the present year. after which, Abu Ali Mohammed Ebn Abd'alwahab, the Motazalite, and Abu Abd'alrahman Ahmed Ebn Ali Shoaib Al Naifawi, one of the authors of the book of traditions, departed this life; and the latter of them, who died at Mecca, was buried between the mounts Al Safa and Al Merwa. However, the empress Zoe, who had taken upon her the administration, in order to employ the whole strength of the empire against the Bulgarians, sent Joannes Radenus and Michael Toxaras, as her embassadors, to the Khalif's court, to conclude a peace with that prince. These probably were the embassadors said by some of the Arab historians to have arrived from Constantinople at Boghdad, in the 304th, and by others in the 305th, year of the Hejra, and to have been received by the Khalif Al Moktader with the utmost magnificence. The terms of the pacification being settled, and the treaty figned, the imperial ministers, who had been treated with uncommon marks of distinction at the Moslem court, returned home. About the same time, Melib, the Armenian, invaded the Mossem territories, advanced as far as Mara'sh, plundered all the neighbouring district, and carried off with him a vast number of prisoners. Ebn Korhab, the Emir of the Moslem conquests in Sicily, lost a considerable fleet, that he had fitted out against the Christians, this year 1.

THE next year, being the 304th of the Hejra, the Khalif The Kharemoved Ali Ebn Mohammed Ebn Al Hosein Ebn Al Farat lif apfrom the office of Visir, sent him a second time to prison, points after he had filled the post of prime minister about a year, and Ahmed appointed Hamed Ebn Al Abbas to succeed him. It must be Ebn Al remembered here, that Ali had been dismissed from the afore- Abbas faid employment in the 299th year of the Hejra, and succeeded by Abu Ali Mohammed Ebn Obeid allah Ebn Yahya Ebn Kbâkân, who incurred Al Moktader's displeasure in 301. Upon which, Ali Ebn Al Jarah was advanced to the dignity of Visir, and deprived of his sublime office by the Khalif in 303. After which, Ali Ebn Mohammed Ebn Al Hosein Ebn Al Farat held a second time the reins of the empire about a year. The Sicilian Moslems deposed Ebn Korhab in the month of July, and fent him back to Africa, where he and his fon afterwards died. Abu Sa'id Al Daif arrived likewise in Sicily, with a large body of troops from Africa, in order to bring the Sicilians back to a sense of their duty, the 15th of August, the present year. About the same time, died Yusef Ebn Al Hosein Ebn Al Razi, and Al Hosein, one of Ali's descendants. who had expelled the Sammanians out of Tabrestan, in the the year of the Hejra 301 m.

mencing June 24th, 917, the Greek emperor fent an em-baffy from basily to the Moslem court, in order to settle with the Khalif's the Greek ministers a truce, or cessation of arms, and a ransom of pri emperor foners. The two embassadors had first an audience of the arrives at Vifir, and afterwards of the Khalif. The first of these treated the Mosthem with great marks of distinction, being most richly lem court. dreffed; and the latter received them fitting on his throne, and furrounded by his guards, with the utmost pomp and magnificence. He also agreed to the emperor's demands, and fent Munes, one of his most experienced generals, to conduct the cartel for the redemption of prisoners on the part of the Moslems, and gave him 120,000 dinars to redeem the Khalif's fubjects that had been carried into captivity by the Greeks. Ebn Shobnah writes, that the imperial embassadors arrived at Baghdâd the preceding year; that the Khalîf's palace was adorned on this occasion with the most valuable furniture belonging to it, and all forts of arms disposed in a proper manner; that his guards were ranged in order of battle, to the number of

About the same time, Abu'l Htjd, with his brethren and domestics, was delivered out of prison, where, by Al Moktader's order, he had been confined. The Sicilian Moslems discovering no inclination to fubmit to Abu Sa'id Al Daif, he entered the port of Palermo with his fleet, landed a body of troops there, and laid flege to the town. The Sicilians, however, having made an alliance with Ebn Ali Wawa Al Saari, and been reinforced by him, defended the city with great bravery till the 12th of March, tho' they laboured under such a scarcity of provisions, that an ounce of falt was fold for two taries, or tarens. The Khalif of Kair-wan's forces furprize Reggio.

Nothing material happened in the Arab empire during the course of the 306th year of the Hejra; at least nothing material has been mentioned as then happening there, by the best Mossem historians. This year, died the celebrated Imâm, Abu'l Abbâs Ahmed Ebn Soraib, a follower of Al Shâfeï, and Al Kâdi Mohammed Ebn Hayyan Al Dhobbi, commonly called Al Waki, a samous Mossem historian. The Khalif of Kairwân's forces, and his steet, returned home, in the month of September, after they had made one Sâlem Emîr, or viceroy, of the Mossem conquests in Sicily. Some of that Khalif's ships of war, with a body of land-forces on board, also surprized the city of Reggio in Calabria, towards the conclusion of the present year o.

bridge Chronicon, the Soltan of Africa, invaded Egypt with an army of 100,000 men. The Magrebian forces at first met with extraordinary success, and over-ran a very considerable part of that fine country. They made themselves masters of Alexandria, Al Fayûm, Al Baknasa, and the isle of Al Ashmaryin, and even penetrated into Al Jizah, where the Khalif's army, under the command of Munes, had posted itself, in order to oppose them. In the mean time, Al Moktader, having received advice, that the enemy had a firong squadron on the coast of Egypt, off Rashid, or Rosetta, consisting of 100 thips, font a powerful fleet, under the conduct of Thamal, his admiral, to attack them. Thanal, in pursuance of his orders. at last came up with the enemy, and fell upon them with such fury, that he either took, funk, or burnt, almost the whole Magrebian fleet; though his naval force did not confift of above 50 Thips. The Sicilian and African prisoners taken by Thamal in this action were spared; but the others, amounting to about 500 men, were all put to the fword. After the destruction of this Seet, Abu'l Kasem retired from Alexandria to Al Fayum, and left in the former of those places only a garison of 300 men 1 of which Thamal having been apprized, he in a few days appeared with his fleet before the town, and carried off the remainder of the citizens to an island in the Nile, called the island of Abukair. This he did, in order to prevent Abu'l Kâsem from meeting with any entertainment at Alexandria, in case he should think fit to return thither from Al Fayum. It appears from Eutychius, that above 200,000 of the miserable inhabitants of that city had perished fince the beginning of the campaign. About this time, a period was put to the power of the Edrifites, in the western part of Africa. A truce, or cessation of arms, was concluded between Salem, the Emir of Sicily, and the people of Taormina, the Tauromenium of the antients, called by the Arabs Tabermin, a little before the end of this year P.

THE 308th year of the Hejra was rendered famous by the The Maintire defeat of the Magrebian army in Egypt. Munes, Al grebians Moktader's general, having come to a resolution to give the defeated enemy battle, quitted his fortified camp in Al Jizab, advanced by the into the neighbourhood of Al Fayûm, and attacked Abu'l Ka- Khalîf's sem's forces with such bravery, that he overthrew them with tool's very great slaughter. He also made himself master of all their baggage, as well as of all the plunder they had acquired. This blow intirely ruined Abu'l Kasem's affairs in Egypt, and obliged him to fly, with the shattered remains of his army, to Kairwân, in the month of Dhu'lhajja, the present year. As for Munes, he remained about two months in the neighbourhood of Al Fayûm, after the fignal victory he had obtained, and then returned to Baghdâd. But, before his departure, he appointed Helâl Ebn Badar to preside over the province of Egypt, that he had wrested out of the enemy's hands 9.

Al Hallâj executed at Baghdâd.

THE next year, being the 309th of the Hejra, beginning May 12th, 921, Abu Moghith Al Hosein Ebn Mansur Al Hallaj was put to death at Baghdad. This extraordinary person has been considered in different lights by the Moslems; some of them having looked upon him as a fort of divinity, and others as a juggler and impostor. We are told, that, in summer, he could make winter-fruits appear before any number of spectators, and summer-fruits in winter; that, by stretching out his hands in the air, he could make dirhêms fall upon the ground, with this inscription upon them, ALLAH ahed, There it but one God; which he called the dirhems of omnipotence; that he knew every particular transaction in private families; and that he could even penetrate into the most secret recesses of mens minds. A persuasion of such surprising abilities as these could not but gain him a vast number of disciples and followers amongst the vulgar; nor could even several doctors of the law themselves for some time tell what to make of him. Some writers inform us, that he frequently fasted for feveral days together; and that, when he broke his fast, he only took three mouthfuls of bread, and a little water. With regard to the place of Al Hallaj's nativity, authors are not perfectly agreed; some afferting that he was born at Nisabûr, others at Merû, others at Al Talakan, and others at Al Ray. He came from Khorasan into Irak, and went from thence to Mecca, where he lived a year in a cave, or, as some will have it, in a place called Al Hojra, which was always open at top. was feen upon mount Abu Kobais standing with his bare feet on a stone, and his head uncovered, being at the same time in a violent sweat. After his return to Baghdad, he was much talked of there; many pretending, that the Deity resided in him, nay, that he was God himself. The Visir Hamed having been told, that he had raifed several people from the dead. fent for him, in order to interrogate him about his pretenfions. Upon his appearance before the Vifir, he disclaimed the gift of prophecy, the power of working miracles, and the refidence of the Divinity in him; faying, that he had nothing extraordinary in him, and that he worshipped God like other men. Hamed, therefore, must have immediately dismissed him, had not one of his books been produced, wherein he maintained, that " if a Moslem could not go in pilgrimage to Mecca, he ought to perform all the prescribed ceremonies in some convenient room at home, fitted up and set apart for that purpose, on the 9th and 10th of Dhu'lhajja, feed and cloath thirty orphans, and afterwards give each of them feven dirhêms; and that if he did this, he would from thence reap all the benefits and advantages accruing to all Moslems from a performance of the aforesaid pilgrimage." This position being manifestly repugnant to what has been advanced in the Korân, the doctors of the law unanimously judged Al Halkîj worthy of death; which decision being confirmed by the Khalif, he was executed in the following manner. First, he received 1000 stripes, without uttering so much as a groan; then one of his hands was cut off, then one of his feet, afterwards the other foot, then the other hand, and, lastly, the fatal stroke was given him, which put an end to his pain-After his execution, his body was burnt, the ashes of it thrown into the Tigris, and his head exposed to public view in the market-place of Baghdad. The Kadi who condemned Al Hallaj was Abu Omar, who passed sentence upon him, not only because he endeavoured to propagate a tenet subversive of the Mohammedan faith, but likewise because he fathered so pernicious a notion upon the irreproachable doctor Al Hasan Bakhteri, in none of whose works it was to be found. It appears from some good authors, though he denied this to the Visir, that he was thoroughly infected with the blasphemous opinions of the Safis, and even scrupled not to affert, that God had taken up his habitation in him. Abu'l Hosein Ali Ebn Isa, 2 famous and learned doctor, who disputed with him, found him perfectly illiterate, according to Abu'l-Faraj, and reproved him for his great vanity and impiety. Abu'l Hasan Ebn Al Jondi, if we will believe the same historian, saw several of his juggling tricks, and particularly the appearance of a beautiful garden exhibited by him. Some Arabic verses attributed to him, that have been preserved by Al Makin, seem to point at the union of the divine and human natures in CHRIST; which may have induced some of the Moslems, as we find hinted by Khondemir, to have taken him for a Christian; tho', after all, as has been observed by M. D'Herbelst, these verses might only contain certain expressions of the Mohammedan mystical theology, by which the Moslem enthusiasts understood the intimate union of the divinity with the heart of man detached from the love of worldly things, and transported beyond itself. It may also be farther remarked, that the Shiites have entertained the most extravagant fancies of their Imâms, and applied particularly to Ali several things which are said in

Scripture of CHRIST; and that most of the other Mehammeden fects are tainted with the same madness; there being found many amongst them, and, amongst the Sufis especially, who pretend to be nearly related to heaven, and boast of strange revelations before the credulous people. "Matters are come to that pass," says AlGhazâli, "that some boast of an union with God, and of discoursing familiarly with him, without the interposition of a veil, faying. It hath been thus faid to us, and we have thus spoken; affecting to imitate AlHosein AlHallaj, who was put to death for some words of this kind uttered by him; he having faid, as was proved by credible witor nesses, I am the truth; or Abu Yazid Al Bastami, of whom it is related, that he often used the expression, Sobhani, i. e. * Praise be unto me! But this way of talking is the cause of great mischief amongst the common people; insomuch that " husbandmen, neglecting the tillage of their land, have pretended to the like privileges; nature being tickled with difcourses of this kind, which furnish men with an excuse for 66 leaving their occupations, under pretence of purifying their of fouls, and attaining I know not what degrees and condi-" tions. Nor is there any thing to hinder the most stupid see fellows from forming the like pretentions, and catching at fuch expressions: for whenever what they say is denied to be true, they fail not to reply, that our unbelief proceeds from learning and logic; affirming learning to be a veil, and logic the work of the mind: whereas what they tell " us appears only within, being discovered by the light of " truth. But this is that truth, the sparks whereof have se flown into feveral countries, and occasioned great mischies; 66 fo that it is more for the advantage of God's true religion to put to death one of those who utter such things, than to " bestow life on ten others." Tajo'ddin Ali Ebn Abmed Al Baghdadi, who died in the 674th year of the Hejra, has written the life of Abu Moghith Al Hosein Ebn Mansar Al Hallaj, of whom we have here been speaking, under the title of Akbbar Al Ghazali likewise and Ebn Khalecan have been Al Hallâi. very prolix on the actions and behaviour of this extraordinary person. M. D'Herbelot, in the account he has given of Al Hallaj, truly calls Gayyath Addin Ebn Hamam Addin, surnamed Khondemir, the abbreviator of Mohammed Lbu Emir Khowand Shah, commonly going under the name of Mirkhond; though, in another place, he wrongly intimates, that Khondemer and Khowand Shah were the very same person: which falls very little short of a clear and express contradiction 1.

THE same year in which Al Hallaj was executed at Bagb-Yakîn id, that is, the 300th of the Hejra, Yakîn Al Harari was succeeded prived of the government of Egypt, and Abu Fanus ap-by Abu inted to succeed him in that post. The new governor did Fanus in tremain above five days in his office, having been deposed the gothin that term, in order to make way for his predecessor vernment kin, or Takîn. The Khalîf, however, soon removed Yakîn, of Egypt. d substituted in his room Helâl Ebn Yezîd.

THE following year, being the 310th of the Hejra, Abu Abu Jasrafar Mobammed Ebn Jorair Ebn Mowayyad Al Tabari, the far Al thor of the history we have for the most part followed here, Tabari parted this life at Baghdad. He was an Imam of great piety, dies. well as of most extensive reading and erudition. The Moslems ll his valuable work At Tárîkh Al Tabari, and have it in such gh esteems, that they look upon it as the basis and soundation all their other histories. Ebn Al Juzi writes, that his history first consisted of a great number of volumes, and that the pies we now have of it are only an abridgment of a larger Ebn Al Sobki relates, that Abu Jaafar Al Tabori havg asked his friends whether they could take any pleasure in iding a history of every thing that had happened in the world the age in which they lived, they made answer, that they ould very willingly read fuch a history, if it could any-where found: upon which, this author having told them, that he d actually compiled 30,000 leaves upon that subject, they mediately replied, that their whole life-time would not be ficient to read over so voluminous a work in. Whereupon, Tabari affured them, that he would abridge it as much as he uld for their use; and this, says Ebn Al Sobki, is the abridgent that still remains in our hands. Ebn Shohnah writes, that is history began with the creation of the world; that Abu nafar Al Tabari, who was born in the year of the Hejra 4, was a strenuous defender of the Korân; and that, notthstanding this, he was looked upon as an heretic, or iite, at Bagbdad. The last of which articles is confirmed Abulfeda; who says, he was considered as heterodox by e populace of Baghdad, because he made not the least menin of the famous Ahmed Ebn Hanbal, in the treatise he wrote on the controversies of the Fakhis, learned interpreters of the w, or masters of jurisprudence. The fame history has also been translated into Turkish by an uncertain author, and many copies of this version are to be met with amongst the Abu Mohammed Abd allah Ebn Mohammed Al Fargâni obliged the world with a continuation of the Tarikh of Al Tabari, and published it under the title of Selat. Abu'l Hasan Mebammed Ebn-Abd almâlec Al Hamadâni, who died in the year of the Hejra 521, has written another supplement, wherein he has brought the history of which we are speaking down to his own times. Abu Jaafar is faid by Abulfeda to have been born at Amil, or Amel, the capital of Tebrestian, and from thence to have derived the surname of Al Tabari, M. D'Herbelst is inconfistent with himself, when, in one passage of his book, he afferts, that Al Tabari concluded his history with the 30ch year of the Hejra, and, in another, that he has preserved the Arabic verses spoken by Al Hallaj at the place of execution, in the year of the Hejra 309. Abulfeda relates, that the Tarib of Al Tabari concludes with the year of the Hojra 302. However, we are inclined to believe, that our author continued his work, which he began at the creation of the world, to the day of Al Hallaj's execution, if not in manner to the very time of his own death. Abu'l Abbas Ahmed Ebn Mehammed Ebn Sabl, a doctor of great repute amongst the Safis, and Ibrahim Bbn Harún Al Harrâni, a celebrated physician, died the preceding year. We must beg leave to observe, that an impersed MS. copy of the Târîkb of Abu Jaafar Al Tabari, in (A) Archi,

As the diacritical points are preserved in this beautiful manuscript, any person tolerably well versed in the Arabic language may, by its affiftance, not only oblige the learned world with a much more correct and accurate Latin version of part of Al Makin's abridgment than that of Erpenius, which is a very indifferent one, but likewise with a continuation of that version. For, that part of Al Makin's history, translated into Latin by Erpenius, and published after his death by Golius, ends with the life of At Mofaiber (2) the twenty-eighthKhelif of the house of Al Abbas, who died in the year of the Heirt 512; whereas the Oxford MS. goes on to his fon and fuccefor Al Mostarfied, and the rest of the Khalifs of that line, and ends with Rucno'ddin, or Rocno'ddin, the fourth of the Babrite, a Turkish (3), Mamlûks, who die in the year of the Heira 676, 20 years after the Tarsars had made themselves makers of Bagbill

In the 311th year of the Hejra, the Khalif removed Helâl The Kar-Ebn Yezid from the government of Egypt, and appointed Ab-matians med Ebn Keigalag to prefide over that province; but he foon take made way for Yakîn Al Harari, who was again put at the head Basraof the administration there, and continued to govern the Egyptians till the death of Al Moktader. The same year, Abu. Thaber Soliman Ebn Abu Sa'id Al Jannabi, who succeeded his brother Sa'id in the command of the Karmatian forces, and pretended to great skill in the occult sciences, penotrated to Basra with an army of 107,000 men, made himfelf master of that city, put all the inhabitants that fell into his hands to the sword, burnt the great mosque there, and thoroughly plundered every part of the town. However, being apprehensive of a visit from the Khalif's troops, after he had possessed himself of it seventeen days, he thought fit to abandon the place. The Khalif constituted Ali Ebn Abmed (or Mehammed) Ebn Al Farât, whom he delivered out of prifon for that purpose, in the latter Rabi, the third time, his Vistr. Hijâ himself, he was taken prisoner in the action, which was extremely sharp, together with a very considerable number of his foldiers and officers, who all fell into the enemies hands. After which, the rebels plundered the caravan, and carried off most of the women and children belonging to it into captivity. The success Abu Thaber had met with on this occasion excited him to advance to Hair, where he took post, without any obstruction from the Khalif's forces, which were too weak to oppose him. Most of the people that he permitted to make their escape died of thirst, and the fatigue they were obliged to sustain, in the desart. The Karmatian general, who was at this time not above nineteen years of age, is faid by the authors followed by Al Makin to have made 2220 men and fifty women prisoners, and to have acquired a booty of 1,000,000 dinars in money, together with all the rich effects and provifions of the caravan, worth at least as much more, in this faccessful expedition w.

AbuTha- The same year, Abu Thâher released Abu'l Hijâ, and many of the other prisoners, and sent an embassador to Bagbdad. The purport of this minister's commission was to desire Al Moktuder to grant his master the sovereignty, or at least to make him perpetual governor, of Bafra and Abwaz; but this the Kbalif peremptorily refused. However, as he was not able to reduce the rebels, he treated the embassador with marks of diffinction, and made him a present of a sumptuous vest. About this time, an insurrection happened at Damastus, wherein the Moslems demolished the large and beautiful church of St. Mary there, on which there had been laid out 200,000 dinars, and carried off all the sacred vessels, and other ornaments belonging to it, of almost inestimable value. They also plundered several monasteries and nunneries in that district, and particularly a nunnery near St. Mary's church. They likewise pulled down the church of the Nestorians, and many of those belonging to the Melchites, in the month of The Khaltf put Ali Ebn Mohammed Ebn Al Farat, his Vifir, and his fon Al Mohfen, to death, in the former Rabi, this year x.

fiderable value. About the same time, Abd allah Ebn Mobammed Ebn Khakan, Al Moktader's Visir, wrote to shi Ebn Isa at Mecca, ordering him to repair immediately to Egypt, and inquire into the state of affairs there. Ali, therefore, in pursuance of the order he had received, entered Egypt in the beginning of Rajeb, and exacted tribute of all the religious fettled in the lower part of that tract going under the name of Al Sa'id, particularly of the bishops and monks in the monaftery of Mina. Many of these religious, thus haraffed, retired to Irâk, and carried their complaints to the Khalif; who thereupon commanded the tribute that had been imposed upon them to be remitted, removed the Vifir from his office, and appointed Abu'l Abbas Ahmed Ebn Abd'allah Ebn Ahmed Al Khasib to succeed him. About this time, Nicolas, patriarch of Constantinople, died, when he had occupied that see thirtythree years; after whom came one Stephen, an eunuch, who prefided over the church there three years. A furprifing meteor, refembling an exceeding large and bright flar, or comet, of a very red colour, moving with great velocity from north to eaft, followed by a terrible flame, and attended with an infinite number of sparks issuing from it, about thirty lances long; and two broad, appeared in Egypt, on the fifth of the latter Rabi, This meteor exhibited the appearance of a fiery ferpent, and continued about three hours; after which, not the faintest traces of it were to be seen. About this time died Ali Ebn Mohammed Ebn Bashar Al Zahed, and Abd allah Ebn Mobammed Ebn Abd'alaziz Al Bagawi, in the 102d year of his age. We must not forget to observe, that a general, called Mas'ud, came from Africa, and took the castle, or citadel, of St. Agatha, in the kingdom of Naples, either this or the preceding year y.

The Khalif Al Moktader commanded Kusef Ebn Abu'l Saj, the governor of Adherbijan, to advance to Waset against the Karmatians, the present year. About the same time, Naser, or Nasr Ebn Abmed I Sammani possessed himself of the city of Ray; but soon after, being seized with a violent illness, he found himself obliged to relinquish that place. The Cambridge Chronicon feems to intimate, that the

The Chriftians ral adwantages over the Moslems, according to the Greek writers.

Some of the Greek authors relate, that the Moslems invaded the Christian territories several years before the aforesaid irrupgain Severtion of the Greeks into Cappadocia; and that Johannes Curcuas, the imperial general in those parts, not only drove them back with great loss, but, having belieged and taken the city of Melitene, reduced the adjoining country to the form of a province. This, however, was perhaps the expedition placed in the 314th year of the Hejra by Al Makin. It feems to appear likewife from Zonaras, that, about this time, Leo of Tripoli, the Moslem admiral, was defeated by the Christian fleet near the island of Lemnos, and had almost all his seamen cut to pieces, and his ships sunk. But we find not the least mention of these transactions in any of the Arab historians .

The Karmatians make a farther Irâk.

THE next year, being the 315th of the Hejra, commencing March 8th, 927, Abu Thaber Ebn Abu Sa'id, the Karmathian general, overthrew the Khalif's forces with very great flaughter, and took Yusef Ebn Abu'l Nabaj, who commanded progress in them, prisoner. He also possessed himself of the city of Cufa, and even threatened to penetrate to Baghdad; which struck the inhabitants of that capital with the utmost terror and conster-However, Al Mektader, taking 300,000 dinars out of the treasury, and being supplied by his mother with 500,000 more, raised a body of 10,000 horse, which he sent to act against the Karmatians. But the general who commanded them, not having been able to bring the enemy to a battle,

(B) In the Latin version of the Cambridge Chromiton, the Arabic word Hâjeb is taken for the proper name of the Khalif of Kairwan, who at that time was Abu Mohammed Obeid allab, surnamed Al Mobdia the founder of the dynasty of the Fâtemites; whereas that word generally denotes the chamberlain, or some such officer, of the Kbalifs, in the Arab historians. That it is not a proper name in the passage here referred to, appears from hence, that neither the Kbalif of Kairwan reigning at this time, nor any of either his predecelfors or successors, ever went by fuch a name. 'Tis furprifing that the very learned Sig. Ginseppe Simoni Assemani, a Maronite, and professor of Arabic in the college at Rome (1), who revised and corrected this Latin version, should have suffered such a miltake to escape him.

returned, after the conclusion of the campaign, to Baghdad, without having effected any thing confiderable. This so animated Abu Thaher, that he advanced at the head of his forces to Anbar; though he foon thought fit to retire, without having attempted any thing against that place. As Anbar was not above ten parafangs of Baghdad, the Khalif confidered the Karmatian's retreat from thence, in the present situation of asfairs, as equivalent to a victory; and therefore, with his mother and Vifir, returned God thanks, in the most solemn manner, for it; and even, by way of farther acknowledgment to the great arbiter of events, distributed amongst the poor of Baghdâd no less than fifty thousand dinars. After which, Abu Thâher appeared with his army before Hit, or Hait, a strong castle on the northern bank of the Euphraies, about twenty-one parafangs above Anbar, bordering on the defarts of Al Jazira; but, upon taking a view of it, he retired with precipitation to Hajr. This fo raised the drooping spirits of the Khalif, that he ordered a fecond thanksgiving for so auspicious an event, and a farther distribution of 100,000 dirhems amongst the Abulfeda relates, that Abu Thaber, with a small body of troops, confisting of only 800 foot and 700 horse, overthrew Yusef Ebn Abu'l Saj, probably the Yusef Ebn Abu'l Nabaj of Al Makin, at the head of 40,000 men, when he thought himself so sure of conquering, that he had ordered his secretary to write a letter to the Khallf, notifying the victory his troops had gained over the rebels, before the beginning of the action. In this battle, Yusef Ebn Abu'l Saj himself was taken prisoner, and afterwards put to the sword, by the Karmatian general; who found an immense quantity of wealth at Cûsa. defeated another of the Khalif's armies commanded by Mûnes, ravaged all that part of Irak bordering upon the Euphrates, and, after having thrown the citizens of Bagdad into an inexpressible panic, returned laden with spoil to Hajr. d'alrabman Al Nasr Ebn Mohammed, of the house of Ommiyah, the Emir, or lord, of Andalusia, or rather the Khalif of Spain, according to the same author, reduced also the city of Toledo, and deftroyed a confiderable part of it, after it had rebelled against him, and sustained a very long siege, the present year. Munes, one of Al Moktader's best officers, having entertained a suspicion of that prince's sinister intentions towards him, refused for some time to go to the imperial palace, at the Khalif's invitation; but at last he was prevailed upon to repair thither, and kiss his hand, by the troops that promifed to support him. About this time, according to the Cambridge Chronicon, the Hajeb, or chamberlain, of the Khalif of Kairwan agreed upon a fort of a truce, or cellation of arms, with the Calabrians, after he had taken from them Aura, or Ura, I. 14

This affair being terminated, the Khalif of Kairwan dispatched Al Bolzami and Al Kollbani, two grandees of his court, called by that writer Sheikhs, with Ebu Salem into Sicily, to mulc the inhabitants of that island for some disturbances that had happened. We must not forget to observe, that the Deylamites, the first of whose princes was Wasbûdân Ebn Al Marzabân, who fixed his residence at Shabrestan, began to make a figure, according to Al Makin, in the year we are now upon b.

Abu Thâ-Rahaba and Karkîsîa.

THE following year, being the 316th of the Hejra, Abu her takes Thaber seized upon the town of Rababa, and put a vast number of the inhabitants to the fword. He also made himself master of Karkisia, or Karkisya, in Mesopotamia, and afterwards retired to Hajr, in Yamama, where he chose for the most part to reside. Here he built a palace, to which he gave the name of Hajra. The Khalif dismissed first from his employment Abu'l Abbas Ebn Al Khasib, his Visir, and afterwards Ali Ebn Isa Ebn Al Jarah, his successor; substituting in the room of the latter Abu Ali Ebn Mohammed Ebn Ali, commonly called Ehn Moklab, about the middle of the latter Rabi. After the reduction of Rahaba, Abu Thâher, according to Abulfeda, made himself master of Al Rakka upon the Euphrates, and treated the inhabitants of that place in a cruel manner. He likewise penetrated to Sinjar, the Singara of Ptolemy, a confiderable city. of Mesopotamia, in the province of Diyar Rabia, which immediately submitted to him. About the same time, if we will believe this author, Mardawij Ebn Zayyar, or, as he is called by Al Makin, Mardawij Ebn Ramaz, the Deylamite, having cut off Asfar Ebn Shirûyeh, his master, who had seized upon Jorjan the preceding year, subdued Kazwin, Ray, Hamadan, Dinawar, or Al Deinawar, Kenkewar, Yazdejerd, Komm, Kāshan, Esfahan, Jarbadkan, and the whole mountainous region of Tabrestan. The dynasty, therefore, of the Deylamites, according to Abu'feda, commenced the present year. same historian farther relates, that Johannes Curcuas, who prefided over all the imperial territories extending from the Hellespont to the frontiers of the Moslem empire, obliged the citizens of Akhlath and Bedlis in Armenia, at this time, to erect crosses upon the spots, in their respective principal mosques, on

When the imperial palace was pillaged, Al Moktader's mother loft fix hundred thousand dinars. After the late Khalif's abdication, letters were fent into all the provinces, notifying Al Kaher's accession; and people entertained hopes, that the tranquillity of the empire would be settled upon a lasting foundation. But, the third day of the new Khalif's reign, the troops affembled in a tumultuous manner, with great infolence demanded their pay, cut in pieces Barûk the captain of the guards, drove Ebn Moklah the Vistr out of the palace, and placed Al Moktader again upon the throne. That prince no fooner found himself repossessed of the Khallfat, than he sent for his brother Al Kâber, forgave him what was past, expressed an inviolable attachment to his interests, recalled Ebn Moklab, and ordered him to communicate to the provinces the news of this last revolution. According to Eutychius, not only Mûnes, but likewise Abu'l Hîjâ, Nazûk, and other principal commanders, contributed to the abdication of Al Moktader, and affished at the inauguration of Al Kaher. However, continues the same author, the body of infantry, called Al Mosafia, two days after that event happened, slew Nazûk and Abu'l Hija, and brought about the restoration of Al Moktader, without any considerable effusion of human blood. Abulfeda relates, that Al Moktader had rendered himself extremely disagreeable to the army, by permitting his women and eunuchs to govern with an absolute sway, and to seece his subjects in a most arbitrary and oppressive manner. He also seems to intimate, that Manes, contrary to his own inclination, was forced by the foldiery to concur with them in the violent measures which were at this time purfued; but that afterwards this general not a little contributed to Al Moktader's re-establishment upon the Moslem throne. About this time, Egypt was infested with such swarms of locasts, that they darkened the air, intercepted the folar rays, and devoured every thing green in all those parts of that fruitful country which they traversed. The same year, Abu Thaber, the Karmatian general, and prince of Hair, entered Mesca with his troops, killed a great number of the pilgrims, on the 8th of Dbu'lbajja, in the temple there, demolished the small building and cupola that covered the well Zemzem, and plundered the Caeba. Nay, we are told by Abulfeda, that they filled this well with the carcafes of those going in procession round the Caabe, whom they had massacred, amongst which was that of Ein Al Mohalleb, the prince of Mecca, himself. Among other profanations by them offered to that celebrated place of the Moslem worship, they took away the famous black stone, of which we have formerly given our readers a full and ample description, and could not be prevailed upon for love or money to reftore it, though one Yabcam, in the name of the people of Mecca, offered no less than 5000 dinars for it. However, after they had kept it above twenty-two years. feeing they could not thereby draw the pilgrims from Mecca, they sent it back from Hair of their own accord; at the same time bantering its devotees, by telling them it was not the true stone: but, as it is said, it was proved to be no counterfeit, by its peculiar quality of swimming on water. The Karmatian, however, who was fent to take away the golden foot, or pipe, that carried the rain-water from the top of the Gaaba, broke his neck in the attempt. We must beg leave to remark here, that Eutychius calls Abu Thaber Abu Su'id Al Jannabi; though he has been more properly named Soliman Ebn Abu Sa'id Al Jannábi by Abulfeda. The first of those authors also informs us, that, before he advanced to Mecca, he incamped in a place going under the name of Tel-Arkilf, at a finall distance from Baghdad, and had several engagements with the Khalif's forces; after which, he stopped up all the wells between that capital and Metca, not perinitting the caravans of pilgrims to pass to the latter of those cities, either from Mesopotamia or Khorasan. The same writer also relates, that this Al Jannabi butchered an infinite number of people both within and without the Caaba, as also in the streets of Mecca; infomuch that the well Zemzem was filled with dead bodies, as well as most of the houses of the town, and the ways, vallies, defart places, &c. in the neighbourhood of it. And, to crown all these missortunes, if any person escaped out of the city with his effects, he was cut to pieces and plundered by the Arabs themselves, who were assembled in considerable numbers not far from the gates for that purpose. Some, however, fled to Jodda, and made their escape by sea. As the Karmatian general carried off all the rich furniture and utenfils, both of gold and filver, belonging to the temple of Mesca, held in so high a veneration amongst the Mohammedans, except the spout, or pipe, above-mentioned, the spoil he acquired on this occasion was of immense value: besides which, he met with a considerable booty in the town; as he gave the place up to his troops to be plundered for seven days together. After he had committed these depredations, he abandoned Mecca, and ordered the pillage that had fallen into his hands to be conducted to. Hajr. It has been already observed, that Abu Thaber, to whom Eutychius gives also the name of Soliman Ebn Al Hasan, attacked the city of Basra with his forces in the year of the Heira 311, carried it by assault, put a great number of the inhabitants to the fword, and then of his own accord retired. All which events the last-mentioned author seems to place either in the 312th or 313th year of the Hejra; tho' it must be owned, that he so huddles things together there, that we cannot fafely depend upon him in this particular. This year, a very sharp debate was carried on at Baghdad between Abu Becr Al Merazi, or Al Marwazi, the principal of those who were followers of the famous Ahmed Ehn Hanhal, with his adherents, and the members of another sect in that metropolis, concerning the true import and meaning of a controverted passage in the Korân. The former inferred from it, that Gop would hereafter place Mohammed upon the throne of his glory near himself; and the latter only, that God would accept of the prophet's interceffion for all true Moslems, at the day of judgment. The minds of the disputants on both sides were so agitated and inflamed on this occasion, that many murders were committed; infomuch that the city of Baghdad, for fome months, became a fcene of blood and confusion. About the same time, Nasr Ebn Ahmed Ebn Nasr Al Basri, a famous poet, surnamed Al Khabazarzi, departed this life. It ought to be here remarked, that Eylia, or Elias, the patriarch of Antioch, died on Saturday, the 13th of the latter Jomada, after he had fat in the patriarchal fee there twenty-eight years.

It appears from the Cambridge Chronicen, that Sain, one of the Khalif of Kairwan's generals, made an incursion into Italy, and penetrated as far as the borders of the Lower Lombardy, that is, Campania, the duchy of Benevente, and the neighbouring tract, with a body of the Magrebian troops, took many prisoners, and agreed upon another cessation of arms with the Calabrians, the present year d.

The transthe year 318.

THE next year, being the 318th of the Hejra, Soliman Ebn actions of Al Hasan Ebn Mokballed was appointed by the Khallf his Vifir. That prince likewise, about the same time, conferred upon Nasero'ddawla Ebn Abu'l Hija Ebn Hamdan the government of Amed, Diyar Becr, and Mayafarkîn, or Mayyafarakîn; ordering him to pay annually a certain fum of money into the exchequer at Baghdad. About the fame time, the body of infantry, termed by the Arabs Al Mosassa, being grown extremely infolent fince the restoration of the Khalif Al Moktader, were first expelled the city of Baghdad, then that of Waser, and at last totally dispersed. This year, Sain made an incursion into Calabria, took a fortress in that province, named Termulah, and carried with him into the Moslem territories 12,000 priloners, without having sustained any considerable loss c.

Marda-Wij, the king of Deylam, extends bis conquests.

THE following year, being the 319th of the Hejra, Obeid'allah Ebn Mohammed was nominated by the Khalif to act in the capacity of Visir. He did not, however, continue long in that fublime post to which he had been advanced; Al Hasan Ebn Al Kasem Ebn Obeid allah Ebn Soliman Ebn Wabeb being appointed to succeed him, before the end of the month Shawal. About the same time, died Abu Becr Al Nabrawani, a noted poet, who wrote some celebrated elegiacal verses upon a cat; being, at the time of his death, about an hundred years old. This year, Mardawij Ebn Ramaz, or Mardawij Ebn Zayyar, the king, or prince, of Deylam, made himself master of Hamadan, violated the women there, and put 30,000 of the inhabitants to the fword. The Khalif, receiving advice of the havock he had made, fent an army, under the command of Harûn Ebn Arab, to reduce him; of which the Devlamite being informed, he advanced at the head of his troops to attack the Khalif's forces, engaged them between Hamadan and Kazwin, and overthrew them with incredible flaughter;

But of the great exploits of Mardawîj Ebn Ramâx, as well as those of the other Deylamite princes, our readers may expect a particular and circumstantial account in another part of this work, to which it will more properly belong f.

In the 320th year of the Hejra, commencing Jan. 13th, The Kha-932, the Khalif Al Moktader was killed at Baghdad; of which lif Al tragical event some of the oriental historians have handed down Moktader to us the following particulars. Mûnes, the Khalif's general, is killed at having entertained a suspicion, that his master intended to Baghdad. throw him into prison, left the court in disgust, and retired to Al Mawfel. Soon after his arrival there, he affembled a body of troops, with which he marched directly to Baghdad. Al Moktader, having received advice of his approach, led his forces out of the city, in order to give him battle. A fierce conflict enfued between the contending parties, in which the Khallf was killed, stript, and had his head cut off by one of the barbarians in Munes's army, who immediately brought it to his general. The body of that prince was buried by a Curd, who passed by it soon after the end of the action, and faw it lie naked, and exposed to public view, on the field of battle. In this manner fell Al Moktader, on Wednesday the 28th of Sbawâl, soon after he had completed the 38th year of his age, and had fat upon the Moslem throne about twentyfive years. He conferred upon Abu Fadl Ebn Jaafar Ebn Al Farât the office of Visir, towards the close of the latter Rabi. After his death, his head was carried on a lance, in the midst of a vaft crowd of people, through the principal streets of Baghdâd E.

This affair, however, has been more particularly related This traby Abulfeda and Abu'l-Faraj. Those authors write, that Mû-gical nes, being greatly displeased with the Kbalif's conduct, retired event towards Al Mawsel; of which that prince being apprized, he more parwrote to the head of the family of Hamdân, who then goticularly verned the people there, and commanded him to oppose the related by rebel with all his forces. The prince, or Emîr, of Al Mawsel, continue they, having received the Khalif's letter, immediately drew together an army of 30,000 men, with which he Faraj. advanced towards Mûnes, then attended by only a body of 800 horse, in order to attack him. That general, however, having probably been reinforced by some fresh troops, waited for - him upon a spot of ground at a small distance from Al Mewfel, engaged him with great bravery, and at last put him to flight; after which, he made himself master of all the towns and villages, as well as all the riches, belonging to the descendants of Hamdan. This victory had such an effect upon the minds of the foldiery, that a very confiderable part of the Khalif's forces cantoned in Syria and Egypt, and even at Bagbdad itself, deserted him, and joined Munes; which enabled that rebel, after nine months preparations at Al Mawfel, to march through Teerit, at the head of a numerous army, to Bagbdad. Upon his arrival there, he pitched his tents before the gate Al Shammasia, and immediately invested the town. Al Moktader's friends, finding their master and themselves upon the point of being closely besieged, persuaded the Khalif to go out of the city in Mohammed's cloke, preceded by the doctors of the law, and other persons of note, with copies of the Koran open in their hands, in order to shew himself to the rebels; imagining that they would be touched with reverence of his person at so august a sight, and be thereby the more readily induced to return to a sense of their duty. At first he stood upon an eminence, with his attendants, and feemed unwilling to fight; but the figural at 1aft, by his order, being given, a general action immediately onfued. The flower of his troops having already deferted him, Al Moktader's men were foon put to flight, and he himfelf, with several of the run-aways, endeavouring to return into the town, furrounded by a party of the Magrebian foldiers; one of whom, after a profusion of the most opprobrious language, ran him through with his sword, and the others instantly dispatched him. After which, they cut off his head, and carried it upon a pole to the rebel general, then at Al Rashidia, who had not been present in the action. The Magrebiant likewise intirely stripped him, not leaving him so much as his breeches on to cover these parts which nature commands us to conceal, and buried him in the place where he fell. When Al Moktader's head was brought to Maines, at the fight of it, he is faid to have wept, and to have discovered figns of the most unfeigned grief. He also posted a guard upon the imperial palace, in order to prevent its being plundered, and commanded his men not to offer the least violence to any of the late Khalif's family or domestics there h.

of which have been omitted by the Arab writers. At Mik-attending tader, according to this author, having caused his brother Al Al Mok-Kaher to be imprisoned, for the part he had acted in the late tader's revolt, which terminated in the elevation of that prince to the death, lac-Mostem throne, though he fat not above two days thereon, re-cording to folved at last to put him to death. Al Kaber, having been in-Mirkformed of his brother's design, engaged a Barbarian, or Ma-hond. grebian, officer, who was an excellent horseman, and intirely at his devotion, to assassinate him. In order to effect this with the greater facility, he procured the affishance of Mûnes, the eunuch, who was not a little disaffected to the Khalif, and who confequently came into Al Kaher's measures with uncommon alacrity. The Magrebian, charged with this commission, sought all opportunities of killing the Khalif; and one day observing him seated in the place called Shemmasia, to fee some feats at arms and horse-races there, he presented himself before him, in order to be admitted to partake of those diversions; when he performed his part with so much dexterity and address, that the Khallf made him repeat it several times, and commanded his guards to retire, that he might have a more free and extensive view in the place. The Magrebian thinking that a proper opportunity of carrying his defign into execution now offered itself, immediately turned his horse towards the Khallf, rushed upon him in an instant, and thrust his lance into his breast with such force, that he fell from his feat, and foon after died of the wound be then received. As foon as the officer had given the blow, he rode directly to the prison where Al Kaher was confined, in order to deliver him from thence, and put him in possession of the Khalifat. But passing through the market-place, he met an as loaded with thorns, which the people of that country make use of to heat their ovens. At this the Magnebian's horse took fright, and ran with his master against a butcher's stall with fach violence, that a hook belonging thereto fluck fast in his chin; the horse being by this means deprived of his rider, and leaving him hanging thereon. Soon after this accident, a party of the Khallf's guards, who observed what had been done, and closely pursued the affaffin, came up with him, made a fire of the thorns on the als's back, and burnt him therein. This is the account of Al Moktader's death preserved by Mirkhond, an author of good repute; though, for several reasons, we prefer, as more consonant to truth, the relation of that tragical event handed down to us by the Arab historians cited here i.

His person, With regard to his person, Al Moktader had a round character, handsome face, and the hair of his head, as well as his beard, was exceeding gray; though he had but just compleated the 38th year of his age at the time of his death. He had likewife very good eyes, was of a middle stature, and a fair complexion. As to his disposition, he was religious, delighted in giving of alms, and fasted often. He had many secretaries, governors of provinces and cities, and counsellors, or Vifers. Some of the women and girls belonging to the court had a great hand in the administration, particularly a girl named Yamek, who was so thoroughly versed in all the weightier points of the Mobammedan law, that both the judges, in the determination of criminal causes, and the doctors of the law, in their most important decisions, found themselves obliged to have recourse to her for her affistance. Al Moktader reigned twenty-five years, and created twelve principal counsellors, or Visits; which cannot, with truth, be said of any of his predecessors. From the time that the Karmatians took Mecca, and carried from thence the celebrated black stone, to the day of this prince's death, not a fingle Moslem performed the pilgrimage thither; which never happened in the reign of any of the preceding Khalifs. Al Moktader is faid to have given away to the poor, and appropriated to charitable uses, above seventy He also distributed a vast number of millions of dinârs. jewels, a confiderable quantity of the most precious unguents, and above fixty-three grains of civet, amongst the girls that he kept for his own use, and some other favourites that had an uncommon ascendant over him. His Visirs, or Wazirs, some of whom had different names, or surnames, assigned them by different authors, were Abu'l Abbas Ebn Al Hasan, Ali Ebn Ahmed (or Mohammed) sometimes called Abu'l Hasan Ebn Al Farât, Abu'l Kasem Al Khâkâni, Mohammed Ebn Aba allah Ebn Khakan, Ali Ebn Isa Ebn Al Jarah, Abu Ali Ebn Mohammed, generally known by the name of Ebn Moklab, Abmed Ebn Abd'allah Ebn Ahmed Al Khasib, Soliman Ebn Al Hasan Ebn Al Mokhalled, Obeid allah Ebn Mobammed Al Kadâni, Al Hofan Ebn Al Kasem Ebn Obeid allab Ebn Soliman Ebn Wabeb, Abu'l Fadl Ebn Jaafar Ebn Al Farât, who received from his mother the denomination of Ebn Khaizarana. and Al Fadl Ebn Jaafar Ebn Al Karan. The most famous of his judges were Yusef Ebn Yakûb, his son Mohammed, Abdallah Ebn Abu'l Shawarib, Mohammed Ebn Ahmed Ebn Ishak Al Bablûl, Omar Ebn Mohammed Ebn Yusef, Al Hasan Ebn Ali, and Omar Ebn Al Hasan Ebn Abu'l Showarib. His chamberlains were Saws, Al Mottafi's servant, Nasr Al Kafüri, Yakub Al Mo'tadedi, and Ibrahim Ebn Mohammed Ebn Rayek. The inscription of his seal was, Praise be to God, te whom no other being is similar, and who is the creator of all things. That this Khalif, in whose reign the two Greek emperors Leo and Alexander died, was a prince of great. justice and moderation, appears from his remission of the tribute imposed upon the Christian bishops and religious in Egypt by Ali Ebn Isa, his governor of that country, as well as from several other things we have related of him here; and particularly from the order he issued to oblige his Moslem subjects to rebuild several churches in Egypt that his officers had demolished there. We are told by Al Makin, that a Greek pinnace, fent by the emperor for intelligence, and to discover a proper place for landing a body of troops in, was taken by some of the Moslem guard-ships stationed in the mouths of the Nile, in the 314th year of the Hejra; and that a man, who by his dress seemed to be a person of distinction, was found therein, who confessed that he was a spy, and declared that the Christians would soon appear on the coast with a fleet of 1000 fail, and a numerous body of land-forces on board, in order to make a descent. This news not a little alarmed the governor of E_{gypt} , who thereupon fent for a reinforcement from Syria, and took all other necessary precautions to render abortive the enemy's designs. But the Christian fleet. being foon after shattered by a storm, in which were lost above 300 ships, and all the soldiers and sailors therein drowned; the Greeks found themselves obliged to make the best of their way to their own ports, and thereby delivered the Egyptians, whom they had struck with such terror, from all apprehenfions of the invalion with which they had been threatened k.

BEFORE we conclude what we have to say of the Khalif Several Al Moktader, it may not be improper to touch upon the cha-learned racters of two of the most learned men that flourished in his men floureign. The famous Mohammed Ebn faber Ebn Senan Aburished in Aba allah Al Harrâni, a native of Batân, or Battân, one of Al Mokthe dependencies of Harran, and thence commonly called tader's Al Battâni, or Albatâni, so justly celebrated for the accurate astronomical observations he made at Arasta, or Aracca, that is, the city of Al Rakka upon the Euphrates, departed this life in the 317th year of the Hojra. This great mathematician and philosopher professed the Sabian religion, which chiefly prevailed at the time of his birth in the city of Harran, and all the adjacent tract belonging to it. And for this reason it is, that his tables are called the Sabian Tables. He began his observations in the year of the Hejra 264, and concluded them in 306; though the fixed flars are placed therein, ac-

according to their fituation, in the year 299. In the 320th year of the Hejra, according to Abu'l-Faraj, died Abu Becr Mebammed Ebn Zacaria, Zechariah, or Zacarias Al Razi, a person extremely well veried in all kinds of antient learning, though he excelled most in physic, and is stiled the phoenix of his age by that writer. However, Ofaiba, the author of The Lives of the Physicians, quotes two writers; one of whom places the death of Al Razi either about the year of the Hejra 290, or a little after 300, and the other in the year 310, or 320. Abulfeda relates, that he died in the 311th, and Ebn Shobnab fixes his decease in the 310th, year of the Moslem æra. his younger years, he gave himself up intirely to music; but afterwards applied himself to the study of philosophy, with so much success, that he made a wonderful progress in every branch of it, and composed a great number of books both upon physical and philosophical subjects. He first presided over the hospital either at Ray or Jondisabur, and afterwards for a time over that at Bagbdad. He got webs, or pearls, in his eyes, by immoderate eating of beans; and, towards the close of his life, lost both of them by cataracts. He would not permit an oculist, who came to couch his eyes, to touch them with his instrument, because he could not tell of how many tunicles, or little coats, the eye did confist; saying at the same time, that he was not so desirous of recovering his fight, as he had already feen enough of the world to make him nauseate and abhor it. We are told, that he spent almost all his time in writing, either adversaria or fair copies of books. He is faid to have penned twelve pieces in alchymy, wherein he afferted the possibility of a transmutation of metals, and to have understood astrology, or the art of predicting future events, from the aspects and configurations of the celeftial bodies. He was liberal, munificent, and courteous to all men; as likewise extremely charitable to the poor, when they were fick, not only giving them his advice as a physician, but supplying all their wants in the most ample Some authors relate, that he was one of the principal physicians of the Khalif Al Moktader, and at the top of his profession when he was not above forty years of age. This is the doctor who, in the schools of physic, is commonly called Rhazes, or Rhazis, a corruption of Rázi; which furname he derived from the city of Ray, where he was born. He has by some been accused of Pyrrhonism, or Scepticism, because he did not sufficiently understand Aristotle in many particulars. M. D'Herbelot thinks, that he was the author of the piece, intituled, Ekhtiarat Al Najûmîah, which has been abridged in Persic under the title of Hakkam Alalamiah, in the French king's library, No 890, and not Fakhre'ddin Ebn Omar, as some suppose. Al Ràzi also wrote a comment upon Ariflotle's treatise weel epunysias, De Interpretatione, called by the Arabs Bari Arminias, that is, the book of interpretation, according to some of the eastern writers. Al Ca'bi is reported to have told Al Razi, that he demonstrated himself to be ignorant of physic, by his not being able to cure his own eyes; to be a ftranger to aftrology, by not foreseeing the misfortunes that came upon him; and to be unacquainted with alchymy, by his poverty. But all the facts here mentioned are looked upon as envious falshoods by Abu'l-Faraj. Bakhtishûa Ebn Yabya and Senan Ebn Thabet Ebn Korra, the Sabian, and father of Thabet Ebn Senan, the historian, were likewise two of the Khalif Al Moktader's principal physicians, and in great favour with that prince. But of the latter of these we shall give a more particular account, at the conclusion of our history of the following reign 1.

SECT. XLI.

AFTER the death of Al Moktader, Mûnes proposed that Al Kaher prince's fon Abu'l Abbas, who had been his pupil, to the succeeds grandees of the court for Khalif. But, in opposition to this bis bromotion, Ishak Al Nûbakhti thought fit to observe, that the late ther Al Khalif Al Moktader had been intirely under the management and Mokta. direction of his mother, his aunt, and his fervants; that they der in the should be again in the same situation, if a minor ascended the Khalisat. throne; and that therefore, as they now wanted a prince who could govern both himself and his subjects, they ought to cast their eyes upon Abu Mansûr Mohammed Ebn Al Mo'taded, surnamed Al Kaher Bi'llah, as the most proper person of the house of Al Abbas to be advanced to the Khalifat. Mûnes, for some time, shewed himself extremely averse to the elevation of Al Kaher, as being perfectly well acquainted with the cruel and avaricious disposition of that prince. However, he suffered himself at last to be persuaded by Al Nûbakhti to concur with the other great officers in the election of the new Khalif, affished at his inauguration, and took the oath of allegiance to Al Kaber, upon his accession, conferred the office of Hâjeb, that is, chamberlain, or master of his chamber, upon Balik, ordered all Al Moktader's children and domestics to be brought before him, and caused them to be tortured, to force them to confess what sums of money his predecessor had distributed amongst them. He also put his mother-in-law Sha'b, or Sa'f, to the rack, to oblige her to produce the semainder of her money and her jewels, after the had deposited in his hands all her rich cloaths, her most valuable furniture, and other effects, and 100,000 dinars. However, the perfifted in the declaration she had made upon oath, that she had nothing remaining in her possession of any real value; though two persons afferting the contrary appeared as evidences against her. This so inraged the Khalif, that he commanded ber, though then very infirm, and even fick of the dropfy, to be ftript naked, and hung up by the heels, with her head downwards, in such a posture that her urine ran all over her body. Nay, he is faid not only to have exposed to public view, but even to have kicked and beaten, those parts that modely injoins her fex to conceal. In the midft of her tortures, however, she had courage enough to tell him that she was his mother, and to reproach him with ingratitude; she having once diverted the Khalif Al Moktader, ber fon, from his resolution, when he had determined to put him to death. monster's own mother, according to some of the eastern writers, was named Fenûn. He is said to have made Mohammed Eba Al Kasem his Visir, soon after he took the government upon him; though several authors make Ebn Moklab his first Vifer. Two persons of distinction, called Ebn Salma and Ebn Aldâya, were sent by the Khalif of Kairwan this year to Sicily, to mulct the Maftens, probably for the depredations they committed in the Christian territories, there. About the same time, died Abu Amru Mohammed Ebn Yusef, the learned Kod of Baghdad, Abu'l Hasan Ebn Saleh, one of the followers of . the famous Al Shâfei, and Abu Neaim Abd'almâlec, a learned and religious Moslem of the same sect. Al Kaher Billah was created Khalif at Baghdad, the 28th of Shawdl, the present year m.

mento the famous Ebn Moklab (if he had not that honourable post conferred upon him the preceding year); who, according to an eastern writer of good repute, first formed the beautiful character now used by the Arabs from the Cúsic. About this time, the Khalif commanded Ahmed Ebn Al Mostass to be consined in a house by himself, where he soon pined away with grief.

Sha'b, or Sa'f, Al Moktader's mother, died this year, after Al Kåber had thoroughly pillaged her, stript her of all her possesfrons, and treated her in a most barbarous manner. This and other instances of his avarioe and cruelty so alienated the affections of Balik, Ali his fon, Ebn Moklah, Ahmed Ebn Zairac, and Mines, who was at first inclined to favour Ahmed Abu'l Abbas Ebn Al Moktader's pretentions to the Khalifat, from Al Kâher, that they conspired against him, and came to a resolution to depose him. But Taharif, or Tharif, Al Saccari having found means to convey himself into the palace in women's cloaths, motwithstanding the conspirators had possessed themselves of all the avenues to it, and discovered the whole affair to the Khalif: that prince, thus opportunely informed of the defign, by the affiftance of the dependents of Yufef Ebn Abu'l Saj, got Balik, his fon Ali, Munes, and Ahmed Ebn Zairac, into his hands, and ordered all their heads to be cut off. As for Ebn Moklab, he made his escape to Waset, where he kept himself concealed till, by the affistance of Simi, the chief of the Turkish militia, or rather the leader of the partifans of Yufef Ebn Abu'l Sái, he brought about a new revolution at the Moslem court. He was succeeded by Abu Jaafar Mohammed Ebn Al Kasem in the sublime post of Visir, or Wazir. The same year, Yakin Al Harari, the governor of Egypt, whom we have already to often mentioned, died at Mefr, or Al Postat, and was succeeded by Abu Becr Mohammed Ebn Ta'j, or Tagaj, furnamed At Akhfild, as he was foon after by Ahmed Ehn Keigalag. Ehn Salma and Ebn Aldaya returned this year to Africa, but met with a very indifferent reception from the Khalif of Kairwan; that prince being highly displeased with their conduct. About this time, according to Abalfeda, commenced the dynasty of the Bûyans, which was founded by one Bûiya, a Deylamite, of royal extraction, furnamed Abu Shaja'. Abu Becr Mobammed Ebn Al Hosein, commonly known by the name or furname of Ebn Doreidi, a celebrated poet and philologer, who wrote a great number or learned books, but was too much given to wine and music, died in the month of Shaaban. being at the time of his death about ninety-eight years of age; as did likewife, on the fame day, Abu Hashem Ebn Ali, a Motuzalite sophist, or metaphysician, born in the year of the Hejra 247. Both of these learned men were interred in the common burying-place at Baghdad: Mohammed Ebn Yufef Al Farbâri, so denominated from Farbâr, a town in the territory of Bokhara, placed by some of the eastern writers at a small distance from the Oxus, where he was born in the year of the Hejra 231, (who had been acquainted with the famous Al Bokhari) and Abu Jaafar Ahmed Ehn Mohammed Al Azili, the principal of the sect of Abu Hanifa in Egypt, two men of great piety and erudition, also departed this life, the present year. We must not forget to observe, that the Khalif Al Kaher commanded the heads of the conspirators to be exposed to public view in all the principal streets of Baghdad n.

Al Kâher

THE next year, being the 322d of the Hejra, commencis deposed, ing December 22d, 933, Ebn Moklab excited the Sajians and Hujarians to a revolt against Al Kaber, by infinuating to their leaders, that he had broken his word with regard to Balik, his fon Ali, Ahmed Ebn Zairac, and Mûnes, whom he had put to death, after he had promised them their lives, and taken them under his protection; that he had ferved many other persons of transcendent merit in the same manner; and that, in short, they themselves had great reason to be asraid of his perfidious conduct. Secret conferences were likewife held between him and Sima, general of the Sajians and Hajarians, who had all the Turkifb militia at his devotion: whom he fometimes visited in women's cloaths, fometimes in the habit of a common beggar, and at others in that of a blind mendicant; wherein the plan of operations relative to the deposition of the Khalif was gradually settled and adjusted. Not content with this, he also made a present to Sima's astrologer of 200 dinars, and another to his interpreter of dreams, engaging them thereby to affift him in the execution of this plan, and by their predictions and interpretations to inspire the general himself with such sentiments as might impel him to act with vigour in the affair. The former of these, therefore, assured Sima, that his horoscope indicated a violent death to him on the part of the Kbalif; and the latter, that his dreams pointed out to him the same thing. This so alarmed and terrified Sima, that, in his desence, he resolved to drive Al Kaber from the throne as foon as possible; of which the Visir being informed, he fent Salam, or Salama, the Khalif's chamberlain, and Isa, his physician, to apprize him of the danger he was in. But Al Kaber having spent the greatest part of the night in carousing, and being then asleep, upon their arrival at the palace, they were not permitted to see him. Soon after this, the Sajians and Hajarians forced their way into the palace, possessed themselves of every apartment there, and by the noise they made on this occasion awaked him; when, being struck with terror, he hid himself under the roof, or covering, of a bagnio, where he for a short time lay concealed. But the rebels foon discovered him, took him from thence, deprived him of the use of his eyes with a red-hot iron, threw him into prison, and plundered the city of Bagbdad. A little before his deposition, he put to death Ishak Al Nubakhti, who had been so instrumental in his elevation to the Khalifat. Al Kaber was deposed on Wednelday, the fixth of the former Jomada, after he had reigned about one year and feven months, and was succeeded by Abmed Abu'l Abbas Ebn Al Moktader, surnamed Al Radi, or Al Radi Bi'llah; he himself, according to Al Makin, having been the first who saluted him Khalif. However, if we will believe Abulfeda, he could not be prevailed upon, by any means whatfoever, to abdicate, before proper witnesses, the Kbalifat. Al Küber remained in a state of confinement till the latter Rabi, in the year of the Hejra 333, when the Khalîf Al Mottaki released him, and sent him home, After he had recovered his liberty, he was reduced to such extreme poverty, that he found himself obliged to beg on Fridays at the door of the great mosque in Bagbdad. The son of Abu Mûsa Al Hâsbemi once gave him a thousand dirbems there. Another person, according to Al Makin, at a certain time saw him in rags addressing himself to the people, that resorted to the mosque of Al Mansur, in the following terms: " Remember him who was formerly your Khalif, and is now reduced to the necessity of asking you for alms." He died either in the 338th, or the 339th, year of the Hejra; being then, according to some, fifty-two, or, as others will have it, fifty-five, years of age; and was buried in the house of Ebn Thaher. He was rash, cruel, avaricious, and a person of a very iniquitous conduct. His Wazîrs, or Visirs, were Ebn Meklah, Mohammea Ebn Al Kasem Ebn Abd allah, Ahmed Ebn Abd allah Al Hasani, and Isa; and his chamberlains Baik, Ali Ebn Balik, and Salama Al Tolûni. The first day of his reign was Thursday, and the last Wednesday; but the inscription of his feal has not been handed down to us. We must beg leave to remark here, that Sa'îd Ebn Batrîk, a native of Al Fostât, was constituted patriarch of Alexandria, and received the name of Anha Eutychius, the 8th of Safar, the preceding year, being the 321st of the Hojra, and the first of Al.Kaher's reign. He was at first a physician, of the Melchite persuasion, and, at the time of his promotion, about fixty years of age o.

MIRKHOND writes, that the Khallf Al Kaber owed his advancement to Mûnes, the eunuch, who had been his mafter and governor; but that he foon forgot his obligations to that general, and ordered him, together with many other fervants of the Khalif Al Moktader, to be put to death. The fame author likewise observes, that Mûnes was a person of an extraordinary fize; and that his head was so large, that his brains, being taken out of it, after it had been cut off, weighed fix pounds of Baghdad; upon which, a Persian poet thought sit to remark, that the larger any head was, the greater number of infirmities it was subject to. After this execution, continues that historian, the dependents and domestics of Yusef Ebn Abu'l Saj, excited a tumult in Baghdad, during which, they talked of placing Abu Abmed Ebn Al Mostafi upon the Mostem throne. Al Kaher, having been apprized of this, commanded Abu Abmed to be brought before him; and, after having fent him into the Haram, the most retired part of the palace where the women lived, ordered him to be nailed with four nails to the wall of one of the chambers there; tho', according to fome of the Arab writers, this poor prince was only immured in that place, where he foon after ended his days. Whilft Abu Abmed was in this wretched fituation, Al Kaher fent for one Abu Yabya, a man of the gown, who was very rich, and told him he wanted 200,000 dinars. Abu Yahya declared to the Kha-If, that he was not able to supply him with so large a fum. Upon which, that prince said to him, " Abu Ahmed, who is within here, affured me that you could, and he would ad-" vise you to do it." Abu Yahya then stepped into the room where Abu Ahmed was confined, and, to his infinite furprize, faw him there nailed to the wall. This fight Aruck him with fuch terror, that he immediately furnished Al Kâher with the money demanded of him, and by that means maintained himself in the possession of all his dignities and employments P.

Ifa Ebrí Yusef Ebn Al Senân bet Ebn Korra swere Al Kâher's principal de la constitución

AMONGST the learned men that flourished in Al Kaher's reign, we may rank Isa, already mentioned here, and Senan Ebn Thâbet Ebn Korrab, likewise taken notice of above, both Attar and of them physicians to that prince. Isa was the son of one Yusef, who went under the name of Ebn Al Attar, and was a Ebn Tha- great favourite of the Khalif he had the honour to serve. Such confidence did Al Kaher repose in Isa, that he frequently sent by him his commands to the Vifir, and imparted many secrets to him. As for Senân Ebn Thabet, he likewise had good interest with his master; but was not so much esteemed by him as was Isa Ebn Yusef Ebn Al Attar. However, the Kbalts.

being now and then not a little pleased with his conversation. pressed him to embrace Mohammedism; which, for some time, he stifly refused, but, as he was extremely afraid of Al Kaber's ferocity, he at last agreed to do it, and accordingly profeffed himself a Moslem. After which, he continued, during a certain term, in the Khalif's service; but being often terrified by Al Kâber's commands, he found himself obliged to fly into Khorafan, from whence he afterwards returned to Baghdâd, where he died in the 331st year of the Hejra. The following merry ftory has been told of this Senan by Abu'l-Faraj. The Khalif once commanded him to examine the physicians of Baghdad, in order to discover their abilities, and see whether or no they imposed upon his subjects. Soon after he had received this order, a person of gravity and a very good aspect, exceedingly well dreffed, came to him to be examined : upon which, Senan, having first paid his respects to him in a proper manner, defired him to give a specimen of his skill in physic, and to name the doctor who had instructed him in that art. Upon this, the other took a paper out of his fleeve, that contained in it a certain number of dinars, laid it down before Senda, and frankly told him that he knew nothing at all of the matter; that he could neither write nor read; but that, as he Supported himself and his family by his practice, he begged he would not ruin him, by telking the truth to the Khalif. To this Senda, who could not forbear laughing at what he heard, replied, that he would not expose him, provided he would promile never to attend a patient whose distemper he did not understand, and that he would neither prescribe phlebotomy nor cathartics in any cases but such as were perfectly well known to him. This the doctor readily agreed to, faying at the fame time, that he never ventured beyond oxymel and a julep, when he prescribed to his patients; and immediately left The next day, a young physician of an agreeable mien, in a neat and decent dress, waited upon Senan, who asked him to whom he was obliged for his knowlege in the art he professed. The other answered, "To my father." "Who "is your father?" faid Senân. "The doctor," replied the young man, "who was with you yesterday." "A noble doctor, truly!" replied Senán. "Do you," continued he, "prescribe in the fame manner?" "Always," returned the young physician. "Take care then," faid Senda, "that you go on as you 46 have done, improve in your profession as your father does, that he may have a fon as like him (rather than go in peace, as Dr. Pocock has translated the original Arabic here) as posse fible." All Senan's works are held in great efteem. He was an excellent astronomer, and one who had rendered himself famous throughout the east. Nor is this to be wondered at, fince the Sabians, whose religion both he and his ancestors professed, cultivated the study of astronomy above any other sect or nation, during the period we are now upon. As the Khalif Al Kâber obliged Senân to embrace Mahammedism, he has been surnamed Al Kâberi, or the Kâberian, by some of the oriental writers 9.

Al Radi is A Fruz the deposition of Al Kaber, his nephew Abu'l Abbas proclaim- Abmed Ebn Al Moktader, surnamed Al Radi, or Al Radi M Khalif. Billab, was taken out of the prison where he had been confined by that prince, and placed upon the Moslem throne. This happened on the fixth of the former Jomada, the very day his uncle was deposed. The new Khelif's mother was denominated Talum, according to Al Makin. Upon his accession, Ali Ebn I/a petitioned for the post of Vifir; but the new Khalif told him, that Ebn Moklab was better qualified to take upon himself the government of the empire, in the present critical fituation of affairs; and therefore he conferred upon him that arduous charge. About this time, Mardawij Ebn Ramaz, the king, or prince, of Deylam, overthrew, in several engagements, Ma bean Ebn Mâli, took Amid, or Amed, in Mesepetamia, and possessed himself of the province of Tabrestan; Motahar Ata a, the Kballf's lieutenant of Kherafan, not being able to make head against him there. It appears from some of the eastern writers, that Al Kaber, a little before he was deposed, granted to Mardautj Ebn Ramax the investiture of Ray, Markeb, Zanjan, and Abbar, upon condition that he reflored the city of Esfaban, from whence his brother Wasmakin had driven the famous Ali Abu'l Hasan Amade'ddawla Ebn Bûiya a little before. With this proposal Mardawij immediately closed, and recalled his brother from Esfaban; but soon after receiving advice, that Al Kaber was deposed, and his nephew Al Radi advanced to the Khalifat, he sent Wasmakin with all possible expedition to seize again upon that city, and to secure to himself, without delay, the possession of Ray, Abwez, and Fars. He also concluded a treaty of peace with Amade'ddawla Ebn Búiya; the principal article of which was, that each party should keep possession of what he had made him-

cuas, the imperial general, invaded the Moslem territories, and took the city of Malatia, after a long and obstinate siege, the first day of the latter Jomada, the present year. After the furrender of the place, he fent a detachment of his troops to conduct the Moslem garison, that had made a brave defence, to one of the Kbalif's fortresses, and reduced a large extent of territory to the obedience of the emperor. Abu Mobammed Obeid allah Al Mobdi, the first of the Fâtemite Khalifs of Kairwan, died the 14th of the former Rabi, after he had reigned twenty-four years, three months, and fix days, the present year; being at the time of his death (C) about fiftythree, or, according to Abulfeda, fixty-three, years of age. He was succeeded by his son Abu'l Kasem Mohammed, surnamed Al Kayem, who was created Khalif at Al Mobdia, the day his father expired; though the Moslems of Sicily, for near fix months, heard nothing of this remarkable event. Nay, if we will believe Abulfeda, the new Khalif, for reasons of state, concealed his father's death a whole year. About the same time, Abu Ali Mohammed Al Rudbâri and Al Hosein Ebn Abd'allab Al Nassaj (or the weaver), two of the principal Sûfis, as well as Abu Noaim Al Jorjani Al Astarabadi and Mohammed Ebn Ali Ebn Jaafar Al Kattâni, a celebrated scholar of Al Jonaid, two very learned men, departed this life. We are told by Abulfeda and the Cambridge Chronicon, that Abu'l Kafem fent a body of his troops into Italy, that reduced the city of Genoa, and made a descent upon the island of Sardinia, the following year '.

(C) Erpenius, in his Latin version of Al Makin, makes Al Mabdi to have been 53 years old at the time of his decease; whereas, according to the original Arabic, both in the Oxford manuscript, and that which he translated, this prince was only thirty years of age when he died. However, it must be owned, that Al Makin (3), or rather the historian he follows, affirms the founder of the dynasty of the Fâtemites to have been bern in the year of the Hejra 269, and consequently to have been about sity-three years old at the time of his death. Notwithstanding which, Abulfeda (4) and Ebn Sbobnab (5) make the 322d year of the Hejra, in which he died, to have been coincident with the 63d year of his age.

BEFORE We conclude our account of the transactions of the year of the Hejra 322, it must be observed, that the famous, or rather infamous, Mohammed Elm Ali Al Shalmagani, so denominated from Shalmagan, a town in the territory of Wafet, the place of his nativity, was crucified, together with Ibrahim Ebn Abu Awn, one of his disciples, for the impious opinions he maintained. This impostor held, that as much of the Deity resided in created beings, and particularly men. as their respective capacities would admit; that every human foul passed from one body to another, through an indefinite and indeterminate feries of ages; and that Ali was the most excellent of mortals, nay that he was either God himself, or at least a partaker of the divine nature, and extremely like him. Al Shalmagani, with many of his followers, kept himfelf for some time concealed; but at last, in the month of Shawal, this year, he came out of his lurking-place, and endeavoured to poison the minds of the Kbalif's subjects with his impious tenets. Being brought before Ebn Moklah, upon whom Al Radi, at Sima's persuasion, had conferred the post of Wazir, he denied the erroneous opinions laid to his charge; though he owned, that his followers afferted God to have taken up his refidence in him. Ebn Mobilab, not fatisfied with what he alleged in his defence, fent him, for farther examination, to the Khalif; Ibrahim Ebn Abu Awn and Mehammed Ebn Abdûs, two of his disciples, at the same time attending him. Upon the appearance of these impostors before the Khalif, he commanded Ebn Abu Awn and Ebn Abdis to best Al Shalmagani with their fifts, though they had not scrupled to attribute divinity to him; which the latter of them, with no small reluctance, did, though the other, instead of doing it, kiffed his head and his beard, crying out, " My Supporter, my Lord, and my God! Al Shalmagani was then asked, whether he had not a little before denied, that he ever arrogated to himself divine honours? to which he answered in the affirmative, and seemed to blame Ebn Abu Awn for his extravagant conduct. However, being at last, on a certain day, examined by all the great doctors of the law, he was by them judged worthy of death; and, in consequence of the sentence then passed upon him, he was, with Ebn Abu Awa, executed, in the month of Dhu'lkagda, at Bagbdad. After the execution, the bodies of both of them were reduced to albes, in order to inspire the populace with the greater abhorrence of their impiety. For a more particular account of all the blasphemous tenets propagated by Al Shalmagani and his followers, as well as the Sufis, who were at least very nearly related to them, we must beg leave to refer our curious readers to the authors cited here '.

In the year of the Hejra 323, beginning December 11th, The prin-934, Mardawij Ebn Ramax, or Ebn Zayyar, the king of Dey- cipal lam, who had made himself master of Al Jebal, and other ad-events of Jacent provinces, was affaffinated by some of the Turks in his the year service, and succeeded by his brother Wasmakin, Washmakin, or 323. Washmakir. But of this we shall give our readers a more particular and circumstantial account hereaster. The same year, Abu Thâher, the Karmatian general, and prince of Hajr, plundered a caravan, and put a great number of pilgrims to the fword. Abu Mobammed Nasero'ddawla Ebn Abd'allab Ebn Hamdan likewise delivered up to his brother Ali Abu'l Hasan Saifo'ddawla Mayafarkin, or Mayyafarakin, and Diyar Beer, the present year. About the same time, Amado'ddawla Ali Ebn Bûyia possessed himself of Esfahan, and proposed afterwards to reduce to his obedience Hamadan, Komm, Kasban, Karaj, Al Ray, Kazwin, Kenkewar, and all the territories of Wasmakin. In the month of either the former or latter Jomada, the troops mutinied at Baghdad, broke open the house of Ebn Moklah, Al Râdi's Wazîr, and obliged him and his son to fly over the Tigris into the western town; though the commotion, raised by them on this occasion, was afterwards appeased. The same year, died Ibrahim Ebn Mohammed Ebn Arafab, commonly called Nafthuyah, descended from the farmous Al Mohalleb Ebn Abu Safra, who had formerly been the Khalif's governor of Khorafan. He bore the character of a most celebrated grammarian, and was born in the year of the Hejra 244. Abu Becr Mohammed Ebn Ta'j, or Mohammed Ebn Tagaj, surnamed Al Akhshid, subjugated also Egypt, which he entered in the month of Ramadan, and annexed it to the opulent province of Syria, which he had before wrested out of the Khalif's hands. Several violent shocks of an earthquake were felt in Egypt, the third of Dhu'lkaada, foon after Anha Theodofius, or Stephen, who had been with Mûnes, the eunuch, at Bagbdad, was constituted patriarea of Antioch in Syria. About the same time, many of those meteors called falling stars, of a very remarkable kind, likewife appeared in Egypt. This year, the followers of the famous Ahmed Ebn Hanbal, who were now become very numerous, raised a great commotion in Baghdad, entering people's houses, spilling their wine, if they found any, beating the finging-women they met with, and breaking their instruments.

We must not forget to observe, that Rendalb, the Moslem governor of Tabermin, or Taermina, died there the preceding year; nor that the Cambridge Chronicon mentions a dreadful tempest and inundation, as happening at Palerme in Sicily, and destroying many men and houses there, in that we are now upon 5.

THE following year, being the 324th of the Hejra, commencing Nov. 30th, 935, the Khalif Al Radi, finding himself pressed on all fides by the usurpers who had dismembered superior to the Moslem empire, and reduced to great straits by the incapacity of his Vifit, created Abu Becr Mehammed Ebn Rayek Emir Al Omra (D), or affigned him the charge of commandant of commandants, which the title of Emir Al Områ, that is, the Emir of Emirs, or the supreme Emir, imports. This great officer, or rather prime minister, was trusted with the administration of all military affairs, and had the intire management of the finances, in a much more absolute and unlimited manner than any of the Khalif's Vifers, committed to him. Nay, he officiated for the Khalif in the great mosque at Baghdad, and had his name mentioned in the public divine fervice throughout the empire. In a word, Al Râdi was intirely governed by this Abu Becr Mohammed Ebn Rayek and his fecretary, infomuch that he could not take out of the treafury a fingle dinar for his own use, without their permission. As for Ebn Moklab, who was a person of considerable abilities, though not equal to the post in which he had been placed, the Khalif left him for some time in possession of the charge of Vifir; but at last, on account of his shuffling and pragmatical disposition, he found himself obliged to dismiss him. Ebn Rayek came from Waset, over the people of which city he then prefided as governor, or rather fovereign, the 25th of Dhu'lbajja, to Bagbdad. Soon after which, he appointed Ahmed Ebn

Ali of Gafa his secretary of state. Abulfeda relates, that the Hajarians, with Al Modhaffer Ebn Yakut at their head, deposed Ebn Moklah, and after him Ali Ebn Isa, Abd'alrahman Ebn Isa, and Abu Jaafar Ebn Al Kasem, whom they had succesfively appointed to officiate as Vifir, within the space of a few months. He also writes, that Ebn Royek, who had assumed to himself the sovereignty of Waset and Basra, Al Baridi, who had seized upon Ahwaz, and the other governors of provinces, having refused to send their respective tributes to Baghdâd, the Khalif's treasury was quite exhausted, insomuch that he found himself obliged to employ Ebn Rayek, who had amassed considerable sums, as the Emir Al Omra; which put the government of the Moslem empire, without any restriction or referve, into his hands. The same author likewife intimates, that he disarmed the Sajians immediately after his arrival at Bagbdad; which inspired the Hajarians with an aversion to him. Mohammed Ebn Tagaj, and some of his officers, affembled a body of troops at Barka, whither they had been obliged to retire out of Egypt, with which they returned to Alexandria, drove the garison of that city to the river of Rashid, pursued them thither, and intirely defeated them. Many of the Egyptians were killed in the action, and most of the rest taken prisoners; after which, the citizens of Alexandria, that had been forced to abandon the place, returned home. About the same time, Al Râdi granted the investiture of Egypt, in the fullest and most solemn manner, to Al Akhshid, and recalled Ahmed Ebn Keigalag from that country. This year, Adado'ddawla Abu Shaja' Fanakhofrû Ebn Rocno'ddawla Al Hasan Ebn Bûiya, afterwards lord, or king, of Perfia, was born at Esfahân; and, before the close of it, Hajaza Al Barmaki, descended from Yahya Ebn Khâled Ebn Barmak, or Barmac, extremely well versed in various parts of learning, Abd'allah Ebn Ahmed Ebn Mohammed, surnamed Ebn Al Moftest, the author of a great number of books of good repute, and the Imam Abd'allah Ebn Mohammed Al Nisabûri, a follower of the famous Al Shâfei, born in the 238th year of the Hejra, departed this life. An east-wind, that blew with great violence in Sicily the 11th of July, utterly destroyed the vintage there. From this time the office of Visir became only a nominal post, the Emir Al Omra continuing to govern the Khaltfat with an absolute sway, till the power of the Seljúkians, or oriental Turks, began to decline at Baghdad t.

An ingloed with Aba Thâher.

THE next year, being the 325th of the Moslem zera, Ebn rious trea-Rayek, who possessed the charge of Entir Al Omra, and, in by conclud consequence thereof, had the intire direction of the state, concluded a treaty of peace with Abu Thâher, prince of the Karmatians, who had made himself master of Cufa, by no means glorious to the Khalif. For, the principal article of this treaty was, that Ebn Rayek should remit the Karmatian from Bagbdid the annual sum of 120,000 dinars. However, Abu Thâber, in confideration of this tribute, engaged never for the future to moleft the caravans of pilgrims in their passage to Mecca u.

THE same year, Ebn Rayek, and the Khalif in person, marched with a powerful army to Waset, in order to drive tributary from thence the rebel Abu Abd'allah Al Baridi, who had seized upon that city. Al Bartdi, finding himself not in a condition to make head against the Khalif's forces, purchased a peace of Al Râdi, by submitting to pay a monthly tribute of 30,000 dinars. But, after the Khalif's departure to Baghdad, he rebelled again, took Basra, together with the district belonging to it, and in a short time grew more powerful than he was before w.

But Al Baridi, finding himself not in a condition to Basra, and oppose Yahcam, fled at his approach; upon which, Waset, Abwaz, and Bafra, immediately submitted to the Khalif's forces, and Ebn Rayek appointed Yahcam to prefide over Abwax in quality of governor, who thereupon engaged himself to pay an annual tribute to the Khalif of 38,000 dinars. After Al Baridi had been driven from Waset, Abwaz, and Basra, he took fanctuary at Amado'ddawla Ali Ebn Bûiya's court; who fent his brother Meezzo'ddawla Ahmed Ebn Bûiya with him, attended by a strong body of troops, to dislodge Yahcam from his new acquisitions, the following year. The Mostems, about this time, plundered the church of the resurrection at Jerusalem, and reduced a considerable part of it to ashes; one Christopher, a native of Askalon, or Ashkelon, being then the patriarch there. The same year, died Abd'allah Ehn Mehammed Al Kharraz, a grammarian, who wrote a pretty large commentary upon the Korân. drove Ebn Amran from Calata-Bellotta, called by the Arabs Ka'lat-Al-Bellut, and pillaged the garison of that place. Emîr Sâlem, receiving advice of what had happened, marched against the insurgents with an army of Sicilians and Cottâmians, or Catâmians, a very powerful and warlike Arab, or Moorish, nation, and laid slege to Afrab, or Ofrab; of which the Gergentines being informed, they advanced to the besiegers camp, engaged the Emir's forces, on Saturday, June 24th, and overthrew them with incredible flaughter. A prodigious number of the Cottâmians, together with Abu Dekak, their general, perished in the action. After this defeat, they made excursions as far as the gates of Palermo, and even attempted to form the siege of that city. For which purpose, they advanced to a place going under the name of Mesid Bâlis, not far from the town; but were repulsed by the inhabitants of Palermo with very confiderable loss; who, being supported by Al Emir Salem Ebn Al Rashid, and Al Maimún Ebn Mûsa, pursued them as far as Marnûa, and put many of them to the sword. This Emir had been appointed governor of the Moslem conquests in Sicily by Abu'l Kasem, or Al Kayem, the Khalif of Kairwan, and grievously oppressed the Sicilians, particularly the Gergentines, who could not bear his yoke, and therefore expelled the Moslem garison out of their city. This so enraged the African Khalif, that he fent an army to reduce them; which thut them in on all fides. cut off all communication between them and the other Sicilians, and reduced them to very great fraits. However, they found means to apply to the Greek emperor for affistance, who thereupon fent a body of his best troops to their relief; which enabled them to repulse the besiegers in all their asfaults, to destroy vast numbers of their men, and, in fine, to fustain a sharp and vigorous siege four whole years x.

THE provinces of the Khalifat at this time were divided in The Khafuch a manner amongst divers princes, that the Khalif pos- lif at this seffed only an appearance of pre-eminence in dignity, which time is regarded more the affairs of religion than those of the state. only in This will be sufficiently manifest from the following list of the possession of tyrants, or usurpers, who had set up for themselves, in diffe-

THE cities of Waset, Bases, and Cusa, with the rest of the Arabian Irak, were considered as the property or peculium of Ebn Rayek, the Emir Al Omra; though Al Baradi seized upon them, in the beginning of the present year.

THE country of Fârs, Farsistān, or Persia properly so called, was possessed by Amado dawla Ali Ebn Bûiya, the first prince or chief of the dynasty of the Bûiyans, who held his residence in the city of Shiraz.

PART of the tract denominated Al Jebâl, together with the remainder of the Persian Irâk, which is the mountainous part of Persia, and the country of the ancient Parthians, recognized for their master Rocno'ddawla, or Rucno'ddawla, Al Hasan Ebn Bâyia, the brother of Amado'ddawla Ali Ebn Bâiya, who resided at Esfabân.

THE other part of that country was possessed by Wasma-kin, Washmakin, or Washmakir, the Deylamite, the brother of Mardawij.

DIYAR RABIA, Diyar Beer, Diyar Modar, and the city of Al Mawfel, or Moful, acknowledged for their fovereigns the Hamdânites, or the princes of the race of Hamdân.

EGYPT and Syria no longer obeyed the Khalifs, but only Mohammed Ebn Ta'j, or Tagaj, surnamed Al Akh/hid, who had been formerly appointed governor of those provinces by the ame Khalifs.

AFRICA had been subjugated by the Fâtemites, who had thased from thence the Aglabites, governors of the city of Kairwan and its dependencies for the Khaliss. The master of that country at this time was Al Kayem Abu'l Kasem Ebn Obei-d'allah Al Mehdi, whose successors sounded a new Khalisat in Egypt.

SPAIN, or at least the Moslem part of it, was governed by Abd alrahman Al Nafr Ebn Mohammed, of the house of Ommiyah, who soon after this time assumed the title of Emir Al Mamenan, prince, king, or emperor, of the faithful, which was peculiar to the Khalifs.

THE Moslem provinces in Sicily, except the city of Gergenti, whose inhabitants had expelled the Magrebian garison, had for their immediate governor Al Emir Sâlem Ebn Al Rashed, who was the Khalif of Kairwân's lieutenant there.

THE Moslem territories in Crete owned for their sovereign one who probably was a descendant of Apochapsus, or Abu Kabs, the Spanish Magrebian admiral, who reduced that island, about the year of our LORD 812.

THE provinces of Khorafan and Mawara'lnabr, or the Transoxana, were under the domination of Al Nasr Ebn Abmed, of the dynasty of the Sammanians.

THE provinces of Tabrestan, Jorjan, or Georgiana, and Mazanderan, had kings of the first dynasty of the Deplamites.

THE province of Kerman was occupied by Abu Ali-Mohammed Ebn Eyliâ, or Elias, Al Sammani, who had made himself master of it, before the commencement of the present year.

AND, lastly, the provinces of Yamama and Bahrein, including the district of Hajr, were in the possession of Aba Thâber, the Karmatian.

HENCE it appears, that, in the 325th year of the Hejra, the Khalif Al Radi, or rather Abu Beer Mebammed Ebn Rayek, the Emir Al Områ, kept possession of only the city of Baghdâd, and its dependencies; scarce even the very shadow of fovereignty remaining in any other part of the empire to him, 'Tis true, at first the name of the Khallf was revered by the princes, who had fet up for themselves, in all the provinces, mentioned in the mosques, during the time of public service there, throughout the empire, and imprest upon the current coin. But their veneration for him being gradually diminished, the princes, or Emirs, confidered him only as the great Imâm, or sovereign pontiff of the religion of the Moslems, who had nothing more to do than to perform divine service, harangue the people in the great mosque at Baghdad, and decide certain points of right; in the last of which particulars his power was likewise very much limited. 'Tis also true, that the same Khalifs, in process of time, thook off the yoke of these Emirs, and afferted their independency on them. But notwithstanding this, their power gradually declined, and was scarce the shadow of what it had formerly been, from the period we are now upon to the taking of Baghdad by the Tartars, or Moguls, who intirely abolished the Khalifat v.

In the 326th year of the Hejra, beginning Nov. 8th, 937, Ebn Ebn Moklah, who, after the amotion of Abd airahman Ebn I/a Moklah and Al Fadl Ebn Jaafar from that post, had been re-established is removed in the charge of Visir, wrote, on the part of the Khalif Al Râdi, from the a letter to Yahcam, the Turk, telling him that now it was time post of for him to advance to Baghdâd at the head of a body of troops, in order to deliver the Khalisfat from the tyranny of Ebn Râyek, and to occupy his place. But this letter having been intercepted, Ebn Râyek discovered to the Khalis the treason of the Visir, who had dared to write such a letter to Yahcam, without his master's knowledge, and even against his express orders. Ebn Moklah, upon his appearing before the Khalif, at first denied the fact; but the letter in his own hand-writing being produced against him, he was found guilty of what had been laid to his charge, fent immediately to prison, brought afterwards to his trial, and condemned by the judges to have his right hand cut off, for having committed fo heinous a crime. When sentence was pronounced, he complained bitterly of the feverity of it, and of the iniquity of cutting off the right hand of a man who had invented the most beautiful character that had ever been in use amongst the Arabs, had written several copies of the Korân, the book held in the highest veneration and esteem amongst the Moslems, in so elegant a manner that they passed for master-pieces in the art of writing, and had finally been Visir to three successive Khalifs. Nor did he content himself with bare complaints. He inveighed bitterly against the judges, Ebn Râyek, and the Khalîf himself. Wherefore, the executioner, in pursuance of the sentence that had been passed upon him, did not only deprive him of his right hand, but likewise, some days afterwards, cut out his tongue. After which, he was confined in one of the dungeons belonging to the imperial palace. (E) The passage here referred to in Al Makîn, Yekâl annabe labako darb, has been translated by Erpenius," Aiunt autem illicapud " eum fuisse puteum;" whereas it ought to have been rendered, " Aiunt autem magnam eum " prehendisse miseriam (vel an-" gustiam)" in conformity to the parallel passage in Abu'l-Faraj (8), Walabako sbaka shaddid ela an mât," Et magna eum pre-" hendit miseria, donec morere-" tur." Which passages imply, that Ebn Moklab was reduced in prison to a state of great misery, and continued in such a state to the time of his death. Mr. Guise (9) has the following marginal note on Erpenius's translation of these words of Al Makin: " Hæc " non fignificant voces Arabicæ; " videntur potius idem valere " quod apud Abul Pharagi" (rectiùs Abul-Faraj) " de codem-" Magnaque miseria afflictus est, " donec moreretur." And that this observation is just, as well as our translation of the foregoing words of Al Makin, seems to be clearly evinced by Abu'lfedu (10), when he relates, " that to Ebn " Moklab's other MISERIES was " added a diarrhœa; of which, " not being allowed the use of " a servant, be miserably pe-"rished." Other arguments might be offered, would the li-was by him with his left hand and his mouth. He died, according to Al Makin, in the month of Shawal 329, or, as Abu'lfeda will have it, in the year 338, and was no less than three times interred; first, in the prison where he died, afterwards in his fon Abu'l Hasan's house, and lastly in bis own. He is faid likewise to have written three copies of the Koran that in beauty surpassed all the rest, and to have performed three times the pilgrimage to Mecca. It has also been remarked, that when he beat Ebn Sibúd for reading to him in a careless manner, that reader wished he might lose his hand; which afterwards came to pass. We are informed by Abu'l-Faraj, that Ebn Moklah wrote a letter to the Khalif himself, advising him therein to dismiss Ebn Râyek, and all his adherents, and telling him, that this would bring into his coffers 3,000,000,000 dinars. But the Khalif, continues that writer, communicated the contents of this letter, in which Ebn Moklab likewise pressed him to confer the post of Emîr Al Omrâ upon Yahcam, to Ebn Râyek; which, at last, proved the total ruin of the Visir. A specimen of his poetical performances, which were tolerably good, has been preserved by Al Makin. Notwithstanding what has been here observed, a certain writer affirms, that not Ebn Moklab, but his brother Abd allah Al Hasan was the inventer of the modern Arabic character; though this was brought to a greater degree of perfection by Ali Ebn Bowab, who flourished in the following century, and reduced to its present form by Yakût Al Mostásemi, secretary to the Khalîf Al Mostásem, the last of the Khalifs of the house of Al Abbas 2.

THE deposition and imprisonment of Ebn Moklah for the Yahcam present occasioned a sort of calm, though Ebn Râyek was by seizes upon no means hereby secured in the possession of his charge. For, Baghdâd, Yahcam, resolving not to lose the opportunity offered him by and forces the treason of the Visir, advanced at the head of his troops into the Khalist the territory of Baghdâd, overthrew the Khalist's forces under to make the command of Ebn Râyek, and made himself master of that bim Emîr capital. This obliged Ebn Râyek to betake himself to slight, Al Omrâ, and to abandon the post of Emr Al Omrâ, which was immediately occupied by Yahcam. The Khalif himself, however, gained nothing by this change; still living in an intire dependence on his minister, and even without the least appearance of authority. The affairs of the Karmatians this year were in a very declining condition, infomuch that Abu Thaber found it extremely difficult to maintain himself in the possession of Hajr. We must not forget to observe, that Moezze'ddawla Abmed Ebn Bûiya took Abwaz in the beginning of the campaign, and put Bafra once more into the hands of Al Baridi; though he could not possess himself of Waset. Here Yabcam still kept his ground, forced Meezzo'ddawle to retire, and afterwards drove Ebn Rayek from Baghdad. Upon Yahcam's expulsion of his predecessor from the Khalif's councils, after he had remained in the sublime post of Emîr Al Omra one year, ten months, and fixteen days, he himself immediately entered upon that charge, and made Mobammed Ebn Yabya Ebn Sbîrazêd his secretary of state, This year, the Sicilians, under the conduct of Ebn Al Sabayah and Abu Tar, revolted against Al Emir Salem; but were routed by him Sept. 17th, though he lost one of his principal officers in the action, named Abu Nattar Al Aswad, who seems to have been of Moorish or Magrebian extraction. Several of the ringleaders, that fell into his hands, the Emir ordered to be impaled the 20th of the same month, to deter others from joining the revolters; but this severity produced a quite contrary effect. For the Sicilians, being exasperated at Salem's cruelty, assembled a numerous army, and engaged the Magrebian forces, commanded by the Emîr in person, October 7th, with very great bravery; but, after an obstinate dispute. they were intirely defeated, and purfued as far as the gates of Palermo, which the victors entered without opposition, and immediately formed the fiege of the citadel there. Abu'l Kasem. or Al Kayem, the Khalif of Kairwan, having received advice of this rebellion, fent Khalil with a powerful fleet, and a strong body of land-forces on board, to extinguish it. Khalil foon arrived on the coast of Sicily, made a descent with his troops, took possession of the city of Palermo, Oct. 23d, and intirely dismantled it; which so incensed the Gergentines, that they fallied upon the Kballf of Kairwan's troops with such courage, that they put them to flight, killed many of them upon the spot, amongst which were Ebn Abu Harir and Ali Ebn Abu'l Hosein, Salem's son-in-law, two officers of distinction. and dispersed the rest in such a manner that they could never afterwards rally. But, notwithstanding this blow, Khalit continued the siege of Gergenti; though, for the space of eight months, he could make little or no impression upon the town. It must be remembered, that the Moslems concluded a treaty of peace with the Greeks, by one article of which a mutual release of prisoners was agreed upon, the present year 2.

In the 327th year of the Hejra, the Khalif Al Radi, with The transa powerful army, commanded by Yahcam, marched against allions of Nasero'ddawla Ebn' Abd' allah Ebn Hamdan, who presided over the year of the people of Diyar Rabia, Diyar Becr, and Al Mawsel, or the Hejra Moful, overthrew him with very great flaughter, and pursued 327. him to the gates of Al Mawsel; to which city he afterwards laid siege, and obliged Nasero'ddawla to fly to Amed; but whilst the Khalif was engaged in this expedition, Ebn Râyek appeared at the head of a body of troops in the neighbourbood of Baghdad; of which Yahcam being informed, he concluded a peace with Nasero'ddawla Ebn Abd'allah Ebn Hamdan, on condition that he paid him an annual tribute of 500,000 dinárs. In order to pacify Ebn Ráyek, he also put him in poficifion of Harran, Al Rohâ, or Edessa, Al Awasem, Kinnisrin, and feveral districts bordering upon the Euphrates. This year, Abu Thaher, prince of the Karmatians, permitted the caravans of pilgrims, together with the escorte that attended them, to pass, for the first time since the year 319, out of Syria to Mecca; though he obliged them to pay, for this permission, the sum of 25,000 dinars. Omayyah Ebn Ishak, according to Abu'lfeda, rebelled against Abd'alrahman Al Nasa Ebn Mohammed, the Emir, or lord, of Andalusia, in the city of Shantarin, the present year. Ebn Ishak, being supported by a body of Gallician troops, defeated a Moslem army, that was fent against him; but, in a second engagement, he was overthrown by Abd'alrahman's forces, and lost the greatest part of his men; which obliged him to submit immediately, upon the terms prescribed, to the Emîr. Abd'alrahmân Ebn Abu Hâtem Al Râzi, the author of the piece, intituled, Al Harjo wa Al Tadilo, and Abu'l Donya Othmân Ebn Al Khattab Al Ashajjo, two famous traditionists, as likewise Mohammed Ebn Jaafar, of Jaffa, or Joppa, a celebrated author, and Abu'l Kasem Abd'allah Ebn Ahmed Ebn Mahmud, commonly called Al Alani, the Motazalite, who entertained fe-- veral heterodox tenets, died before the close of this year. About the same time, Khalil, the Magrebian general, who commanded the Khalif of Kairwan's forces that carried on the siege of Gergenti, returned with the greatest part of his troops to Palermo, where he exacted a large sum of money of the inhabitants, by way of mulct, or fine, which he fent immediately to Africa. This enabled the Khallf to order him from thence a reinforcement; after the arrival of which in Sicily, he took Abûthâr, or Buteria, Al Sîrât, the Afforus, or Afforium, of the antients, and the modern Azaro, or Afaro, Asklafinah, or Sclafanum, and Kalbarah, all of them places of confiderable strength. He also advanced at the head of his army to Calata Bellotta, to form the fiege of that town; of which the Gergentines, to whom the preservation of that fortress was of the utmost consequence, receiving advice, they fell upon the beliegers with fuch fury, that they put a great number of them to the sword, and, as the Cambridge Chronicon seems to infinuate, forced the rest to abandon the siege. This action happened on the 10th of July, and proved so fatal to the Magrebian troops, that they durst not appear again in the neighbourhood of Calata Bellotta before the commencement of the following campaign b.

THE next year, being the 328th of the Hejra, Abu Becr Mohammed Ebn Râyek made himself master of Hems, Damascus, and Al Ramla; after which, he penetrated to Arish in Egypt. But here Mohammed Al Akhshîd Ebn Tagaj met him, and gave him battle, about the middle of the month of Ra-Ebn Rayek's troops behaved with such bravery in the beginning of the action, that they bore down all before them, and forced the Egyptians every-where to give way. But, instead of following their blow, and pursuing the fugitives with the ardour they ought to have done, they amused themselves with plundering their camp; upon which, a body of Al Akbshid's troops that had been placed in ambuscade, and observed the disorder they were in, rushed out upon them, and charged them with such fury, that they soon put them to slight. The greatest part of Ebn Râyek's forces were killed upon the spot, and the rest of them so effectually dispersed, that they could never afterwards rally; Ebn Râyek himself not having been able to make his escape to Damascus with above 70 men. After this, Elin Râyek deteated Abu Nastr (F), Al Akhshîd's bro-

(F) Abu Nafr himself, according to Abu'lfeda, was killed in the action; which so affected Ebn Râyek, that he sent an embassy to Al Akhshâd, to carry to that prince his compliments of condolence, and to assure him, that he had no hand in, and was extremely forry for, his brother's death. To which this author adds, that Ebn Ráyek sent his own son Mozabem to Al Akhshid, and defired that prince to sacrifice him to the manes of his brother, if he thought proper. But Al Akhshid, continues he, was so far from being acted by any vindictive ther, in the month of Dhu'lkaada, and put a vast number of his men to the sword. This victory was soon followed by a peace between Ebn Râyek and Al Akhshîd, by the principal articles of which the city of Al Ramla was ceded to Al Akhshîd, upon condition that he paid to Ebn Râyek the annual sum of 140,000 dinârs; and the latter of these Emirs remained in peaceable possession of the remaining part of Syria, which he had before in a great measure reduced by force of arms c. This year, Al Sabkari was killed in that part of Syria, or Al Sham, called by the Arabs Thogur; which seems to answer to the Syria Antiochena of the antients. About the same time, died Mohammed Al Calini, one of the Imamian Imams, generally denominated Ebn Shambûd, Al Mokri Mohammed Ebn Ahmed, and Abu Mohammed Al Mortaesh, a doctor of the Sufis; as also Abu Beer Mohammed Ebn Al Kasem, going for the most part under the name of Ebn Al Ambarek, a celebrated grammarian, and the author of the book intituled, Kitab Al Wacfi wa Al Ibtidai, a piece held in good esteem amongst the Moslems, who was born in the year of the Hejra Abu Omar Abmed Ebn Abd Rabbih Ebn Janib Al Corthobi likewise departed this life, before the close of the year we are now upon. His grandfather fanib, who was a native of Corduba, is said to have been first one of Helbam Ebn Abd'alrahman's flaves; though he had afterwards his liberty given him by that prince, who was the second Emîr of the house of Ommiyah that presided over the Moslems in Spain. As for Abu Omar, he was one of those learned men who spent their time chiefly in forming volumes of the traditions that had before been only committed to memory. The book that bears the title of Al Acd, or Al Akd, one of the most excellent of its kind, is a proof of his fingular merit. At the time of his death, he was about eighty-two lunar years of age d.

It appears from some of the authors followed by Al Makin, Sa'id that Sa'id Ebn Batrik, known also by the name of Anha Eu-Ehn Batychius, an excellent physician, and a native of Al Fostat, who trik, or had been advanced to the patriarchate of Alexandria in 321, Eutydied the present year. This author, who was a Melchite, be-chius, dies.

gan his annals with the creation of the world, and brought them down to the year of the Hejra 327. This work, intituled Nadbm Al Jawbar, a contexture of gems, or a firing of pearls, has been published with a Latin version by the famous Dr. Pocock, professor of the Hebrew and Arabic languages in the univerfity of Oxford, where it was printed in the year of our LORD 1656. We are told by M. Renaudot (G), that it is incomparably better than any general history to be met with amongst the Orientals; and that it has been followed not only by the Christian writers, but likewise by Al Makrizi, and other Mohammedan authors. Eutychius is also said to have composed a physical treatise, that bore the title of Kitâb fil thebb, and to have been extremely well versed in all the branches of literature then in vogue. Another piece has likewise been ascribed to him of the controversial kind, which was written against the Egyptian heretics, who gave him no small trouble, during the time that he sat in the patriarchal see of Alexandria, which was seven years and fix months. He was at last attacked by a diarrhoea, which from the beginning he judged would prove fatal to him, and therefore removed to Alexandria, where he died on Monday, the last day of the month Rajeb. His brother, Isa Ebn Ba-

(G) Our learned and polite readers will not expect, that we should here give any formal anfwer to the false and injurious reflection thrown out by M. Renaudot against Mr. Selden, whom he represents as intitely unacquainted with oriental history, and to his unpolite treatment of the great Dr. Pocock, to whom he affects to shew an apparent difregard, almost as often as he speaks of him. For, in order to expose such treatment of those shining ornaments of oriental literature as this, 'tis sufficient barely to mention it. We must, however, beg leave to observe, that M. Renaudot treats the very learned Job Ludolfus in much the fame manner; and that he scarce ever bestows encomiums upon any but some few of his own nation. This indicates a meanness of soul, which cannot fail of drawing down upon that writer the contempt of all men of real learning, who must be acted by more elevated fentiments, and indued with a more generous turn of mind. But, notwithstanding the high notion he eatertained of his own superior abilities, with regard to eastern literature, which discovers itself in almost every page of the book here referred to, were we disposed to recriminate, we might very justly remark, that scarce any piece of the same fize abounds more with inaccuracies, not to fay egregious blunders, than the performance he fo highly valued himself upon (12).

trik was likewise a physician of great note, on whose account he compiled the general history above-mentioned. Other books of confiderable erudition have likewise been attributed to him. The learned Dr. Cave and the abbot Martin la Farina took Eutychius to have been the author of the Chronicon Siculum, in the public library at Cambridge; which Arabic MS. formerly belonged to the famous Thomas Erpenius, and has been published, with a Latin version, by Joannes Baptista Carusius, a Sicilian writer. But that Entychius could not have been the author of this Chronicon, we may fairly infer from the following confiderations. First, the history itself ends with the year of Christ 965; whereas Eutychius died in the 328th year of the Heira, which nearly corresponds with the 040th of the Christian zera. Secondly, the compiler of it appears to have been a Sicilian, from the perfect knowledge he had of the cities, towns, and villages, of Sicily; and from his supputation of years, which exactly answers to that of the Sicifians, who begin their year on the first of September, in common with almost all the Greeks, and make the creation of the world to have preceded the birth of CHRIST 5508 years, not-5491, or 5492, as the church of Alexandria maintains. Thirdly, the person who penned the Chronicon makes use of only the Roman or Latin names of the months, and never computes by the years of the Hejra, as Eutychius does; which of itself sufficiently demonstrates, that this history ought not to be attributed to him. As the Cambridge manuscript is found at the end of a MS. copy of Eutychius's annals, we are not to be fo much surprised at what has been advanced by the learned men above-mentioned in the point before us; but we cannot for well account for the palpable mistake of Dr. Cave and Carusus, when they affert that Eutychius died in the year of our LORD 950, except we suppose that they never perused the Tarikh Al Moslemin, or the history of the Moslems, written by Al Makin, which has been so often referred to here d.

THE same year, Khalil with the Magrebian forces took post The transagain before Calata Bellotta, and formed a second time the adions in siege of that place; of which the Gergentines being apprized, Sicily this they sent a body of troops to the relief of the town, which in year, the month of November surprized the besiegers by night, and made themselves masters of their camp. About the same time,

Al Emir Salem, who had prefided over the Moslem conquests in Sicily twenty-two years, and had been a victorious prince, departed this life in his castle. A grievous famine likewise raged in Palerme and the neighbouring villages to such a degree, that parents found themselves obliged to eat their children, for want of other food. The Magrebians laid siege a third time to Calata Bellotta, notwithstanding the blow they had formerly received, and took it in the month of March, the present year e.

The Khalif Al

THE following year, being the 320th of the Hejra, commencing October 6th, 940, the Khalif-Al Radi died, the 16th Râdi dies. of the former Rabi, of a dropfy, at Baghdad. Some authors, however, relate, that immoderate contion was the cause of bis death. He reigned fix years, ten months, and ten days; and had completed the 30th year of his age a few months before his decease, according to Al Makin. As to his person, he had, if Abu'lfeda may be credited, a thin beard, and was of a swarthy complexion. With regard to his disposition, he was liberal, munificent, mild, well versed in the literature of the Arabs, eloquent, a good poet, and a great admirer of the conversation of learned men. He was the last of the Khalifs that wrote verses, at least of the Kbalifs that wrote such verses as were thought worthy of having a place affigned them in the Moslem annals. A specimen of his poetical performances has been preserved by Abu'lfeda and Al Makin. He was the last likewise of the Moslem emperors that officiated constantly in the mosque, that commanded the forces, that had the disposal of the publick money, and that in short exercised any kind of real authority over the Arabs. His successors, for a confiderable period at least, enjoyed little more than the bare title of Khalif, and of this they were even at last deprived by the Tartars. Ebn Moklah was his first Wazir, or Visir, and Mohammed Ebn Yakût his first chamberlain. latter of these was succeeded in his post by Daca, who had before ferved the Khalif in an inferior capacity. day of Al Râdi's reign was Thursday, and the last Saturday, according to Al Makin. Macarius was constituted patriarch of the Jacobites at Alexandria, in the year of the Hejra 323, about a year after this prince's accession, and sat in that see, if we will believe the above-mentioned author and Al Makrizi, about twenty years. His mother, who was one of his father Al Moktader's concubines, has been denominated Thalûm by Abulfeda; and the name of Talûm has been given her by Al Makin. lebrated physician, was one of his constant companions, and in the highest favour with him. Amongst the memorable events of this year we may likewise rank the death of Bakhtî/bûa Ebn Yahya, who had been physician to the Khalîf Al Moktader, and made no inconsiderable figure at that prince's court. Mati Ebn Yûnes, Mata Ebn Yûnes, or Matta (Matthew) Ebn Yûnas, surnamed the sage, and the philosopher, who, according to Mehammed Ebn Ishak Al Nadêm, his companion and intimate friend, was the greatest logician of the country and age wherein he lived, died about the time we are now upon, in the Khalifat of Al Râdi. He instructed many young men in the principles of logic, which he himself learned of Rufil and Benyamîn, two Jacobite monks; though he laid the first foundation of his knowledge in the school of one Mar Mari. He was a native of Dair Kani, or Dair Kana, and a strenuous affertor of the tenets of the Nestorian sect. Some of the eastern writers have represented Al Râdi as endued with many virtues highly becoming a great prince, several of which have been just touched upon; but, for a detail of these, the learned and curious reader must have recourse to those writers themfelves, the limits we have prescribed ourselves in this part of our work not permitting us to expatiate any farther upon them here f.
